so as to press against the sides. The sugar-cane, cut in pieces, is thrown into this, and the beam turned around by a pair of oxen, crushing the cane against the sides of the stone. In the lower part of the mill is a hole through which the juice escapes into a reservoir in the ground, from which it is dipped and taken to a caldron near, where it is boiled into a consistency, then ladled out, rolled into balls, and sent off to be sold. From these the manufacturers by further processes of refinement produce treacle and sugar. One of these mills at work, together with a rude native spinning wheel and a cotton gin, each of the latter rigged up for a few pice, would be curiosities at Prince Albert's great Exhibition.

Ten years ago this evening, I first set foot on the shores of India, near Fort William, at Calcutta. Ten years are a very considerable portion of man's short life, for only a few such steps bring one from the cradle to the grave. These, on the whole, have been happy years, though I have not seen so much fruit of labour as I wished.

"Here I raise my Ebenezer,
Hither by thy help I'm come,
And I hope by thy good pleasure,
Safely to arrive at home."

Incidents on Christmas day—A quail fight—Notices of Mow.

Dec. 25th.—A royal salute from the fort in Allahabad at sunrise this morning, proclaimed to all that this was counted, by many at least, a great day. We went before breakfast again to Ismáilgunge, three miles from the tents across the fields. After preaching some time to a large audience, two pandits assailed me with considerable spirit. One of them I succeeded in answering, so that he was left without an answer, and turned and went out of the crowd. The other held on more pertinaciously till I made a display of Sanscrit, which seemed to act like a charm upon him. The sound of this language, whether they understand it or not, has a marvellous effect upon the Hindús, especially the bráhmans. The discussion was long, and somewhat satisfactory. It is certainly much more pleasant to deal with the Hindús than with the Mohammedans. In answer to his repeated assertion, that a man by his own works may obtain pardon and purification, I asked "Can a swine (in their estimation, the most abominable of all animals) turn himself into a cow, (which they count the purest and most sacred of animals,) a bad fountain send forth pure water, or a snake eradicate its own poison?" "True, true, very good," cried the multitude, and reiterated the pundit. The discussion here ceased, and I preached the gospel without further interruption. When coming away, the pundit asked me to allow him to get me some breakfast, which I was obliged to decline, as my own was ready at the tent. We returned through extensive fields of indigo.

On the way a poor woman came throwing herself at our feet in distress. We learned that her husband had been dead about four months, that she had not a friend to help her, had a field of sugar-cane all ripe, but no mill to grind it, nor the means of getting one. Mr. Munnis and I gave her each a rupee, enough to buy a sugar-mill with its apparatus. We also reminded her, and all the people around, how very bad that religion is that makes no provision for the friendless widow. A quarter of a century ago she would probably have been burnt on the funeral pile of her husband. A wise and humane government has produced a different state of things.

We gave a sheep to the servants for a great dinner, in honour of what they call the "great day" of the English, but with characteristic gratitude they all said, "What is a sheep without bread?" So imperfect a present without flour for making chapátis, or bread cakes to eat with it, was scarce worthy of their acceptance.

Dec. 26th.—Occupied at my desk nearly all day correcting proof and preparing copy for the Hindi Bible. Went into Suram this morning and conversed with a few people about their spiritual interests.

Dec. 27th.—Went early this morning to Mow, a large town seven miles north of this. My appearance there seemed at first to take the people by surprise. I spent three days there seven years ago, engaged the greater part of each day in preaching and discussions. Some of my old acquaintances recognised me. On my first arrival, however, no one knew me, and I inquired for the police office. Hence I went to the revenue collector's office. At this place all the great men of the town were assembled, not like the Nawáb and "pillars of state" at Lucknow to witness an elephant fight, nor like the dons and grandees of Spain to see a bull fight, but to see—a quail fight! after which there was to be a bulbul or nightingale fight! The assembly within was sitting with closed doors, and when it was announced that a Sáhib was present, a door was opened, I invited in, and a chair brought. There they were, the chief men of the place, some of them learned in Mohammedan lore, sitting in silent conclave, several people also looking from windows above, to see the quails peck and pull each other. I remained seated scarcely a minute, rose and left the room, remarking that I had seen what they were doing. They all rose and followed me, and as they came out I complimented them on the very rational amusement in which they were engaged, so worthy of learned, intelligent men! Turning to the principal revenue officer, I began to take from him the census of the place. Houses 4000, i. e. allowing on an average four people to each house, 16,000 people, (probably an exaggerated account). Hindús and Mohammedans in about equal proportions; Mosques 40; Hindú temples 3; Hindús of all castes; bráhmans, 40 houses; Learned men, bráhmans, a few; Mohammedans, a large proportion; Mohammedans, all Suunnís. History of the place: at first occupied by the Hindús, but made a seat of Mohammedan influence after their conquest of the country. Revenue of the town, 6200 rupees. By the time this information was obtained, George brought the books, and I gave away a large number. The crowd was very large, and I addressed them a short time. They appeared exceedingly dissipated, given up to the indulgence of the basest passions. Seeing this, and knowing for what purpose they were assembled, I felt that to say much in those circumstances would be like giving that which is holy to the dogs, and casting pearls before swine. They were all however exceedingly civil, insisted that we should come and pitch the tent in their neighbourhood, and would on no account take a negative answer. By the aid of Mr. Munnis' horse and my own buggy I returned to the tents in time for breakfast, a little after ten, and have had the day for study as usual.

Kingdom of Oude—Mohammedans—Return to Allahabad.

Mow is a very short distance from the Oude border. We are only a few miles distant from it here in Suram, and frequently hear the guns firing in collecting the revenue of that wretched kingdom. Its people, at least the Hindús, the real men of the soil, sigh for the Company's rule. Here the people have peace and quiet, security of life and property; there, nothing of the kind. The people on both sides see and constantly remark the difference. The Company's territory, considering all things, is governed admirably well. The prevailing character of its government is that of justice and mildness, and the people in general seem happy and satisfied with it. The Mohammedans and Sikhs are the disaffected people, and probably will always remain so. To the former it is exceedingly mortifying to see the government of the country taken from their hands by a race so hateful to them as the Christians.

Dec. 28th.—Having spent a week very pleasantly at Suram, and preached in all its neighbourhood, we left that place this morning for Nawábgunge, where we now are, six miles west of the former place. Our march was through a well cultivated country. Just outside of this village we saw a Mohammedan funeral. The body in a box, was placed in the grave, and then as many as could surround the grave shovelled in the earth with their hands, repeating, "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is his apostle," in Arabic. From the police office I have obtained the census of the village: houses 350; population 1124. I went into the village this evening, but could not get many people together.

Dec. 29th. Sabbath.—This morning I went to a small village, Mindara, about four miles westward. The people are Mohammedans, and nearly all weavers. I succeeded in getting very few of them together. They were all ignorant, but not too ignorant to be bitter against the gospel. Preaching to the Mohammedans is in general very unsatisfactory. As a class they are thoroughly imbued with hatred to the gospel of the Son of God. I fear most of them are given over to judicial blindness. It really seems, from the horrid blasphemy they are constantly uttering, that a large proportion of them have committed the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, and are hardening themselves for the time when the Lord shall destroy them with the breath of his mouth. Their idea of a sensual paradise renders them extremely lewd. This evening Mr. Munnis and I went with George to Hauríhár, nearly a mile eastward, where we found a large bázár. A large audience listened very attentively to the truth. Several books have been given away here to readers. Our Sabbath services among ourselves have been as usual.

Dec. 30th. Allahabad.—By making two marches to-day we reached home this evening, hoping to close the year quietly, and be ready for work again on the 2d of January, when the college opens. Our pleasant journey is now finished, and with it this journal. To each of its readers the writer wishes a very Happy New Year.

CHINA: CANTON MISSION.

MEDICAL MISSIONS AT CANTON.

Extent of the Field.

The Rev. A. P. Happer, in a paper on the subject of medical missions at Canton, presents information of much interest concerning the people of that city, and their need of medical aid as a matter of Christian charity.

This city is situated just within the tropics, and is the largest, and I think the most healthy of the cities open to foreign intercourse and residence in China. Here, within a space seven miles in length, by four miles in breadth, is collected a population of one million of human beings, of all ranks, classes and conditions! as great a number as the population of the cities of New York and Philadelphia, at the present time. While there are a great many very wealthy inhabitants, and many more who live in ease and comfort, yet there are a great, a very great number, who live in poverty, crowded in narrow lanes and alleys, in filth and wretchedness. The most common diseases are affections of the eye, and skin, ulcers, dyspepsia, and fevers. There is no provision in the great city, so far as I know, by the natives, for gratuitous aid to the sick poor; and so far as I have heard, the native physicians never prescribe for the poor gratuitously. If you reckon up the number who receive attention at the numerous dispensaries and hospitals in New York and Philadelphia, and add to this amount the numbers that are gratuitously prescribed for, by the multitude of physicians who are in private practice in these cities, and still swell this aggregate number, by reckoning that a vastly greater number suffer here in consequence of the greater poverty and improper food, you will have some conception of the unrelieved sickness and suffering in this one city, which appeals to your humanity and skill for some relief from these ills, and surely it will not appeal in vain.

Method of proceeding at a Missionary Hospital.

The mode of conducting an hospital here is as follows: a house being rented, and medicines and instruments being ready, the physician fixes his days and hours for attending to patients, and notice is given out and circulated. The door of the hospital is opened early in the morning of the receiving days, and a man gives a numbered ticket to each one as he enters, and in ordinary cases they are attended to in the order of their arrival. At ten o'clock, religious service is held with those who have arrived, making known to them that there is "Balm in Gilead" for the more inveterate malady of sin, and that there is an Almighty "Physician" there. At eleven o'clock the physician commences his labours. Near to the general reception and preaching room, there is a prescribing room, where all kinds of medicines, in great quantities, have been prepared, and where several native assistants are waiting. A certain number of males and females, in the order of their arrival, are called in alternately into the prescribing room. They are each one examined in succession, and prescribed for, and given over to an assistant to give the medicine, or apply the remedy. By tact and dispatch in this way, Dr. Hobson is enabled to get through from two hundred and fifty to three hundred in a day, after five hours of hard work. Of course the nine-tenths of all the cases are very simple ones, and those cases that require operation or special treatment, are requested to remain in the house, or come back the next day.

During all this time, two or three native Christians are conversing with the patients in the general reception-room, explaining some point of Christian doctrine, or reading a Christian tract to a circle of hearers. And some days when the Doctor takes a little recess at one o'clock, a second public service is held. The diseases of nineteen-twentieths are not such as to incapacitate them from attending to the presentation of divine truth, and they wait most patiently for their turn to come. For in-door patients a place is given to spread their bed, which they provide for themselves, and some relative comes with them to wait on them, and cook their rice. This is a great security against any incorrect statements being made as to the treatment, as there is always a relative to see that the man was properly taken care of, and it saves the physician of a great deal of anxiety which he would have, if they were to be attended to by paid servants. Twenty-five thousand and ninety-seven persons were prescribed for at Dr. Hobson's hospital, during the year 1850. The whole expense of the Hospital, including medicines, rent of building, assistants, &c., not including the Doctor's salary, was under $1000, or in the proportion of forty cents for each patient attended to.

An important means of good—More hospitals needed.

As a matter of mere humanity, in what way could such an amount of human suffering have been relieved, at such a small expense? But when we consider that this good is only the means to an end, that end being to bring poor benighted men under the sound of the "blessed gospel of the glorious God," what an untold interest gathers round such an institution! It becomes really a sublime subject for contemplation. What finite mind can estimate the consequences attendant upon such a work continued for a series of years, or the amount of good which, by the blessing of God, may be accomplished by it? More persons heard the gospel last year, at this one place, than at four chapels in Canton, where there was no hospital. The circumstances under which the persons hear the gospel there, are more favourable for some truth being fixed in their minds, than anywhere else. Most of those who come into our chapels, come in out of curiosity, sit a little while, and then go out; very few sit throughout the whole service. They are coming and going all the time. Sometimes before the close of the service, the hearers are nearly all gone. At the hospital, they not only remain during all the service, but many are conversed with individually, or in clusters, in familiar explanation of the truth, and they have full opportunity of asking an explanation of any point of interest or what they do not comprehend. This use of medical aid, to bring people under the droppings of the sanctuary, is important and desirable at Canton especially, where the people hate foreigners and our holy religion, and have very little curiosity, which brings so many to hear the gospel at other places in China, to induce them to come.

Some might be disposed to question the expediency of using such considerations to bring men under the means of grace. But surely there is nothing in it contrary to the example and precepts of our blessed Saviour. It is impossible for those who are utterly ignorant of the gospel, to have a desire to hear it for its own sake. It is absolutely necessary that there should be some degree of spiritual enlightenment before it will be sought for as a good. In our own happy country, custom, the pleasant associations of childhood, the persuasion of friends, its respectability, the action of the religious feeling natural to man, all combine to lead many to the sanctuary who do not go from any love to the truth. And being thus lead there, the Spirit of God makes his own precious truth the means of their conversion. But here every thing is just the reverse. The vast majority of the crowds that thronged to our Saviour during his public ministry came not from a simple desire to hear his teachings, though "he taught as never man taught," but to be healed of their diseases, and to see the wonderful miracles which he performed. Our compassionate Redeemer did not reprove them for being actuated by these mere earthly feelings, He readily healed all their maladies; and embraced the opportunity to preach to them the glad news of the kingdom.

There are two hospitals in Canton supported by foreigners, and which are ably conducted. They are literally thronged, and many go away from one of them, at least, that cannot be attended to. And yet I do not suppose that one-half of the population have ever heard of them. There is plenty of room for several more.

These statements clearly show that medical missionary efforts are a means of doing great good at a city like Canton, and also that there is an open door and an urgent call for enlarged labours of this kind. Mr. Happer is anxious that an efficiently conducted hospital should be established in connection with the Mission of the Board at that city. We would lay the subject before the churches. We would ask for it the serious consideration of the pious physicians of our communion, and also of our ministers and members generally. Such a measure would involve an outlay of from $2000 to $4000 a year, according to the scale on which it should be projected. This amount would have to be added to the present income of the Board, in order to establish the hospital. But it would be money well employed, and no one can doubt the ability of our churches to furnish it. Neither can we doubt that medical men of a true missionary spirit, and of suitable professional qualifications could be obtained. There are many such men, we trust, in our communion; men, who are pillars in the church, but who could yet be spared for a post of such urgent need and great importance. Shall not this measure be carried into effect?

OBITUARY.

THE LATE MRS. SIMPSON.

Tidings of sorrow have crossed the ocean. This lady, with her husband, was suddenly called from the scene of her earthly labours to enter upon her reward. Many hearts have been filled with surprise and pain. By those who knew her well her early loss will be truly lamented, and yet none of us may say aught against the right or wisdom which has removed her.

She was the child of pious parents, her father an elder in the church of Fagg's Manor. Her early training was of a carefully religious character. The Bible and the Catechism were her earliest books of study. Thence she learned those great principles which laid the foundation for that maturity of Christian character to which she afterwards attained. Amiable and pleasant in private life, a regular and interested attendant on public worship, yet delaying to make a profession of her faith in Christ, she excited much anxiety for her spiritual welfare. During the fall and winter of 1843 she became deeply concerned on the subject of personal religion, and after much correspondence with her pastor (she being absent at school) as to what was evidence of Christian character, and the nature of "a good hope through grace," she was at last led to make an entire surrender to the Saviour, and consecrate herself wholly to his service. He was to her an all-sufficient and an all-gracious Saviour.

On the 12th of April, 1844, she was admitted to the church, and felt it a great privilege on the next day to unite with the people of God in celebrating the dying love of Christ. Thenceforward she aimed to be wholly a Christian. The Bible-class and the Sabbath-school were both highly prized by her; the one affording herself instruction, the other a field of usefulness to others.

About this time the subject of missions engaged her attention, and she felt a desire to labour among the heathen, and especially in Africa. She lost much of her relish for ordinary duties and labours, and though always doing cheerfully and industriously what was necessary, often said in playfulness, "I had rather be teaching the Negroes in Africa."

Her thirst for knowledge was insatiable, and to meet its demand as far as possible she laboured for the most enlarged education within her reach, and sought such works from her pastor's library, and other sources, as would extend her mental vision, enrich her intellectual stores, and elevate or refine her taste. Teaching was with her a very favourite employment. Several of our public schools enjoyed her labours, and both pupils and parents highly appreciated her instructions: and at the time she finally consented to become the wife of Mr. Simpson and share his labours and trials as a missionary in Africa, she was one of the teachers in the Oakland Female Institute at Norristown.

When the proposal was made to her to go to Africa, she felt it to be an opening in the providence of God to gratify a long-cherished desire, and took the subject into very serious and prayerful consideration. She did not arrive at a final conclusion without many anxieties, misgivings and fears. Her wide circle of friends were nearly all opposed to her going; regarding missions to Africa by white people as a forlorn hope. Her parents too withheld a consent, without which she felt that she could not go. In her estimation filial duty required obedience even in this matter. When, however, she obtained what she desired in this respect, she cheerfully consented to go, and immediately began to prepare for her departure.

She went not rashly. She counted the cost, and felt that if the Lord should call for her death in that field she was willing to meet it. The struggle between duty and affection was severe and constant; and yet there was no disposition to withdraw the pledge she had given to labour for the Saviour in Africa. She looked forward to the time of their embarkation with a calmness which astonished all who knew her.

The parting scene was mingled with tears and smiles, but borne by her with a grace and sweetness of character, which greatly alleviated the sorrow felt by her family and friends in bidding her adieu.

Her own feelings are well expressed in a letter received on the eve of her sailing, being sent back by the pilot. Speaking of the missionary meeting in Dr. Phillips's church she says, "They sung the hymn in which is 'Yet with determined courage go,'" and then adds, "These lines have been running in my head all morning, and I heard Mrs. L. hum them once or twice. O, must I see you no more! Have I parted from you all for ever on earth? I cannot bear the thought. But I shall meet you often at the throne of grace. I feel that you will pray for me. Pray that I may not be suffered to bring reproach on this blessed cause. And yet I fear you will forget me. But you won't forget our mission. Though we all be swallowed in the deep, don't forget to pray for Africa. I love you all more than ever: each one comes up to mind separately; and my heart bleeds to leave you. But I go willingly; I trust the love of Christ; —the boat is leaving."—While on her voyage she wrote to her mother, "I could be quite happy sometimes, could I feel certain you are. I wish, mother, you had told me you felt very willing to have me come. You are satisfied now, doubtless. I wish you could feel it a privilege to be thus permitted to give a daughter to so glorious a work. Then, although I should be a curse to this mission band, and to the Africans, you should receive your reward."

With these views and feelings she left her home, (a dear and pleasant one,) and native land, to labour for the benighted heathen. Her filial and social affections never changed; all her letters abound with tender and touching expressions, which show that her heart yet yearned after her friends, but was still fixed in its devotion to the work in which she was engaged. On her voyage she suffered much with sea-sickness, but seemed to think it was but a light evil in comparison with the great object to be gained through its endurance. Her first impressions of Africa were of the most favourable character. From Monrovia, she wrote, December 31st, 1849, "On the 14th of December we reached Sierra Leone, after a passage of 41 days from New York. We were kindly received and made welcome to Africa's beautiful shores by the Wesleyan and Episcopalian missionaries of Freetown.—Freetown is a very pretty place, beautiful indeed. We were all much better pleased with our adopted country than our fondest wishes had dared to anticipate." Then, after speaking of her great gratification in Monrovia, she adds, "The Sunday-school bell is heard about 10 A. M. O! imagine how this sound thrilled our hearts—is not Africa different from what you have supposed concerning it. I do hope we may live to see a church among the natives to whom we go. I feel very much like living in this delightful country;"—and as though this feeling would certainly continue she adds, "Think of us as quite comfortably situated, as I dare say we shall be, at Gaboon, when this reaches you."—This feeling did continue, and after having been in Africa for six months she writes to her mother,—"But happiness was not left on my native shores. All wanting to complete it to me here, is the assurance, dear mother, that you are now perfectly willing to have me in Africa. I do indeed enjoy myself here very much. The climate and country are pleasant to me. The lines have fallen to me in pleasant places, yea I have a goodly heritage." And lest the death of Mrs. Mackey should have an unfavourable effect upon the minds of those at home, she wrote, "But I must tell you she died of no African disease. Do not charge her death upon the climate." In nearly all her letters she spoke of her pleasant home, her island home. And in the very last received from her she says, after speaking somewhat in detail of her trials and difficulties there, "Still I don't regret my coming, and hope no one will, who comes here on my letters."

She felt it a privilege to be a missionary's wife, and was anxious that her friends should pray much for her—that she might be truly a help-meet to her husband in his great and important duties. To her father she wrote, "To you, dear father, it must appear but a very little while since I chattered upon your knee;—now I am a woman and a wife, a privileged person, too, I think myself, in being called to the heathen. I am sure you constantly remember me in your approaches to a throne of grace. Pray that grace may be given me for the discharge of my high duties as a missionary's wife."

Though she felt the loss of her home friends very deeply, yet her greatest trial was the want of Christian society, and of regular Christian privileges, Sabbath-school, the Bible class, the church service, &c. In speaking on this subject, she says, in reference to the Bible class of her own church, "I do hope my young friends will appreciate so great a privilege."—Her mind was interested in every thing which concerned the prosperity of the Redeemer's cause, and she laboured to prepare herself for usefulness in her chosen field. In addition to the study of the native languages she had commenced the Hebrew, with Mr. Simpson. She was always cheerful, and willing to deny herself to make others comfortable and happy.

Her faith and hope were of a high order. With implicit and child-like confidence she rested upon the word and promise of her Saviour. Death and eternity seemed to be familiar subjects to her mind. In writing of their death, Mr. Bushnell says, "I have never known persons who seemed to enjoy a stronger hope and assurance of faith. They often expressed a willingness and readiness to depart and be with Christ. Your daughter never regretted having come to Africa."

Though she suffered much by repeated attacks of purpura, and was thought by friends and herself to be dying at one time, and though she was told by an experienced and skilful physician that she could not live in that climate, and an early removal advised, yet she determined to try the experiment for a time longer, feeling deeply anxious to do something for Africa.

Her last letter to her mother was full of considerations tending to comfort and strengthen her, and as it were, prepare her for the trial awaiting her in the sudden loss of her children in Africa. "I trust, dear mother, you do not feel unduly anxious about us. Earth is pleasant, O! how pleasant; still we cannot enjoy the happiness here, which in heavenly mansions awaits those who love God. We know this, although we cannot understand it. Then why are we loth to make so blessed an exchange, or to have our beloved ones make it? You must not be anxious for my safety. We have your God in Africa. His care is as constant here as in Pennsylvania. The death of Christ is as meritorious here, and the Holy Spirit's influence as free and as powerful. The Christian's hope as firm, and I can humbly say, 'I know that my Redeemer liveth.' When in a fever lately, I felt it an unspeakable comfort to know that I had not my peace now to make with God. I hope we shall all meet as a family in heaven. Pray for us, but don't be anxious."

Early in April following, she was asleep with her husband in her ocean grave! How sad, how mysterious such an event! Yet the Lord has done it. It was in her heart to do something for Africa, but the Master had a short work for her. Being dead, she yet speaks, and the Lord may make her death even more effective than her life. We have no right to murmur, but we may mourn the loss we have sustained in the death of two such persons. They are garnered amid the coral treasures of the ocean, and when the resurrection morn shall come, they will rise to witness the results even of their labours, on their late pleasant but now desolate Island home. May the Lord sanctify this deep affliction to the Church, and raise up many other sons and daughters to cheer and encourage the lone watchman left upon that outpost of Zion. A. H.

INFIDELITY IN CONNECTION WITH THE GERMAN POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

For years past it has been our fixed impression that there was no class of population coming to these shores whose influence would be more widely felt, and for whose spiritual interests it was more important to provide, than the Germans. As a people they are hardy, industrious, and frugal; most of them know how to think, and in their rebound from the trammels of Popery, have run into the wildest speculations and most unbridled infidelity. They know, too, the value of the press, and are using it with no little effect in scattering their pernicious sentiments, and they are increasing at an annual average of one hundred thousand. Already in some of our most important cities there are whole streets where no other language than the German is heard in conversation, or seen on the sign boards and placards; where even the Americans issue their advertisements in both English and German. We doubt not that the Church generally throughout the country has been too much asleep as to the importance of evangelizing and sanctifying this important and rapidly increasing element of our population. Our own Church, we apprehend, has been specially remiss in not having devoted more of her energies and means for their benefit. With the following well expressed sentiments of the Buffalo Christian Advocate, we fully concur.

"The German population of this country," says that journal, "is immense, and if the following views are correct, they present a most startling spectacle for the consideration of the philanthropist and the Christian. Nothing threatens the fundamental principles of this country's liberty more than the present political leaders of the German population, full of hatred to the religion of Christ. They are not ashamed of attacking and ridiculing the Bible openly in two hundred, or more, German newspapers all over the land. They are busily engaged in erecting in every large city, infidel societies. They are printing tracts and Sunday papers, in which they ridicule the Bible as a book void of common sense, and spread them with great zeal amongst the people in their places of amusement, and sometimes they even throw whole bundles inside the churches for religious people to read. They lately translated Tom Paine's works, and are selling them rapidly in almost every German bookstore. They have regular meetings in different parts of St. Louis, and other cities on every Sabbath, and sometimes on week-day evenings, which are crowded with hearers, in which they pour out invectives against Sunday laws, temperance laws, prayers in Legislature or Congress, and against this priest-ridden and religion-enslaved country, as they call it. Their aim is to persuade the people that all slavery comes from the Bible, and that Protestant ministers are no better than Jesuits, because, say they, the former prepare the people for the latter; and too easily do the German emigrants believe that kind of doctrine. They have come from a country where they witness the greatest immorality among the clergy; they are therefore predisposed to believe their leaders here, and that so much the easier when they find that they are the very men with whose names they got familiar in Germany, and who were leaders in the great battle against kings and despotism; while they found, at the same time, the clergy of the State Church on the side of the kings. Most of the present political German leaders are lately from Germany—some of them were the men who, by their influence, helped to shake Europe to its centre, men of talents and education—they know well that they never can gain political influence, offices and honours here, unless they first revolutionize the masses of the Germans, and create a powerful party of their own, with which they hope to hold the balance of power between the parties, by the votes of the Germans, and ride into office. Here is the secret of their zeal, for infidelity alone has not life and power enough for a work like this. This German infidel Propaganda, which has its branches in every city of this Union where Germans are, is the more dangerous, when we consider the yearly increase of 100,000 emigrants from Germany, who are, or will be, either converted to God, or to rank with infidelity; for their nominal religion, which the majority of them bring from Germany, will not stand the shock; for as soon as they come here, most of them are put, through different agencies, under the influence of the infidel societies. The danger is so much greater when we think that the English people of the land have no, or very little knowledge of the doings of this infidel propaganda, and consequently know nothing of the danger; and if they did, they cannot reach the evil on account of the difference in the language."

THE BOOKSELLER WHO BURNED HIS LICENTIOUS BOOKS.

We clip the following from an exchange paper, in whose columns it appeared under the caption "Noble Act." The merchant who sacrificed his books rather than send them abroad to do evil, certainly did right; but we do not know that he is deserving of special commendation for doing what was so palpably his duty. Our only wonder has been that any who call themselves Christians can allow themselves to aid in disseminating the licentious trash with which the press is flooding and corrupting the country, much less that they could consent to manufacture it and send it out themselves, thus making merchandize of men's souls for gain. That some publishers, professedly followers of Christ, will have a fearful reckoning, when they come to give an account of their stewardship at the last day, we feel just as certain as we do that there will be a judgment day at all. That men can spend their time on earth in scattering broadcast and so cheap that all can buy, that which wherever it goes is poisoning and polluting the imagination, inflaming the passions, and opening up fountains of sin and sorrow for all, and especially for the young, and then expect to receive from the Master the plaudit "Well done good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things," is simply to expect the final Judge to make that great reckoning day the occasion of the most awful irony. The merchant, of whom mention is made in the following paragraphs, threw his bad books into the fire. Would that all his fellow-craftsmen who are in possession of similar wares would go and do likewise! Better burn the books than send souls to that "fire which is not quenched."

"A few years since, one of the book merchants of this city went to New York for the purpose of replenishing his stock. He purchased a large quantity, some at auction, and others at private sale. Among the former were some with which he was unacquainted. It was discovered by a friend, after the purchaser had returned home, and while he was placing the books upon the shelves, that one of them was of an immoral tendency. When it was suggested to the merchant, he observed, "I purchased it at auction, and know nothing of its character." But what should he do? He might have said, "If I do not sell these books, others will, and therefore nothing will be gained, nor any evil to the community at large, be prevented. Besides, I cannot afford to lose the money which I paid for them."

But having examined the suspected thing, and being convinced that its influence would be evil, especially to the rising generation, he promptly cast the whole lot into the fire. Here was an exhibition of principle worthy of imitation. The evil resulting from pernicious books is second to none in the land. It begins with unprincipled, money-loving publishers; and it is extended far and wide by a multitude of salesmen. The boy with his basket, the pedler with his cart, and the stationer at his counter, like veins and arteries in the human body, are conveying life or death to the teeming millions of our race. Would that our writers, our publishers, and our venders of books, felt their responsibility! What a reformation in morals might they effect! how safe would be our youth, and pure the intercourse of society! It is a subject of devout gratitude that there are some such, we hope many. But is there not room for an increase? Who will search their shelves and bring forth pernicious books, and "burn them before all men?"

OUR PROSPECTS.

We are happy to state that since the commencement of our fiscal year, the Head of the Church has been pleased to continue the constantly increasing prosperity which has attended this Board. The donations from the churches, and the amount of our circulation are considerably ahead of what they were at a corresponding period of last year. The sales for the month just closed exceed those of every other month since the Board has been in existence.

THE PICTORIAL FIRST BOOK AND THE ALMANAC.

From all quarters the Pictorial First Book and the Almanac are receiving commendations. Artistically they are far in advance of any previous issues of the Board. An edition of five thousand of the First Book has been exhausted in the few weeks which have elapsed since its appearance. It will have an immense circulation. The Almanac will in its place give equal satisfaction. It should be ordered at once by those who wish to circulate it.

THE HAPPIEST SUMMER.

Not a few who have spent the last summer in travelling and fashionable dissipation, may perhaps endeavour to persuade themselves that it was the happiest summer of their lives. Others may be willing to admit, that however attractive and agreeable at the time were the gay and frivolous scenes through which they passed, yet in the retrospect, they seem but vanity and vexation of spirit. We subjoin the testimony of an humble follower of Christ who was spending the sultry months—not in the midst of folly and fashion, but in the self-denying work of going from house to house as a colporteur—and who says that thus employed he found the last the happiest summer of his life.

Success in this great work, must depend in some measure upon the qualifications, energy, &c., of the labourer. I have felt the want of experience at times, yet have striven to avoid imprudence, and not err on the side of rashness. Christians of other than Presbyterian denominations I have treated with courtesy, avoiding offensive controversy, but endeavouring to satisfy the candid inquirer after truth. My intercourse with other denominations, generally has been pleasant: the practical books of the Board have been approved, and the blessing of God invoked upon me, and the cause by them. I seldom leave a Presbyterian family without leaving one or more volumes. I have made it a matter of special effort to sell to the young men of Presbyterian families, and have met with success in the greater number of efforts. One of the most important results of colporteur labours doubtless will be found in the good resulting from supplying the "children of the Church, with the truly excellent doctrinal and other reading furnished by the Board. If the people of God felt more deeply the need of the outpouring of the Spirit, and sought it of Him who hath said, "Ask, and ye shall receive," how great a blessing might result from the sowing of the precious seed!

Our members generally have received me as a friend, and manifest an interest in the work. An efficient colportage will best awaken them. My intercourse with the ministers has been of the most pleasant kind. From the pulpit, and in private, they have strongly commended the cause in its various aspects, and have been my helpers. These churches are not strong ones, being able to give only a moderate support to their pastors, and the past quarter is, perhaps, the most unfavourable season for selling, being a scarce time with farmers. I think the interest in your operations on the increase here.

I have granted volumes where they appeared necessary. In one instance the person was a young married lady, ill of consumption, who was poor and was taken in by a relative. She had very incorrect views of the way of salvation, and depended upon her baptism and her moral deportment. She admired the memoir of Mrs. Andrew, and I thought it well adapted to her case. She has since died. I have not learned whether her views underwent a change. I strove earnestly to convince her of the inefficiency of all else but the Rock of Ages, as a foundation. A second case was in a large family where the parents were Lutherans and read German, (the father English also;) were in very low circumstances and had no religious books in English for their children. I gave them "Baxter's Call." In some cases, after reasoning with sceptics until feelings of anger were apparent, I gave them Scott's tract on the "Inspiration of the Scriptures." Lately, I have met with the boldest sceptics that I have seen. In one instance I entered a pottery where only a lad of about sixteen was at work. I conversed with him a few minutes, and sold him the little volume entitled "Salvation;" and then went into the yard where a number of hands were, and met with bitter opposition, and heard the boldest profanity. I left rejoicing that I had found that interesting youth alone, and raising my heart to Him who is able to save him from the soul-destroying influences to which he is exposed. How much the spirit of a McCheyne or a Page is requisite to make a faithful colporteur! I have to lament my coldness and inefficiency, to humble myself before God on account of my dulness. Yet I hope that of the amount of seed scattered, some may fall in ground prepared of God, where the genial influences of the Holy Spirit shall cause it to take deep root, and spring up and bring forth much fruit. I look upon the past summer as the happiest of my life, and hope that if life and health are continued to me, they may be devoted to a more earnest and energetic prosecution of this truly excellent work.

Viewing the colportage system as the instrumentality, which, with the Divine blessing, will, next to the ministry, be most effective in feeding the flame of piety in our church, and in many out of her pale, with the pure oil of sound knowledge, I most earnestly desire that it may be greatly extended and directed and blessed by the great Head of the Church, and receive special tokens of his favour, and that the spirit of wisdom from his presence may be upon the members of the Board, and all those connected with them and under their control.

NOTES FROM A COLPORTEUR'S LABOURS.

"My tour in ———," writes a colporteur in the West, "has been truly pleasant—the most gratifying portion of time spent in the service of the Board. The active co-operation of the Rev. ——— and of the members of his church has made an impression on my heart which I shall not soon forget. I was there during their communion season and attended the series of meetings, and thus became acquainted with many of the people before visiting them at their homes.

I visited a colliery where some twelve families reside, who were as destitute as persons in that situation usually are. On going into a house the females and children of two or three other families would gather in and listen attentively while I read some stirring portion of a tract or book, and then addressed them as plainly and kindly as I could. I met with two pious females to whom I gave a suitable book and the Sabbath Documents to circulate amongst the community. This service they cheerfully undertook, and expressed a hope that something would come in their way that would stop Sabbath desecration. So earnest were the children in pursuit of the Catechism that they followed me from place to place as they received pennies from their fathers; and I kept my little box containing them beside my plate at dinner, and they came and laid down their pennies and carried away their treasures. At noon I went to the stable where eight or ten of the men were resting, and after a few minutes' conversation in reference to their pursuit and explaining my object, I read to them an extract from the little work entitled 'Salvation,' and made such remarks as I thought necessary and suitable to their condition, and explained the 'Swearer's Prayer' to them, as I had heard an oath just as I entered their company. I was received with kindness and listened to with attention, while emotion was manifest in the countenances of some as I read. I granted a few tracts, with an injunction to circulate them amongst their associates, after reading them themselves. To an old lady of about sixty to seventy years, I granted a copy of the 'Daily Bread.' The old lady has long been a member of the Presbyterian Church.

I design making temporary arrangements for supplying Mr. ———'s people, and will avail myself of such an opportunity as Providence may present to me. I could not feel satisfied in any other calling, unless clearly convinced that duty called me away from my present one. But I know of none else where a qualified layman can do so much for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom."

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS AND TRACTS.

The Works of Creation Illustrated. From the English edition. 16mo, square, 264 pages.

With the exception of the Pictorial First Book, this is decidedly the most elegant of the juvenile publications of the Board. As to the grade of its matter, however, it is adapted to minds greatly in advance of the little folks who were in view, when the "First Book" was making. The author treats in a dignified, yet familiar style, of the epoch of creation, the work of the six days, imparting information in regard to the heavenly bodies, and their movements, and embracing also a considerable range of natural history, all the works of creation being viewed in their connections as showing forth the wisdom, goodness, and glory of their great Artificer. The young people who read these pages will find something to instruct and treasure up in their memories; and even older ones who may look into them will find many things worth thinking about. The work is elegantly illustrated, and will make a beautiful present for the winter holidays, or indeed for any other season.

It is I, or the Voice of Jesus in the Storm. By Newman Hall, B.A. 24mo. 92 pages.

Come to Jesus, by the same author, 103 pages.

We have already spoken of these little works as published in tract form by the Board. They are worthy of a more permanent form, and are now brought out as neat little volumes. Those who find comfort and edification in practical, evangelical exhibitions of scriptural truth, will find something to please them here. All who love Christ will love such truths as these pages contain.

TRACTS.

Thoughts for Spare Moments. Under this title we have a package or series of two-page practical tracts such as "I'm too Busy," "This Moment," "Now!" "And Then?" together with others of the same sort, making in all twenty-four. They are well adapted to speak a word in season to careless souls.

A Friendly Letter to a Young Man. By W. S. Plumer, D. D. 16 pages. This letter points out in the author's usual style the dangers to which young men are exposed, and gives very admirable advice as to the means of escaping the snares of the destroyer, and of living an honourable and useful life. It deserves a wide circulation among the important class for whose welfare it is designed.

The New Jerusalem; or the Soul's Breathing after his Heavenly Country. Eight pages 12mo. By the Rev. David Dickson, of Scotland. The multitudes of admirers of the beautiful lines beginning

"O mother dear, Jerusalem,
When shall I come to thee?"

will be delighted to find them here put into tract form. The anecdote appended is very characteristic of the effects of Scotch early training.

On the 21st of August, in Chester, Illinois, the Rev. John Kennedy, in the 66th year of his age. He was pastor of the Presbyterian church at Chester at the time of his death.

On the 17th of September, at Morristown, New Jersey, the Rev. William A. McDowell, D. D., aged 63 years. He was an eminently good and useful minister of Christ, and particularly known as the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Missions for many years.

On the 5th of September, at his residence at Oakland College, Mississippi, by the hand of violence, the Rev. J. Chamberlain, D. D., President of the College, in the 55th year of his age.

On the 2d of September, the Rev. Robert F. Breese, pastor of the Rochester Presbyterian church, near Princeville, Illinois.

On the 25th of September, in Carrol Township, Washington, county, Pennsylvania, the Rev. Samuel Ralston, D. D., aged 96 years.

On the of September, the Rev. Hugh Shaw, of Tennessee.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. Dr. McLaren has been appointed Agent for the Board of Domestic Missions, in the district around Pittsburgh, in the place of the Rev. Dr. Smith, who recently resigned, to take charge of the churches of Round Hill and Elizabeth. Dr. McLaren will enter upon the duties of his agency immediately. The post-office of Dr. McLaren is now Allegheny City, Pennsylvania.

Varieties.

Presbyterianism.—The New School Presbyterian Church in the United States numbers 21 synods, 104 Presbyteries, 1489 ministers, 140 licentiates, 1579 churches, and 140,060 communicants. The increase for the last year is reported at 9902. The Old School Presbyterian Church numbers 23 synods, 134 presbyteries, 2027 ministers, 2665 churches, and 210,306 communicants. The number of additions for the past year have been 18,744.

Newspapers in California.—There are twenty-one newspapers published in California—one religious, eight political, and twelve neutral, or nominally such.

Union Theological Seminary.—The Union Theological Seminary in New York has received a larger accession of students than ever before entered in one year. The lawsuit touching the bequest of the late Mr. Roosevelt has been decided in favour of the Seminary, and most of the legacy (about $60,000) has been paid into its treasury.

Hollanders.—A Western paper states that a congregation of 250 Hollanders exists at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and a church of 75 members, most of whom have been converted since their residence there. They are now expecting the arrival of a Netherlands minister who can preach in both English and Dutch.

Disappointed Emigrants.—The ship Constitution, which recently sailed from New York for Liverpool, is said to have taken out two hundred and twenty-nine Irish emigrants, who were not satisfied with America, and desirous to return to their own country.

A Pagan Temple in the United States.—A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser writes, that a temple for pagan worship had been opened at San Francisco, by the Chinese. This is the first idol temple, we believe, that has been erected in this country, nor can we discover any thing alarming about it.

Missionary Items.—Foreign missionaries in all parts of the world, 2945; assistants, as lay preachers, &c., 11,807; members in the mission churches, 333,604; hearers, 1,415,774; institution for instruction of native ministry, 31; printing establishments, 40; scholars in day and boarding-schools, 224,989; income of all evangelical societies, in dollars, $3,201,419.

Lotteries.—The first lottery mentioned in English history, began drawing at the western door of St. Paul's Cathedral, January 11, 1569, and continued, day and night, until May 6, following. Its profits were for repairing the fortifications on the coast of England, and the prizes were pieces of plate.

Andover Theological Seminary.—Professor Calvin E. Stowe, recently of Lane Theological Seminary, is to conduct the exercises of the Junior Class at Andover during the next term, both in Greek and Hebrew; Professor Edwards having leave of absence for the winter.

Theological Education in England.—It is a remarkable fact, that the English Church with all her famed endowments for university education, has no special provision for the theological and professional training of her ministers. She has an army of 15,000 priests, to whom millions of people look for instruction. These are more or less trained in matters of secular education. But if any of them have a theological furniture, they have got it otherwheres, than in any theological institutions of the Church. This fact is alleged as one cause of so frequent defections of episcopal ministers to Romanism.

Longevity.—In the town of Lunenburg, Massachusetts, there are forty-eight persons who were living when the Declaration of Independence was made, several of whom are over ninety years of age. The population of the town is about 1300.

Dyspesia.—Dr. Jenner, of London, publishes in the Medical Times, the discovery of a new and apparently efficacious remedy for some of the worst forms of indigestion. He uses the sulphite (not sulphate) of soda.

The Highest Mountain.—The highest mountain peak in the United States, east of the Rocky Mountains, is the Black Mountain in Yancy county, North Carolina, which is 6476 feet high, exceeding in elevation the White Mountains in New Hampshire, hitherto regarded as the highest land in the United States.

Success of Missions in India.—The average of additions to the Baptist churches in India, compared with those of the Baptist churches in England, is eight to three.

Rapid Growth.—The recent "village" of Williamsburg, opposite New York, has grown so rapidly that its population is now 35,000, and it is about to become a "city."

Mrs. Dr. Judson and children have arrived in Boston by the Canada, with health much improved by their voyage from India.

Parks.—About twenty parks, or open squares in the city of New York, cover 170 acres of ground; estimated value, $8,386,000. Money well invested too. Some of the London parks are 400 or 500 acres in extent. Pity that our Western cities are growing up with no parks at all.

Papist Missions.—Missionaries for Oregon and California, of the Roman Catholic persuasion, were, at the last dates, to set out from Havre, France.

Bequests.—Fifty thousand dollars worth of property has been bequeathed to the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Orphan Asylum, by the late Dr. Thomas Hartford. He also left property to the poor of Canton, Ohio, worth ten thousand dollars.

Churches in New Orleans.—There are at present in New Orleans thirty-eight places of worship, as follows: twelve are Roman Catholics, seven Episcopal, five Methodist, six Presbyterian, two Baptist, three Lutheran, and three are synagogues.

SUGGESTIONS ABOUT THE RECORD.

In bringing the Second Volume of the Home and Foreign Record to a conclusion, we respectfully call the attention of the Church to our position and prospects. The Record was established by the General Assembly, and is the only organ authorized to disseminate information on the four great divisions of the Church's operations—it is, emphatically, the paper of the Church.

To make the Record what it ought to be, a more general interest ought to be awakened in its behalf, and we would suggest a few thoughts for consideration by our brethren in the ministry and in the church membership.

Our missionaries in India, China, Africa, and among the aborigines of our own country, contribute regularly to the Record, and through its columns make us acquainted with the manners, customs, history and physical peculiarities of the countries in which they labour, and with the trials and anxieties of missionary life; and no one claiming ordinary intelligence ought to be ignorant of these things.

In the Domestic field we have as regular contributors the hundreds of missionaries scattered all over the land, telling us of the waste places whither they have gone, of the progress of their seed-sowing, and of the ingatherings of their harvest seasons. Ought our people not to know what is going on upon their own soil? Are not portions of this home-field almost as luxuriant with noxious vices as the jungles of India, or the wastes of Africa? Should we not be enlightened about Oregon, California, New Mexico, Texas, Utah, Minesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, and even Arkansas, Missouri, Mississippi, and many regions in the older settled States? Are there not among our teeming population, heresies and errors well nigh as strange and dangerous as Mohammedanism or Hinduism? Everywhere there is destitution of the word of life; and the attention of the Church should especially be called to those cities which are every year springing up in the desert. God is now in a degree never before witnessed, delivering up the kingdom of nature to the dominion of mankind; and it is demanded of the Church that she should put forth all her energies, that all should be laid at the feet of the King of Righteousness.

In the Department of Education there are most important themes in reference to which information and instruction is required. The necessity of raising up an enlightened and efficient ministry; the duties and privileges of God's people in this regard; the manner of teaching, the subjects taught, the character and duties of the teacher and his pupils; the wants of the Church, and of particular regions of country, and the best means of supplying them, are the subjects discussed in this important department.

The Board of Publication here also let the Church know what it is doing in the matter of providing and circulating a sound and sanctified literature, and the interesting incidents from colporteur life, the various and happy results attending the reading of books and tracts, together with notices of the works which the Board is constantly adding to its catalogue, are well adapted to attract attention and excite an interest in this invaluable branch of the Church's labours.

In the Miscellaneous Department we are bound to no class of subjects, and are glad to collect all the stray rays of thought that might otherwise pass into oblivion. In some respects, this portion of the Record offers advantages unequalled by any other Presbyterian publication; for though our circulation is much smaller than it ought to be, it is yet larger than any other, and is the only periodical which reaches all the ministers of our Churches.

We have already had aid from able pens, but we would feel greatly obliged if brethren would occasionally send us a very short, racy article.

We are happy to learn by letters received from various sections of the Church, that the Record is, in some measure, accomplishing the end for which it was intended. Pastors have written us that they "cannot do without it" in their churches. A most worthy elder, not long since, said, in our hearing, that if members of the churches were not interested in the Record, it was because they did not read it. Will not Pastors and Elders, especially, endeavour to enlarge our circulation for the coming year? Will they not make at least this additional effort to give information to the people as to what their own Church is doing, and proposes to do, for the wants of the world, and for the glory of her ascended Lord?

THEIR INWARD THOUGHT.

Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever—their dwelling places to all generations. The word translated "inward thought," relates to that which is secret or hid in the heart, as distinguished from those sentiments that gain utterance in words.

The devotee of riches, power, or pleasure, he who makes not God and heaven but this world his end, does not expect to die. He sees that others die. Funeral processions, and the signs of recent bereavement, meet him in every street; but his inward thought is, that there are special reasons for these sad events in the case of others, which will not apply to him. He will keep out of harm's way—will not expose himself to sudden changes—will live temperately, and with a good constitution, and "much goods laid up for many days," his "inward thought" is, take thine ease, enjoy life, eat, drink, and be merry. Such instances of folly are not rare, but of every day occurrence.

"All men think all men mortal but themselves,
Themselves, when some alarming shock of fate
Strikes through their wounded hearts the sudden dread.
But their hearts wounded like the wounded air
Soon close. Where passed the shaft no trace is found.
As from the wing no scar the sky retains,
The parted wave no furrow from the keel,
So dies in human hearts the thoughts of death."

No wonder then, that death takes most men by surprise—startles them like a shriek at midnight in their chambers—rings in their ears like the knell of departed joys, or like the voice of God saying, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee." Then where will be health and riches, where honours and pleasures? Shall these be taken also to the dust, and to eternity?

Will not you, reader, learn wisdom from the mistakes and follies of others? Are you pointed to the death-bed of perished friends and reminded of their warning admonitions, and shall God say to you, "Thou hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this." Ah! me, like sheep to the grave we are allured. "Death is our gloomy shepherd." In flocks, like sheep, we follow; when one breaks through the gap in the hedge, and plunges over the precipice, the rest follow and perish. No folly is too great not to have its imitators; and this of all follies the greatest, is imitated, alas! by what numbers! Truly men are gregarious in evil. In the thronged way to ruin they herd together. "Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever. This their way is their folly, yet their posterity approve their sayings."

THE SPIRITUAL WINGS BURDENED.

One of the influences most unfriendly to our enjoyment and profit in prayer, and to our spiritual and heavenly aspirations, is the inordinate love and too eager pursuit of this world. That is a very striking and beautiful illustration of the habit and benefit of dependence on God, and of the means of obtaining strength and possessing elevated joy, which is uttered by the prophet, (Isaiah xl. 31.) "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint." But, how can this divine flight be made by those who, instead of unfettering their feet from earth, actually stoop down, gather up the base dirt beneath them, spread it thick upon their wings, and then attempt to fly? How shall they pursue this heavenly race, who load themselves with this vile burden till they bend beneath it? How can they win the prize set before us, unless they lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us?

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.
Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.
Treasurer—Mr. Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
J. M. Rutherford, Louisville, Ky.
Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.
William Rankin, Jr. Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO THE MEMORY OF THE REV. WILLIAM A. McDOWELL, D.D., LATE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Mission Rooms, Philada., Nov. 10th, 1851.

"The Committee appointed to prepare a suitable minute in relation to the decease of their late Corresponding Secretary, the Rev. Wm. A. McDowell, D.D., report the following:

That the Rev. W. A. McDowell, D.D., served this Board from 1833, when he was elected to his office, till 1850, when, owing to increasing infirmities, he was constrained to resign his office—a period of nearly 17 years.

By the providence and grace of the Great Head of the Church, he was richly endowed with the requisite qualifications for his honourable office and laborious work. His judgment was excellent, his talents ample, his devotion to his work unwavering, and his diligence untiring. His addresses before ecclesiastical bodies in favour of the cause he advocated, were powerful; and it was surprising with what skill and propriety, notwithstanding his deafness, he could not only anticipate objections that might be offered, but pertinently answer objections actually made. He was found at his labours in the office, some days, sixteen hours of the twenty-four. His administration was manifestly blest by his Master. His work went on prospering from year to year, so that, when he resigned, the funds of the Board had increased from $25,000 to $80,000, and the Missionary appointments from 269 to 570. In view of these facts,

1. Resolved, That this Board, and the Church, are highly indebted to the Great Head of the Church for furnishing a man so well qualified for the station he occupied so long, and with such distinguished ability; and for the eminent blessing he was pleased to bestow on the work of his hands.

2. That this Board, and the Church, owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. W. A. McDowell, for the fervent zeal, untiring diligence, and entire devotion of his talents to the great cause of Missions, which he constantly manifested while sustaining the office of Corresponding Secretary of the Board. His whole soul was in his work.

3. That this Board tender to the bereaved family their sympathy in the great loss they have been called upon to bear, by being deprived of a husband so beloved and a father so dear; and commend them to the grace of God, who can sustain them under this heavy affliction, and by his wonder-working power, make it work together for their present and eternal good. He, we are assured in his word, is the widow's husband and the orphan's father.

DR. E. P. HUMPHREY'S SERMON ON DOMESTIC MISSIONS,

Delivered before the General Assembly, in St. Louis, Mo., May, 1851.

This timely, and admirable sermon, which Dr. Humphrey was appointed by the General Assembly to deliver, has, agreeably to a resolution of that body, been published by the Board of Missions, and sent to all the Ministers in our Church. It met the unqualified approbation of the Assembly on its delivery, and the resolution for its publication was not an unmeaning compliment, but a sincere and intelligent testimony to its intrinsic value. The sermon embraces a full and vivid discussion of two inquiries; the first relates to the means and facilities which God has imparted to our Church for the prosecution of the work of Domestic Missions, and the second, to the arduous duties of that work devolved upon us by Him. Our space does not permit as full a notice of this sermon as we would desire. We sincerely hope it may receive an attentive reading from all our ministers, and that their copies might be circulated in their congregations. And it would form one of the best productions to be read at our Monthly Concert. This sermon will advance the spirit of missions. A few copies remain on hand for distribution.

THE LATE MEETINGS OF TEN SYNODS.

Now to the work, Brethren!

Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, November, 1851.

Through the kindness of Providence, we have been enabled to visit within a few weeks nine Synods in their annual meetings; namely, Buffalo, Indiana, Cincinnati, Ohio, Wheeling, Albany, New York, Philadelphia and Virginia, and an additional one New Jersey, through the voluntary agency of Rev. Dr. T. L. Janeway, of Philadelphia, making the tenth. And in view of the action of these bodies, and the remarks made before them, and the private expressions of feeling by members, we have reason to be of good courage in the Church's work of Domestic Missions.

There was but one mind in relation to the importance and necessity of this work. As it has been over and over characterized, "It is a fundamental work,"—underlying the true glory and happiness of the Church: the salvation of immortal souls: the regeneration and upbuilding in all piety and order of our communities: and the wholesome and reforming influences of our great and growing country over all the world. The Presbyterian Church has lived, expanded, and been blessed of God through the instrumentality of her Domestic Missions; and we must sustain these Missions, and love and cherish them more and more, and by the good hand of the Lord upon us, go on unto perfection.

We endeavoured to lay before the Synods, the condition of the funds, and to assign the true reasons for it. Those reasons the brethren will remember. The income of last year was all absorbed in May, by the expenses of that year: and consequently left no balance with which to meet the liabilities of the Board for the summer and fall of the present year: and hence our need of funds. The contributions to this cause, are taken up principally between October and May. It is however our hope and confident expectation, that the income of the present year will be sufficient to meet all expenses and leave a balance for the commencement of the next. But this, of course, will depend upon the action and liberality of the churches.

We endeavoured also to demonstrate, and commend to the consideration of the Synods, the necessity of a careful examination of all applications for aid, that they all might be legitimate and just; and also the necessity of a system of reductions of appropriations to churches that have been six, ten, fifteen, and some even seventeen years drawing upon the missionary funds of the Church: and churches which are now, and perhaps have been for years, able in and of themselves to support the gospel for themselves, independent of aid from any quarter; or at least, are able to contribute more than they do towards the support of their pastors and missionaries. Every dollar which is thus improperly applied for by churches and Presbyteries, and granted by the Board, is so much money subtracted from the pure missionary churches and fields, and is taking away their support; and we may even venture to say, the bread of life out of the mouths of perishing souls! The true growth and expansion of the Church is crippled by this kind of absorption of funds, and a spirit of dependence and parsimony encouraged, of which every true-hearted Christian and Presbyterian ought to be ashamed. Were our funds relieved of these calls, and calls to sustain churches and fields that ought never to have been originated, or being originated, should have been united, without expense to the Board, to contiguous churches and fields; the missionaries and the means saved would enable us to push on our aggressive movements energetically and gloriously.

It is the steady aim of the Board to carry out fully the grand design for which the General Assembly created it; to sustain every enterprise, in every part of our country without distinction or partiality, that presents in its character and prospects the elements of a missionary enterprise; and to sustain such enterprise to the extent of the means placed at the disposal of the Board, (with wise reference to the wants of the whole field, giving each its just portion,) liberally; but not a day longer than such an enterprise is able to stand alone and support itself. Thus will all generous contributors know that their money is sacredly and judiciously applied to the missionary work, and thus will the Assembly see the Church under its care growing in numbers, territory, and strength. The mind and heart of the Synods were with the Board in these things, as of necessity, they could not fail to be, seeing that the Board is but executing the purposes for which it was called into being—purposes known and read by all men in the Church. Some of the Synods have passed strong resolutions in favour of Domestic Missions, and all seemed desirous of increasing their efforts and contributions the present year; and also of relieving the funds as fast and as far as possible from all drafts that should not be upon them. There was zeal and a true missionary spirit, and a spirit of prayer.

And now, beloved brethren, you have, Ministers, Missionaries and Elders, returned to your homes and charges. The time for action has arrived. Do not let good impressions die: but, to the work! Remember the cause so lately pleaded before you. Remember your secret resolves, your official declarations. Remember your missionaries in need of their appropriations—the new fields opening before us—the wants of our Church and country, and let every one conscientiously lay our great work before the people of his charge—the people of the Lord, who love him and love his kingdom, and the souls of men, and depend upon it, they will respond to your fervent appeal. Our true-hearted people will not be wanting if we do our duty. Then, brethren, to the work. Let every one do something, and we shall have no lack of anything. God shall be glorified, and Zion shall rejoice.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS IN RELATION TO APPLICATIONS FOR AID TO SUSTAIN MISSIONARIES.

Passed, Philadelphia, October 13, 1851.

"On motion,

1. Resolved, That the Committees of the Board, in Philadelphia and Louisville, be directed to examine carefully into the propriety and justice of every application for new commissions or for removal of old ones, and whenever the sums applied for may be reduced, that the reduction be made.

2. That the Presbyteries be requested to state the amount raised by the churches or congregations forming missionary fields, in support of their pastors or missionaries, when they apply for commissions from the Board for them, in order to enable the Board to act more intelligently on the applications.

3. That before a Presbytery entertain the application of any organized church or missionary field, it be requested to inquire whether said church or field has any reasonable prospect of becoming self-sustaining; and whether said church or field may not properly and profitably be united with some contiguous church or churches, and the labour of a missionary and the expense of his support be saved to the Board, agreeably to the recommendation of the General Assembly.

4. That all churches which have been long upon the Board, and are able to support the gospel of themselves, have their appropriations reduced; and that they be discontinued by the Board as soon as possible, in order that the missionary funds of the church may be husbanded, and more liberally and extensively applied to fields that are purely missionary, and in which the church may expand and grow."

The foregoing resolutions, it has been made our duty to publish, and to commend with a few explanatory remarks to the attention of Presbyteries and Churches. They have been passed by the Board from necessity, and with the earnest desire that they may be kindly and respectfully considered and observed by Presbyteries and Churches in their future applications.

The duty of the Committees of the Board, obliges them to examine carefully all applications for aid, and to economize the funds of the Church, allowing all due influence and consideration to the views and wishes of Presbyteries. The Board, as a Central Committee of the Church, is immediately responsible to the General Assembly, and all its acts are reviewed by that body.

The majority of applications received through the Presbyteries, for a long time, have been bare requests for certain amounts, without any statement of the sums necessary for the entire support of the missionaries, or of the sums raised in aid of their support by the churches or fields in which they are called to labour. Neither is any information given on the prospects of such churches or fields becoming self-sustaining; nor on the important point whether some union might not be formed with contiguous churches or fields, and so, much expense be saved to the church both in men and means. Consequently, the Committees of the Board frequently make appropriations in the dark, and afterwards learn that some of them, at least, are questionable, and others should not have been made at all.

More information would greatly aid the Committees, and ought to be furnished by the Presbyteries, in order that their own plans may the more effectually be secured, and the missionary funds of the church conscientiously and justly disbursed: an end we all desire.

There are a number of churches deriving aid from the Board, which can lay no proper claim to that aid. They have a good, and some a large, membership, and abundant means, and are perfectly able to sustain the gospel for themselves. Common justice and charity demand that all such churches be taken off the Board. They are not feeble churches—they possess not one element that makes them missionary churches. They ought to be self-sustaining and contributing churches; and should at once become such. The Board has made no reduction for years and years on the appropriations to these churches; and, in now beginning that reduction, care is exercised to make the reduction kindly, intelligently and judiciously, accompanied with an appeal to them, to relieve the funds of their support as speedily as possible. And from the response of some of the churches whose appropriations have been reduced, we are inclined to believe that the churches, themselves, will come up cheerfully to their duty; and it may be that they have continued in this state of dependance because they have not had their duty plainly and fully set before them.

There are missionary churches where appropriations might be reduced also much faster than they are, if proper measures were taken to effect it, both on the part of our missionaries and presbyteries. They need only to be awakened and encouraged, to make the effort.

The propriety of the line of policy here indicated will be readily perceived. It is the desire and the design of the Board not to contract, but to expand our operations. In order to do this, it becomes absolutely necessary to relieve the Board of heavy expenses now incurred for the support of Churches which ought, in justice, to sustain themselves, and be off the Board altogether, and for the support of Churches and fields of labour which should be united to contiguous churches or fields, and so be no expense whatever to the Board. By such necessary and just savings, we shall be more able to send and support missionaries in new and important fields, and so expand our Church and keep pace with the wants of our country. If all the Churches which come on the Board remain, and but few go off from year to year, we must be crippled in our real missionary operations, and in fact we shall be building up a system of effort which, after a while, must fall to pieces of its own weight, for the want of that support which the Church will find itself unable to afford.

The field before us is extensive: its wants, beyond our ability to supply. The brethren should remember this. And yet we must do our part. The Board is endeavouring, to the best of its ability, to order our missionary operations in such a way as to secure the greatest good of the whole field. Its aim is, by God's blessing, to relieve itself of present liabilities—to meet promptly all appropriations to our missionaries—to expand with new fields, and gather a new circle of Churches and a new harvest of souls, and to reduce the work to as perfect a missionary work as it is possible to make it.

So, brethren, courage for the labour! and the Lord in mercy establish the work of our hands, to the praise and glory of his rich grace in Christ Jesus our LORD.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

In a vicinity, near Philadelphia, there is a Presbyterian Church lately organized, a beautiful structure, provided with basement school rooms, tower and clock, organ, and every appliance of comfort, and costing $10,000, all defrayed by one generous individual, that the gospel and its ordinances may be in reach of his numerous operatives. The Second Presbyterian Church, New Brunswick, a beautiful and elegant edifice, in a fine location, is the monument of the liberality of three gentlemen, who mainly met its cost of $10,000. These cases are cited as proofs of increasing interest on this great and important matter, and are pressed upon the attention of the many wealthy members of our communion. There are many—I believe there are scores—who could, from the savings of one year's income, rear an edifice in which generations might worship God Almighty, to stand a monument of his piety when he is gone to the dust of the sepulchre, an enduring proof of Christ's constraining love. How can a steward of God, entrusted with his gold and silver, more effectively serve his generation, and bless the land of his birth? He loveth our nation and hath built us a synagogue, was the testimony to the beneficence of a Roman centurion. In what more appropriate way can love for country flame out, than in founding a church, with its spire heavenward to draw off the lightning wrath of God? At a cost varying according to the position of the people, from $2,000 to $10,000, can tasteful edifices be reared; and if one wishes to enjoy the luxury of continued good, there might be invested a given sum in one edifice, to be refunded when a gathered and established people shall come to appreciate the priceless value of the blessing, and then reinvested in a similar effort, on like condition. Thus the stream would flow and the agency be at work when the heart and hand which gave the impulse shall be mingled with kindred dust. There are locations in our land where five hundred dollars would supplement the contributions of a vicinage, to rear a structure free of debt, tasteful, comfortable—a fountain of gushing love to dying men. There are inviting spots, in suburban districts of this city, where five thousand dollars would ensure, with the added collections of the community round about, the erection of a house of worship to send forth the blessings of the gospel on the otherwise tumultuous population. Though on the vulgar calculations of mere pecuniary profit likely to inure to the owners of unimproved lots by the uprising of a church edifice, and on the score of sanitary and police regulations such an establishment would exert, much might be said, yet we prefer to place it on the broad ground of men's eternal interests, and God's high glory. The stewards of God, entrusted with a larger share of his gifts, may create, with his blessing, a series of instrumentalities which will ply and work till the resurrection morn. No beneficence is so wide-reaching, so likely to bless. No common arithmetic can figure out its mighty sum of benefits. It digs a well in the desert, it plants the palm trees of Elim, it unseals a fountain to the dying, it rears a refuge to the sin-oppressed. This man and that man were born there. Oh, that our wealthy members would ponder this, and concentrate efforts, and thus see the manifest and visible monument of their almsgiving. A convenient church, free of debt, is ordinarily self-sustaining, and relieves pressure on the mission funds—yea, it opens a new source whence pours surplus waters into the central reservoir. There is no view in which the matter can be presented, which does not accumulate upon it a world of interest, and cause it to enlarge in the sight of good men. Our church extension treasury is exhausted, overdrawn. Some ninety applications remain unanswered for want of means. The population swells, the flood-tide rolls by us, golden opportunities are lost for ever, and prospects of most inviting success pass away. Who will come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and seek to rear his banner in a world of sin? My heart is toward the governors of Israel that offered themselves willingly among the people. S. R. Y.

A WORD FOR THE CHURCH EXTENSION SCHEME.

Applications to Churches in our large Cities for Aid to Build Houses of Worship.

We commend the following extract from a letter written by a distinguished Pastor of one of our city churches "in the East," to the consideration of our readers. No one feels a deeper interest than he in the missionary operations of our Church, and in our Church Extension scheme, and no one has exerted himself more than he in promoting, in the sphere of his influence, this good work. His remarks, therefore, are dictated by a sincere desire to promote the general welfare of missionary and needy churches, in our connection, and not by any indisposition to aid those in need. And we may add, that he expresses the views and feelings of many others.

"To-day, a brother comes—to-morrow another writes—perhaps, and most probably, for aid to build a church. There have been, I know not how many, who, finding no funds in the Church Extension Treasury in Philadelphia, desire earnestly that we here would appropriate our contribution to his particular case, or to make a special, additional effort for him. The whole affair is getting to be oppressive. Can you do anything at your office to relieve us? It is these constant applications that interfere with the contributions for the Church Extension Committee. And so long as Pastors encourage them, and are thus precluded from taking up collections for you, your treasury will be empty. I think we have had ten applications from abroad since the first of September—all "peculiar" cases. If we were let alone, we could do something for you; but what are we to do when week after week we have these applications? If our churches would come into this scheme, our church extension operations might be systematized as effectually as those of the Board of Missions. But unless they do so, we might as well break up our system here. At all events, I wish the destitute places would understand that our Presbyteries desire and design to operate on this system."

These judicious remarks bring the whole subject before us. The General Assembly has originated this scheme of inestimable value. How is it to be sutained as a scheme of the Church? By our Church collections. If, then, the Churches intend to support the scheme, let them take up their collections and forward them. But what are we to do when one, two or three brethren come along and ask for aid to build their churches? Do just as you please. You must use your own judgment on the propriety of admitting the brother to your pulpit to spread his case before your people, or of furnishing him with names for private application, (which is doing the same thing in another way.) Every pastor has the right of judgment in such cases. He knows best, or should know best, the state of things in his church. But if you refuse him, it seems hard. Why? Is your church able to respond to all calls made upon it? Have you not sent your contribution to the Church Extension fund? Has it not been paid out to needy churches, and caused them to rejoice? Can you not tell the brother so? But has he not a right to go to the Lord's people and get money wherever and whenever he can? Certainly. But they have a right to give their money to his object in such manner as they think best—either to him particularly, or to the object, through a committee of the Church, generally. We hope the churches will do far more for Church Extension than they have done, and that the complaint uttered by our mother Church, across the water, may not be true of us, that the self-reliance of our individual Presbyteries and Churches is seriously impaired by the facilities afforded them of procuring aid in the general schemes of benevolence projected and carried on by the Church. We wish our people gave far more than they do, according to their ability, to all our schemes, and that those who are building churches might get aid to the full extent of their need. We know their necessities, and feel for them.

FROM A MISSIONARY IN GEORGIA.

SOME MERCY DROPS.

Three months have gone by since I last wrote, and the record of them is in Heaven. I thank God for the encouraging hopes which they have left behind them. In this part of my field my heart has been made glad. After more than two years of labour, spent apparently in vain, God has condescended to visit us with a few mercy drops. All my appointments have been filled as formerly, and whilst I had noticed more than common interest in some of my hearers, I was not aware of anything very special (except in one instance,) until our last communion. Two very interesting young ladies were then received upon a profession of their faith in Christ. On making some pastoral visits, I found that some six or eight more were deeply concerned about their soul's salvation. One case in particular, awakened in my breast peculiar interest. It was that of a grey-headed old man, who, though never accused of open wickedness, has yet lived a long life without Christ. He always seemed ready to assist in every good work, and was especially liberal to our Sabbath School. I sincerely hope he will become a child of God, and a useful member of the Church.

It gives me pleasure also to inform you that the Lord has been working all through our Presbytery. Never have I attended a Presbytery when the narratives from the different churches were so universally encouraging. In several of our missionary stations the work of the Lord has prospered, and many of our stronger churches have shared the rich blessing of the Lord. Pray for us, that these encouraging tokens may be but the first drops of the coming shower—the first fruits of the approaching harvest.

AN INFIDEL RECLAIMED.

An infidel of my acquaintance, who had long made Thomas Paine the man of his counsel, and who I considered a very hopeless case, from my conversation with him, was some time ago visited with a paralytic stroke. His confidence was destroyed, his assurance forsook him, his vain hopes vanished. He sent for me, in meekness, to inquire the way of life, and listened gratefully to my exposition of the plan of salvation through a crucified Redeemer, and has repeatedly joined with me in earnestly seeking that mercy from God on which he seems to rest his only hope. I recommended him, for the sake of his family, not to keep Paine's works in the house, and his daughters, at his wish, consigned to the flames that tissue of blasphemous raillery, that, as he said, others may not be misled by those books as he had been. I trust this is a brand plucked from the fire.

OBITUARY.

ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER, D. D.

The death of Archibald Alexander, the venerable Senior Professor in the Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., has filled the Church with mourning—with mourning tenderly mingled with praise and thanksgiving to the God of the living and of the dead.

It is right and proper that the records of the benevolent operations of the Church should contain an affectionate memorial of one who was identified with them all, and who occupied the post of Professor in one of our Theological Seminaries. The following notice has been condensed from a very eloquent and appropriate discourse, delivered by the Rev. S. Irenæus Prime, and published in the New York Observer—a discourse which ought to be issued in pamphlet form, for general circulation in our Church. Our selection of extracts has been made from the more historical portions of the discourse.

"Archibald Alexander was born April 17, 1772, in Virginia, near the banks of the South River, and about fifteen miles from the Natural Bridge. His ancestry were Scotch, and both his immediate parents emigrated to Ireland, and afterwards to America, and thus he is reckoned among the Scotch-Irish, a stock that has produced some of the noblest men in the Church and the State.

After a long, severe, and painful season of spiritual conflict, through which hew as made to pass, that by experience he might afterwards know how to succour those who are similarly tried, he was led to the enjoyment of the life of God in the soul, and soon to devote himself to the sacred ministry. Mr. Graham was for about two years his teacher in divinity, and on the first day of October, 1791, just sixty years and one month ago, he was commissioned by the Presbytery of Lexington to preach the gospel of Christ. As a missionary preacher through the mountain regions of Virginia, and in parts that now belong to Ohio, he travelled widely, proclaiming the way of life to the ignorant and destitute, and gathering the lost into the fold of Christ. Preaching without notes, with strange discrimination of personal experience, for one so young, and with an energy of thought and pathos of delivery rare in the young or aged, he spread the doctrines of divine truth wherever he went, and sowed seed that has yielded successive harvests for more than half a century, and will continue to bear fruit till the angels are sent forth to gather the last sheaves.

But the power as a preacher, and the reputation for genius, piety, and learning which he acquired at a period of life when most men begin to preach, may be learned from the fact, that at the extraordinary early age of twenty-five, he was called to the Presidency of Hampden Sidney College. This was in 1797. Probably in no country, unless we except the case of Wm. Pitt, Prime Minister of England at 22, was a more distinguished reputation won so early: never was one earned that was purer or more enduring. In addition to his labours as President of the College, he was pastor of three churches in Prince Edward, Charlotte and Cumberland counties. Such service was beyond the physical abilities of the youthful President, and in 1801 he resigned his post: but resumed it again after spending part of the year 1802 in travelling by horseback in the Northern and Eastern States. Before he made this tour, he had fears that he was declining into pulmonary consumption: seasonable respite enabled him to recover health and strength, and a long life of usefulness was saved to the Church and the world.

In 1806, Dr. Alexander accepted a call to the pastoral charge of the Third Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, corner of Pine and Fourth streets. Here he was an eminently useful preacher and pastor, and here he might have stood till he died, an able, learned, and persuasive minister of Jesus. But the Presbyterian Church had felt the need of a Seminary for the systematic instruction of her sons in the word of God, preparing them for the ministry of reconciliation. She looked around among all her pastors and men of learning, and wisdom, for the man to be a guide to her youth, to mould their minds and form their views in the great science of divine truth. There were giants in those days, and among them all, the mantle was thrown on the shoulders of Archibald Alexander. Single handed and alone he was sent to Princeton in 1812, to lay the foundation of that school of the prophets from which has now been taken its "master and head." In 1813, he was joined by Dr. Miller, who was called to the Seminary from the First Presbyterian Church, New York; together they laboured, with mutual respect, confidence, affection, and harmony, until they were parted like the two prophets, Elijah and Elisha, by the ascension of one to his reward and joy, in the month of January, 1850.

How did he die? He died as he lived. Until about five weeks ago, he continued to perform full duty in the Seminary, and to maintain his usual amount of labour in the study. Old age had long been on him. The three-score years and ten were numbered, and by reason of strength they were even four-score. "But his bow abode in strength." He was attacked with dysentery, which had been prevailing to some extent in that region, and the fears of his many friends were at once awakened that the blow would be fatal. Ripe fruit falls readily, when smitten, and he was like a shock of corn fully ripe. He continued to sink gradually, conscious that his days were numbered, and that the time of his departure was at hand. One son (the Rev. J. W. A.) was upon the ocean, and the father earnestly desired that he might see him ere he died. The desire was granted, and more, for the son returned just one week before the father fell asleep.

Calling to his bedside the Professor, on whom his mantle falls, he gave him the most minute expression of his views respecting the interests of the Seminary, dearer to him in death than in life, and having committed it to Him who is the head over all things for the church, he was ready to depart.

Into the scenes of domestic sorrow it is not our design to intrude. But it is right to say that the grief of those dearest to him was calmed when they sat by the bedside of the dying saint, and saw the serenity of perfect peace reposing in his eye.

He called the pastor of the Church in Princeton to his chamber, and gave him his parting counsel, assurances of his strong affection, sent messages of love to his family, and then bade him receive his blessing. The young man knelt by the couch and the patriarch laid his trembling hands upon his head, and lifted up his voice and prayed for the God of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob to bless him with the richest of heaven's grace.

By a remarkable, but deeply interesting direction of divine Providence, the Synod of New Jersey one year ago adjourned to meet in Princeton on the third Tuesday in October, 1851. It came, and it was the day before the one on which their venerable father expired. He was looking forward to their meeting with great pleasure, and a few days before, with a power of memory rare, perhaps unparalleled, in perfect health, he repeated over the names of one hundred and fifteen of the ministers of that body who had been his pupils! A sweet thought to each of them that they were thus recalled in the dying hours and prayers of one they so revered. His memory of his pupils has always been remarked as extraordinary. He had a distinct recollection of each one of them, their location and progress, watching them in all their ways like as a father watcheth the children of his love.

"Death never appeared to me so delightful as now, when it is near," he said to those around him, and often as strength allowed he spoke of the peace that dwelt in his soul. The records of these last hours will be precious to the Church, and they will be found to illustrate and confirm the experience he has written in his letters and sermons, as the fitting close to a life of faith.

The great theologian who had preached theology sixty years, who had taught theology to other preachers forty years, who was known in two hemispheres as one of the most learned and distinguished Professors of theology of the age, was now on his deathbed, and he made this observation in the hearing of his friends, and we are permitted to repeat it for the first time, but it will never be forgotten; it will be written and re-written, and repeated a hundred years hence: it was a casual remark, but a transcript of the great man's mind and heart; he said, "All my theology is reduced to this narrow compass, Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners."

For three days prior to his departure, the lamp of life was burning so low in the socket, that he was able to converse but little, and few besides the immediate members of the family were permitted to go into "the chamber where the good man met his fate, privileged" as it was "beyond the common walks of life, quite in the verge of heaven." Gradually, almost imperceptibly, the silver cord was loosed, and at six o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, October 22d, 1851, the wheel at the cistern stood still. He fell asleep in Jesus—so peacefully, that the moment of his spirit's flight was scarcely to be detected by the anxious watcher's eye.

And now what remained but to commit the dust of the honoured dead to its kindred dust. On Friday, the 24th October, the borough of Princeton was thronged by the multitude who had come together from various parts to testify with the friends and neighbours, their sense of the general bereavement. The Synod of New Jersey was still in session, embracing 173 ministers and elders from as many churches; not all of them, but a great number were present; with clergy and laymen from New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and other cities and places near and more remote; probably a larger number of clergymen than were ever assembled on a similar occasion in this country.

At half-past two, P. M., they met in the Chapel of the Theological Seminary, and forming a procession four abreast, accompanied the remains to the First Presbyterian Church. The students of the College and the Seminary filled the galleries; the body pews were occupied by the clergy, and the citizens generally the side pews and aisles.

The Rev. Dr. Murray, of Elizabethtown, N. J. conducted the opening devotional services, and Rev. Dr. Plumer, of Baltimore, the closing.

The Rev. John McDowell, D. D., of Philadelphia, preached the sermon at the request of the deceased, who had enjoined it upon him to attempt no delineation of character and no eulogy upon the occasion. The sermon was therefore a simple exhibition of the gospel, from the familiar words, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Of all who participated in the inauguration of Dr. Alexander, in 1812, none survive but Dr. McDowell and the venerable Dr. Milledoller.

The services in the church being concluded, the mournful procession was again formed. The students of the College preceded. The Presbytery of New Brunswick claimed the privilege of carrying their honoured father to the grave with their own hands, and it was granted them. The sons, and one who was always called by him his son, followed, and then a long line of clergymen and others, and the students of the Seminary, and a multitude of the inhabitants walked to the house appointed for all living. Forming a circle about the open grave, the brethren let down the remains of their father into the silent tomb and mingled their tears with the dust which covered his clay.

The Rev. Dr. Magie, of Elizabethtown, N. J., then said; "Eighty years of life on earth are ended here. Sixty years in the ministry of the gospel are ended here. Forty years in the instruction of a rising generation of ministers are ended here. All that was mortal of our father and friend we have just committed to this silent tomb. It does look cold, and dark, and dreary, but it is no more so than the grave in which his Master lay, and they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." After a few words more he led the assembly in prayer, and dismissed them with the apostolical benediction.

There his remains are lying within an enclosure that contains the ashes of such men as Dickinson, and Burr, and President Edwards, and Finley, and Smith, and Davies, and Witherspoon, and Green, and Dodd, and Miller, such a line of Presidents and Professors as distinguish no other cemetery in this land. Genius and learning and virtue made these men great, and their tombs will be honoured by the friends of sacred science for ever.

No less than 1837 young men have received instruction in Princeton from his lips, and of this large number 1640 are believed to be still among the living. These will extend his influence to the end of time.

"And I am glad that he has lived so long,
And glad that he has gone to his reward;
Nor deem that kindly nature did him wrong,
Softly to disengage the vital cord,
When his weak hand grew palsied, and his eye
Dark with the mists of age—it was his time to die."

Full of years and usefulness and honours, he has rested from his labours and his works do follow him. The Head of the Church still lives, and will raise up others to take the places of the fathers when they fall asleep.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

NEW CANDIDATES.

The following table shows the number of new candidates received under the care of the Board of Education for the three months ending November 1st, together with the names of their Presbyteries:

Albany,	1
Troy,	1
New Brunswick,	2
Philadelphia,	1
Philadelphia, 2d,	1
Carlisle,	1
Huntington,	1
Blairsville,	3
Redstone,	1
St. Clairsville,	1
Columbus,	1
Muncie,	1
Rock River,	1
Lexington,	1
Western District,	2
Cherokee,	3
	22
Total,	24

The number received during the first quarter of this year was 13, making for the six months, 37. During the same period last year, the number received was 47. According to these statistics, the number of our candidates, thus far, has decreased.

MORTALITY AMONG CLERGYMEN.

In connection with the fact of an apparent decrease this year in the number of candidates for the ministry, we place on record the increased mortality among our ministers. The number of deaths last year was 29; and the preceding year 26. During the first half of the present ecclesiastical year the number is 19; as follows:

NAMES.	PRESBYTERIES.	AGE.
Ezekiel B. Currie,	Orange,	84
John Mark Fulton,	Upper Missouri,	63

THE SYNOD OF CINCINNATI AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

The following is the action of the Synod of Cincinnati in reference to the Theological Seminaries at New Albany and Cincinnati:

The following resolutions in reference to New Albany Theological Seminary were passed without opposition:

1. This Synod have heard with pleasure the report of the Board of Directors of the Theological Seminary under their care, and approve of the same.

2. Synod would record their gratitude to God for the measure of success which has attended the efforts of the Synods united in the support of that Seminary, in the work of training a ministry adapted to the wants of the Church and our rapidly increasing population.

Messrs. T. E. Hughes, S. R. Wilson and P. D. Gurley, D.D., ministers, with N. Wade, J. S. Todd and D. Osborne, elders, were elected Directors of the Seminary for the term of three years.

A letter from the Synod of Kentucky, proposing to the various Synods having control of the New Albany Seminary to place it under the care of the General Assembly, was read and placed on the docket. The subject was afterwards taken up, and, after some consideration, it was indefinitely postponed.

A communication was received from the Board of Directors of the Cincinnati Theological Seminary, announcing officially to Synod the organization of this Seminary, and giving a brief outline of its history, plan, and prospects. After the reading of the communication from the Board, the following resolution was offered:

Resolved, That the Synod have heard with deep interest, the statement of the Board of Directors of the Cincinnati Theological Seminary, and rejoice in the measure of success thus far attending their efforts to train young men for the work of the ministry, and hope that under the blessing of the Head of the Church it may prove eminently useful in the important work on which it has entered.

This resolution, after some discussion, was passed by a vote of sixty-two to nineteen—two being excused from voting.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE EDUCATIONAL BOND.

The supervision, by the Church, of the work of education, will do much to call forth THE EFFICIENT AND STEADY CO-OPERATION OF PASTORS in the work of educating the young. The Church and the School are co-ordinate agencies in the Christianizing of the human family. The minister who teaches in the one has no secondary interest in what is done in the other. The ejection of the ambassador of Christ from official connexion with the place where the children of his congregation are receiving their education, is one of the evils of the present order of things. The tie which binds the pastor to the school is dissevered; the children are virtually removed, for six days in the week, from the best opportunities of pastoral intercourse and instruction. There is little or no sympathy between the State schoolmaster and the parish minister. Although the public schools do not, like the Girard College, place ministers on the roll of prohibited persons, yet they offer little inducement to promote their attendance; and if any minister should frequently visit a school, the suspicion of sectarian designs would soon be excited. It is astonishing that our ministers should have so long and so quietly submitted to this estrangement between themselves and the lambs of their flock. The Christian plan of education restores the school to its appropriate place among the institutions of the Church, and re-invests the minister with his full authority over the youthful members of his charge. This renewal of the vital connexion between ministers and children is one of our strong encouragements to "go forward."

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Davidson College, under the care of the Synod of North Carolina, was established for the purpose of giving a thorough Christian education to the youth, who might resort to its halls. The following is the Annual Report of the Board of Trustees, presented to the Synod of North Carolina, at its recent meeting.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF DAVIDSON COLLEGE TO THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The Board of Trustees of Davidson College respectfully report to the Synod of North Carolina, that during the past year the number of students connected with the College was 62.

The amount of tuition fees received was	$1575 00
Interest collected on endowment fund,	1921 50
Total income for the year,	$3496 50
Amount of Professors' salaries for the year,	$4200 00
Leaving a balance against the College of	$703 50

This deficiency of income to meet the expenses of the College for the past year, is owing to the salary of an additional Professor, and to the diminished number of students for the past year.

To meet the wants of the College, and to complete its endowment, the Board resolved on 20th of March, 1851, to sell at least four hundred scholarships at $100 each; and appointed the Rev. W. W. Pharr their Agent for that purpose within the bounds of the Presbytery of Concord; the Rev. A. Baker their Agent within the bounds of the Presbytery of Fayetteville, and the Rev. Wm. Banks their Agent within the bounds of the Presbytery of Bethel.

The agency in Concord Presbytery was commenced in May last, and about 200 scholarships have been sold. The Agents for the other Presbyteries expect to commence their labours soon, and the Board calculate with confidence that the requisite number of scholarships will be sold in a year; after which the scholarship plan will be pursued in College.

The health of the students during the past year has been good; their deportment and attention to studies, with few exceptions, highly satisfactory, and the scholarship in general very respectable.

Eighteen of the students, for the past year, were members of the Church in full communion, and gave good evidence of piety; and nearly all were orderly and paid becoming respect to the ordinances of religion. The Bible Class on the Sabbath, and the student's Prayer-meeting on Saturday evening were well attended.

Each class is required to attend three recitations a day, viz. one at sunrise, one at 11 o'clock, A. M., and one at 4 o'clock, P. M.

At the commencement in August last, the Senior Class, consisting of fifteen young men, having completed their Collegiate Course to the satisfaction of the Board, received the degree of A. B.

The Rev. E. F. Rockwell commenced his labours in the College, as Professor of Natural Science, in November last, and was regularly inaugurated on the 13th of August, 1851.

The price of board for the students will be continued at six dollars per month, for the coming year, notwithstanding the anticipated scarcity and high price of provisions.

The Board of Trustees, grateful to the Great Head of the Church and Ruler of the world for the past indications of his favour to our rising College, would earnestly recommend its interests and protection to the care and regard of the Synod of North Carolina, that it may rise and stand a lasting monument to the piety and patriotism of the Presbyterian Church, and a blessing to mankind.

We would affectionately ask the cordial and efficient co-operation of the Synod of North Carolina, in carrying out the scholarship plan of endowment. We ask that the brethren in the ministry and in the eldership would give their countenance and their aid to a plan of endowment which must, if sustained by the church, place Davidson College on a sure foundation, and at the same time prove—not a loss of money, but a great gain to every purchaser of a scholarship—which promises not only to diminish the expenses of a complete education, but greatly to increase the number of the educated, and to make the future generation of the country, not only an educated people, but one trained up under the pure morality and doctrine of the gospel.

By order of the Board of Trustees,

S. WILLIAMSON,
ROBT. S. McDOWELL,
STEPHEN FRONTIS. } Committee.

TEACHING AND TRAINING.

It is much easier to teach children than to train them. And in this ease-loving age, it is not to be wondered at, that teaching has become far more popular than training. Teaching is informing, instructing, supplying with knowledge. Hence a person with very little positive knowledge of science, art and literature, not unfrequently renders himself a popular instructor, from his ability to employ his very small stock, in such a way as to amuse, excite, and entertain the young. Training is something more than this. It is doing, and not hearing only—it is forming, as well as informing—moulding and so shaping the young, that they exhibit to the world the impress of that discipline which is indispensable to right training.

A child that has been taught only, is ready to parley with his parent, or teacher, when requested or commanded to do, or leave undone any thing. A child that has been rightly trained never does. When told to do, or not to do a thing, it is enough for him. He never asks why, or wherefore, because he has been trained to honour and obey his parents, as well as taught the precept, that requires the performance of this duty.

Eli, when he heard of the wickedness of his sons, said unto them, "Why do ye such things? for I hear of your evil dealings by all this people. Nay, my sons; it is no good report that I hear. His sons made themselves vile and HE RESTRAINED THEM NOT." Here is the account of a family brought up, very much as children are at the present day. Children do evil, and the parent, like Eli, asks, Why do ye such things? My son, have I not taught you better? Why then do such dishonourable acts, and disgrace yourself and your parents? The boy might answer, Yes, father, or mother, it is true you told me better, but you never "restrained" me from wrong-doing—or, in other words, you taught me well enough, but alas, you never trained me to do what I ought to do, and to leave undone what I ought not to do; i. e. you let me do the one, and did not hinder me from doing the other.

The language of inspiration is not teach up, inform up, instruct up, amuse up, a child in the way he should go—and then the promise—that when he is old he will not depart from it—but it is TRAIN UP a child, &c.

But, says one, "it takes more time to train a child than to teach him, and I cannot find time to do the latter, even, how then can it be expected that I should do the former? I send my child to school on the week-day to have this done, and between the teachers of the secular and the Sunday-school, this work will be well done." How do you know this? Are you acquainted with the teacher of secular knowledge? "No! I never saw him—but then 'they' would not employ an instructor that is not competent to teach, you know." No—I do not know this.

Again; do you know the Sunday-school teacher? "No—but then he is a good instructor, because the children like him so well; he is so interesting and amusing—they say he makes them laugh right out loud sometimes, he is so funny."

So children grow up. The mother has no time to train them, because she must keep her house in order, and make "calls," and entertain such as have little, or rather, do little or nothing else; and the father has as much as he can do, to provide the means to live upon, and keep up fashionable appearances for a few short years.

Many children for these reasons are growing up without any religious training in the midst of Christian institutions. This work belongs to parents, aided by the Church of God. Thus may children be educated and trained, both for the life that now is, and for that which is to come. Otherwise there is no hope of training children so that they shall seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and thus secure all earthly good, which alas, is too frequently sought without complying with the condition by which it can be secured and enjoyed. Train your children then to do right as well as to know right. L. W.

THE TEACHER.

"The diligent and pious teacher, who properly instructs and trains the young, can never be fully rewarded with money. If I were to leave my office as preacher, I would next choose that of school-master, or teacher of boys; for I know that next to preaching this is the greatest, best, and most useful vocation; and I am not sure which of the two is the better, for it is hard to reform old sinners with whom the preacher has to do, while the young tree can be made to bend without breaking."

Thus thought and wrote Dr. Martin Luther, and there are few to whom the world owes more than to him.

Many of our most intelligent, liberal and wealthy planters, legislators, congressmen, senators and clergymen have not disdained in their day to teach, and in a higher or lower sphere many continue to teach through life. Jesus Christ was an humble despised teacher.

If we judge a calling to be worthy of honour and respect in proportion to its responsibility and importance, teaching does not come lowest on the scale. To be usefully and profitably employed is the bounden duty of every man; every man in a station according to his several ability, and he who turns his talents to the best account for others, and he alone, deserves the highest honour.—Presbyterian Herald. N.

ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

At the late meeting of Synod, the Report of the School Committee was called for, and was read by Professor Lorimer, the Convener. It gave a very favourable and encouraging view of the progress of the educational interests of the Church—the collections for the year had been larger than in some former years, and had been contributed by a greater number of congregations than on any previous occasion. Several new schools had been originated since the date of last report—several schools which had been suspended for a time had been revived, and some which had begun to decline had been reinvigorated. New school premises had been erected at Risley with the aid of a grant from Government—at Manchester, in connexion with the new church of Grosvenor-square—at Falstone, by the zealous exertions of our minister, Mr. Stuart, aided by his Grace the Duke of Northumberland—and at Sunderland, where "the New Academy" had already taken a position at the head of the scholastic establishments of the town. Important additions had been made to the number of our trained and highly-qualified masters, and the Fund was of signal advantage in enabling our schools to secure and retain the services of such men. The number of Day-schools connected with the Church now amounted to upwards of fifty, but nothing should satisfy us short of a full equipment of schools, that is to say, a well-taught day-school in connexion with every congregation.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, November 13, 1851.

Africa.—We have received letters from the Rev. D. A. Wilson, at Monrovia, July 28, and the Rev. J. L. Mackey, at Corisco, July 30. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson reached their station on the 16th of July, making the voyage, including a short time spent at Sierra Leone, just two months from New York. They speak warmly of their pleasant and comfortable circumstances at Monrovia, and contemplate the work before them with much interest. At Corisco, Mr. Mackey is much encouraged. He was forming a new town, which would be subject to Christian rules. The people were attentive to his religious services, and had learnt to observe, in some good measure, the Sabbath day. Many were anxious to place their children under his instruction, and he requests the Board to establish, as soon as possible, two boarding schools, one for boys and the other for girls. He earnestly pleads for more labourers. Who will go to his help? Our readers will be glad to learn that the Committee have authorized him to form a school for boarding scholars. This will require enlarged expenditure, but the object is well worthy of it.

Siam.—Letters have been received of dates to the 29th of July. They convey the painful intelligence of the death of Mrs. Bush, wife of the Rev. S. Bush, on the 23d of that month. Her illness was the consumption. While we mourn over her early removal, and the loss of the mission and her husband, we ought to feel thankful for the grace given unto her, which was manifest in her life, and which shone so brightly in her last hours. Seldom have we read of a more triumphant departure out of this life, than that described in Mr. Mattoon's letter, which will be found in another column.

The application to the government for permission to procure mission premises had not been acted on, though no unfriendly feeling was evinced. The missionaries speak with interest of the re-introduction of vaccination into Siam. This was effected through Mrs. Mattoon's visit to Singapore for health, with her child. "Her visit there," writes Mr. Mattoon, "has not only enabled her to secure our own child against the small-pox, but also to introduce vaccination again into Siam, an object for which the missionaries have been labouring in vain for the last five years, and also into Singapore, where it had been lost for ten months. The virus is brought there by steamers every month, but had proved worthless for nearly a year; and Dr. Lane writes to me that the virus which he used in vaccinating our little boy and the native girl Mrs. Mattoon had with her, had been dissolved and used all day by the other physicians, but not a case took, and they pronounced it worthless; while these cases took, and they are propagating it successfully from them." Dr. House speaks of this as an event of no common importance. He says, "in no country is the small-pox more fatal in its ravages than in Siam, and in no country is it more difficult to procure the vaccine virus which furnishes such a wonderful protection from it. It were a low estimate to suppose that thousands of children have been swept away by it during this present epidemic this year." Drs. House, Bradley, and Jones were actively engaged in vaccinating the natives, and were about to memorialize the king on the subject, in the hope of engaging thereby the aid of native physicians throughout the country. All this gives us an interesting view of one of the collateral benefits of Christian missions.

China.—The only letter received is one from the Rev. A. P. Happer, of August 22. A fever had prevailed generally among foreigners and natives, from which the members of the mission and many of the scholars had suffered, though not severely; they were better at the above date. Mr. Happer gives an interesting account of his Dispensary practice. On three days of the week he prescribed for patients, of whom nearly a hundred attended at the dispensary. The gospel was preached to them at the same time. This account will be inserted in our next number.

India.—Letters have come to hand from Lahor, July 30; the Rev. L. Janvier, at Sabathu, August 29; Saharanpur, August 29; Agra, August 22; Mynpoorie, September 1; Futtehgurh, September 8; Allahabad, to September 5. The health of Mrs. Janvier and of Mr. Woodside was somewhat improved; both had been very ill. The former was at Sabathu, and the latter at Landour, in the mountains, for the sake of the colder climate. The cholera was prevailing to some extent at Agra and Allahabad. Mr. Owen's little son had recovered from an attack, and the other families had been kept in safety. The missionary work at the different stations was going on, without any marked change.

Creek Mission.—Mr. W. S. Robertson, teacher, writes on the 3d of October, that the school at Tallahassee had been re-opened with favourable prospects. "Every day there are more or less applicants for places in the school, and I have no doubt we could find fifty more [than we can accommodate] in a week. All this, of course, shows that we have the confidence of the people, and had we sufficient help I should feel greatly encouraged for the future." Mr. Robertson then mentions with anxiety their want of more assistance in the instruction of the school and the care of the children. Mr. J. B. Junkin, of the same station, writes on this point under date of October 1; "Many little boys and girls were brought in to-day, but had to go away again because our number is full, and we have not room for more. It fills my heart with sorrow to see the poor little children go away to their heathen homes. When will the Church learn the solemn duty resting on her?" This is an afflicting statement. We trust that it may not be long until these children will be welcomed instead of rejected. For this purpose, both among the Creeks and other tribes, more teachers are needed, and funds for the support of the schools.

Omaha and Otoe Mission.—A letter from the Rev. E. McKinney, of September 29, mentions that severe sickness had prevailed for some weeks in the vicinity of the mission station, the Indians suffering from fever and small-pox. All the members of the mission family had been attacked with sickness; this, with the want of suitable domestic help, had proved a severe trial to them, and a serious interruption to their labours. At the date of Mr. McKinney's writing all were better. A school for Pawnee children, heretofore supported by the government, had been disbanded, and Mr. McKinney had taken its pupils, some eight or ten in number, into the boarding-school of the mission. This will save the time and labour already expended on them from being lost, and will keep them under Christian instruction. Thus the Lord is extending the missionary work in almost every direction, and calling upon his people to give it an increased support by their gifts and their prayers.

THE CONDITION AND REQUIRED ENLARGEMENT OF THE MISSIONS.

The annual collections of most of the churches, in aid of Foreign Missions, are made after the present time, or within the last four or five months of the financial year of the Board. This usage is attended with some serious disadvantages, as will be apparent from the fact that the expenditures of the Board, which now amount to over $11,000 a month, must go on at almost a uniform rate. But we advert now to the fact, that so many of the churches have yet to make their contributions to this cause, chiefly as a reason for calling the attention of our readers, and especially of our brethren in the ministry, to some brief statements showing the present condition and the greatly needed enlargement of our foreign missionary work.

The present state of the missions is, in a high degree, encouraging. No material changes have taken place in most of them since the last Annual Report of the Board, and we are sure that every careful reader of that Report must have been satisfied that God is indeed with us as a Church in this work.

The mission in Siam, which was then described as in a critical condition, is now, in answer to the prayers of God's people, in the enjoyment of much brighter prospects. One of its beloved members has been called to her rest, and we mourn over her early removal; but her triumph over death in a heathen land should at once remind us of the preciousness of the Gospel in the hour of our greatest need, and plead with us to pity those who are sitting in the darkness and shadow of death. The new mission to Africa, near the Equator, which was then spoken of as commenced on the island of Corisco under favourable circumstances, has been greatly afflicted in the sudden deaths of Mr. and Mrs. Simpson; yet by this solemn providence God seems to awaken the attention of his people to the wants and claims of the great African field. The mission still lives, and its solitary labourer pleads earnestly for more men. The door into Africa is still widely open. Let the churches prosecute this mission with greater dependence on the blessing of God, and with greater faith; it will appear at the latter end that this sore bereavement was not intended to discourage the zeal of his people, but to promote their usefulness in his service.

The other missions have been marked by no great changes. Their work has been steadily carried on. Daily instruction in schools, the work of the press, the regular preaching of the gospel, have fully occupied the time of our brethren. It is a day of small things at most of their stations. They are now laying the foundations. But while they labour in faith, they are not without tokens of the presence of the Spirit of God. Some souls are inquiring for the way of life, and others have been hopefully converted unto God, while some have finished their course, supported by a good hope through grace of eternal life. What the missionaries most earnestly plead for is the prayers of the churches, that the Spirit of God may be poured out upon them and the heathen around them. Then these missions would quickly become as rivers of the water of life.

It is therefore with sincere gratitude we contemplate the condition of our foreign missions. We see them occupying fields of peculiar interest, as amongst our Indian tribes; of special prophecy, as amongst the ancient people of God; or of the greatest extent, as among the Romanists of Europe and our own continent, and the pagans of Africa and Asia. By these missions, we may reach more than three-fourths of the unevangelized portion of our race; and through them may the benevolence of our churches flow forth to bless immense multitudes, who are now perishing for lack of vision.

The support of these missions, on the existing scale of expenditure, is not all that the providence of God calls for at our hands. The full measure of our ability to give has surely not been reached, when so many churches have not made any offering at all for years to this object, and when the whole amount given would not average one cent each week to all the communicants of our denomination. Many have manifested great liberality, and many have practised self-denial, in their gifts to this work of God, and they will surely be rewarded for what they have done, by Him who once sat over against the treasury, taking notice of the gifts which were cast into it. But may we not hope that all our Christian brethren will come up to the help of the Lord in this work? We ask all to pray for it: should we not ask all to give to it of their property, even as the Lord has prospered them? Until this is done, we surely have not done all that we could, to give the gospel to the perishing.

Some labourers have been sent forth since the meeting of the General Assembly; three to Western Africa, one a minister, and two females; two to India, and a minister returning to his field and his wife, while two families have returned from that country, though it may be but for a season, on account of health; five to missions among the Indians, two ministers, and one male and two female teachers; one is under appointment for China, and another is under appointment for a station among the Romanists, both ministers. These are all. Others, however, have their attention turned to the question of duty; and some will be ready to go forth, if the Lord will, during the coming summer. Arrangements for sending out new labourers are, in most cases, entered upon during the winter months, and the Board should have such encouragement as to funds, as would enable the Committee to make engagements with every qualified candidate, in whose heart the Spirit of God has implanted the desire, and before whom Providence may open the way, to engage in this work. We have some reason to believe that there will be no lack of men during the coming year.

Now, in connection with all this, consider some of the doors opened for enlarged effort:—

1. The Corisco Mission requires immediately another missionary, and within the financial year arrangements should be made for sending out two or three more. The Committee have just authorized the establishment of a boarding-school for the education of native youth, at a considerable outlay, in order to prepare native labourers for that field.

2. In China, a minister is now wanted at Canton, and several more should be sent at an early period; a physician could be most usefully employed at the same city; more ministers are needed at Shanghai and Ningpo.

3. In India, there are whole provinces containing hundreds of thousands of souls, for whose salvation no man seems to care. In connexion with the Missions of the Board in that country, there are numerous large cities, at which stations might at once be formed.

4. In the work of missions among the Romanists, there is a call for a considerably enlarged expenditure. If men of suitable qualifications can be obtained, they will be sent to any places that are open on our own continent. And our brethren in Europe appeal to us earnestly for help; our help they must have.

5. There is an inviting field for a mission to some 30,000 Jews in one of the northern cities of Africa, which would eventually give access to a large Arab population. An earnest request has been made to the Committee, for a missionary to commence this work, by one of our countrymen, a highly respected resident at that city.

5. Our Indian tribes have increasing claims upon us, even as the time for doing any service to them is becoming more and more limited. The Committee have had the subject of missions amongst the California and other tribes before them, and are waiting for men and means to go on with this branch of their work.

In view of these statements, we ask that our brethren in the ministry and the highly favoured members of our churches would lay this great work of God more and more to heart. Our appeal is to those who know the worth of the soul, who feel their obligations to the Saviour, who desire to do his will, and who act under the conviction that life is short and time uncertain. Our appeal is to all who would do unto others as they would have others do unto them. We are anxious that they should all feel a hearty concern in this cause. And then let each one give as he finds it in his heart to give, and as the Lord hath prospered him, accompanying his gift with his fervent prayers, and we will not doubt that God will do a great and blessed work in the earth by our humble agency.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

A LETTER OF THE REV. JOSEPH OWEN: AUGUST 2, 1851.

A Call for more Men in the India Missions.

We commend the statements of this paper to the earnest consideration of our readers, and particularly of our brethren in the ministry. We trust that many of them will judge it proper to read this letter to their congregation from the pulpit. Is not this a call to the Church, which should move the hearts of all her members? Are these heathen perishing, and can we do no more for their help? At least we can pray more. Could not more of our ministers go to these fields, which are so white unto the harvest, and where the labourers are so few? And who can doubt our ability to give more, far more, when it is remembered that in one of our most favoured Synods, as was stated publicly during its recent sessions, eighty-seven churches had given nothing at all to the cause of foreign missions the last year!—and when it is also remembered that the whole amount given by all our churches over the land, with all their wealth, would not average one cent each week to each communicant in our body! Alas, how painfully do these facts contrast with each other—the millions of the heathen open to us, easily reached, perishing, and our wonderful apathy to their wants and wo! Yet some, yes many, do feel and show a true concern for the Saviour's glory in the promotion of his cause. And we trust all will yet, and soon, lay it to heart. Mr. Owen writes as follows:

I have learned from the Mission House, with sincere regret, that you intend sending out no new missionaries this year. The Committee, as individuals, are not responsible for this determination. They can only send the men and furnish the money that they receive from the Church. The Church must answer for this determination of the Executive Committee. It cannot be that you have for a moment entertained the thought that this part of the country, or even Allahabad, is adequately supplied with ministers of the gospel. This city of Allahabad lies in the centre of a district of the same name, about seventy miles long, with an average breadth of about thirty-five miles, containing a population, according to the latest census, of (1,176,823) one million one hundred and seventy-six thousand eight hundred and twenty-three inhabitants. For the instruction of these people you have here five ordained missionaries, one licensed preacher, and four native assistants or catechists. Seventy-five miles west of this is the city of Futtehpore, containing about 16,000 inhabitants, the capital of a district of the same name more than half as large as Allahabad in area, with a population of 811,132 souls, and not one missionary for the whole. South and south-west of Futtehpore are the districts of Hameerpore and Calpee, containing 482,091 souls, without one spiritual guide. The city of Calpee alone has 18,714 inhabitants. South of Hameerpore is the city of Banda, with 33,464 inhabitants, and the capital of a district containing 552,526 souls, who have no one to set before them the way of life. Futtehpore, Calpee, Hameerpore and Banda properly belong to the Allahabad Mission. In 1841–2, Mr. James Wilson and I visited them all, and spent several days in each, since which time none, except Futtehpore, has been visited by any missionary. In all these said districts, including Allahabad, is an aggregate population of nearly three millions, for whose supply you have only the force now in Allahabad.

This fact is so important, that I would gladly leave it alone for your consideration. But there are others equally weighty. Cawnpore, 125 miles west of this, has lately been brought to our attention, by some friends residing there, as a station for our Board. The city has a population of 108,796 inhabitants, and the whole district 993,031. It is at present feebly occupied by the Propagation Society [with but one missionary,] and the continuance of its Mission there appears at present somewhat precarious. With the claims of Furrukhabad, Mynpoorie and Agra, to your special attention, you are already familiar. I might mention the city of Etawah, not far from Mynpoorie, with its 17,783 inhabitants, and its district with 481,224, if this would not take your attention from Shahjehanpore and Bareilly, both also properly belonging to the Furrukhabad Mission. Both these cities and districts are, so far as I have learned, comparatively very healthy. The city of Shahjehanpore has a population of 62,785, and its district 812,588; the city of Bareilly 92,208, and its district 1,143,657. Among all these multitudes there resides not one missionary.

The two last named cities are in the Rohilcund country, of which Bareilly is the capital. In the same country are the district of Badaon with its 825,712 inhabitants; the city of Moradabad with its 48,880, and the district of the same name with its 997,362 inhabitants; and Bijnour district with its 620,546. In the whole of Rohilcund there is a population of 4,399,855, for whom there is not a single missionary. It is true there have been chaplains at some of the European stations there, but the chaplains in these days, since the time of Brown, Martyn, and Thomason, know little of the language, and few of them, at least in the upper provinces, seem inclined to missionary labour among the natives. Are those nearly four millions and a half of precious souls in Rohilcund, who have none to point them to Jesus, to be entirely forgotten by you and by our Church?

Let us pass further on westward till we come to Allygurh. There is the town of Coel with a population of 36,181, and the district contains 739,356. This station has repeatedly been brought to your attention. Beyond that is the great and far-famed city of Delhi, with its 137,977 inhabitants, which has also been frequently brought to your notice. For many years good Mr. Thompson, of the Baptist Society, laboured there alone, but he has now gone to his rest, and I do not know of any missionary labouring there. That field, therefore, with its 306,550 souls in the city and immediate vicinity, is entirely open to you. Even if Mr. Thompson were living, it would be quite as much so as Agra, which, with its 66,003 in the city and 828,200 in the district, we think affords room enough for the Episcopalians, Presbyterians and Baptists, [all of whose missionaries are but a handful.]

Beyond Delhi you come to the city of Paneeput containing 16,870 people, and the capital of a district in which are 283,420. Between Delhi and Muttra is the district of Goorgaon, with a population of 460,326, of which the chief towns are, Hodul, containing 5,840; Firozpur, 7,989; Newaree, 26,936; and Pulwul, 10,062. In the neighbourhood of Delhi too, are the districts of Mozuffurnuggur and Bolundshuhur, the former containing 537,594, and the latter 699,093 souls. Delhi then is the centre of a large and populous region of country, and ought to become the centre of extensive and efficient missionary operations for the whole. All these cities and districts are now entirely without missionaries. Are you willing that they should remain so? Does the Church mean to say so, in obliging you to decide to send out no new missionaries this year?

I might go on with many more statistical details of this kind in regard to several other vast regions of country in these northwest provinces, that have never yet been visited by any messenger of Christ. In these provinces is an aggregate population that may be stated in round numbers at twenty-five millions, exclusive of the Panjáb, for whom there are not more than fifty gospel ministers of all denominations. For the twenty-two millions in the United States, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in those States furnishes upwards of nineteen hundred ministers, and for the twenty-five or thirty millions of northwest India, that same Church gives nineteen ministers, and will give no more this year—virtually says to these heathen, "Go your way for this time, when we have a more convenient season we will attend to you." Imagination is bewildered in attempting to grasp the numbers mentioned above, and the heart sickens in reflecting on the degradation that spreads over these vast and populous regions, fills every city and ruins each soul. Oh! how can our Church account to her great Head for this guilty neglect? Dare she say to her Saviour, "We have obeyed thy last command!" Or dare she, in the very face of that command, say, "We must give only one there to a hundred here!" Or silently show, by her conduct, that she thinks and cares little about them. The complaint is often made that missionaries have so little success. Send all the ministers of all denominations out of the United States but fifty, and how long do you think these fifty would succeed in keeping your twenty-two millions from falling back into heathenism? How long would they simply defend what has been gained? Do you expect fifty men here not only to do what could never be done there, but to act on the aggressive, in a miraculous way, and bring under the sway of the cross, a population larger than your own, and involved in an idolatry whose abominations are unspeakable? And do you expect us to do this, too, without your co-operating prayers? Let the Church bear the heathen on her heart at the throne of grace, and she will not long have to complain of the small success of her missionaries, nor will those missionaries have to complain that they are so few and far between. May the God of all grace grant to us all sound minds and obedient hearts to do his will!

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. J. L. MACKEY.

Notice of the Station.

Mr. Mackey's letter is dated on the 30th of July, at Evangasimba, the native name of his present station. At first he and his lamented associate, Mr. Simpson, built their houses together at a short distance from the cluster of towns of the principal chief. They were advised to avoid close contact with the natives, on account of "their drummings, dancings," &c.; but they had become satisfied that "the more nearly we can live in contact with the native people, the more powerful our influence and example will be." Of this, we apprehend, there can be little doubt. Partly for the purpose of living nearer to the natives, therefore, and chiefly to form a new town, where the well disposed might settle around the missionary, coming under certain regulations as to polygamy and other evils, Mr. Mackey had his house and the kitchen "pulled up and carried over" to the site now occupied in a different part of the island,—all this "at an expense of a few dollars!" The house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Simpson remains at the first station, under the care of a trustworthy native, who lives in the kitchen. We trust that it may not be long before a family of kindred spirit will be called by the Lord of the harvest to go forth into this field, and take possession of these mission premises.

That the field is a most important and encouraging one will be clearly seen from the following extracts from Mr. Mackey's letter.

Encouraging Indications.

I have now got fairly established here, and feel very much encouraged indeed in the work here. I have been solicited by a number of men from other towns for permission to come and settle in the town which I have laid out. I do not grant the privilege to any who have more than one wife, or who are unwilling to come under such regulations as I specify. Several houses will be built now before the next rainy season commences.

I will mention here some of the indications by which I feel encouraged, and from which I think the blessing of God is attending our labours.

1st. The whole body of the people on the island seem to feel that our labours are disinterested, and they acknowledge, and I believe feel, that their highest good is desired.

2d. The attendance on the Sabbath service is increasing. I have of late had more than a hundred present, and when I get a church building completed, I have no doubt but the attendance will be much larger. The Sabbath is outwardly observed; as much respect is shown to the day as the people at present are capable of. All ordinary work is suspended, and rarely a boat leaves the island on that day.

3d. There is an increasing desire among the people to have their children instructed. I have been requested by more than fifty parents to take boys or girls into my house, to be instructed.

Notices of Children offered to the Missionary for Education—Boarding-schools needed.

The two little girls whom I mentioned in a previous letter, one of them a daughter of King Mumba, the other a daughter of a deceased brother of his, I have in my family. They are lively, intelligent, and promising children. A few days ago, Dabiyani, an influential head-man, brought two little girls about eight years of age each, and very earnestly requested me to take them and raise them under my instruction; and of his own accord he offered to pay me for the clothes they would need. It was very hard for me to tell him I could not receive them. I told him I expected a female teacher would come out from America, and until she would come, I could take no more.

It has, as you are aware, been exceedingly difficult, wherever a mission has been established on this coast, to get girls to instruct. The condition of things here now is such, that a very good school of girls could be collected, if a teacher was only here to take charge of them. Four of the lads who are now living with me, all sons of head-men, are betrothed to small girls, three of them not living on the island. The boys have all requested that these girls be brought here to be instructed, so that they would be more suitable wives when they were old enough to marry.

The boys' school which we attempted some time ago, was merely an experiment. The influence of their plan at ——— was here, the boys demanded pay as the boys at the ——— school got; we refused to give the least countenance to such a thing, and rather than yield at all, we disbanded the school at once. Brother Simpson and myself considered we would be actually doing the children a wrong, and the people also, by acceding to their desire. The brethren at ——— are heartily sorry that they ever commenced a school on such a plan, but they cannot get rid of it now. They have made some attempts at their out stations to start differently, but their plans at ——— are known, and they are compelled either to have no school or to give the pay. It would be necessary here as they found it at ———, if the children have a decent appearance in school, that part at least if their clothing be furnished them, but I will always be opposed to their receiving that, under the impression that it is pay for attending school.

Boarding-schools would be much better suited at present to the condition of things here than day schools. If children are merely brought into school during a part of the day, and allowed to run through the towns all the rest of the time, there would be but little prospect of benefiting them permanently. In town they would be brought under all kinds of corrupt influence.

Corisco, a healthy place—The best place for Educational efforts—Boarding-schools proposed.

I am well satisfied that persons coming directly to this island, whose health has not been exposed on the main land, will enjoy comparatively good health here. Here undoubtedly is the place for our main educational operations, and when it is needed, the place for our press. The people here have a wide influence on the main land, and boys are frequently brought here to live with them to get some knowledge of trade. Several times when I have been on the main land, I have been requested to bring boys to live at the mission to be taught. I intimated to the Board in a previous letter, that we could probably soon raise up native teachers here. In some respects they would be preferable, but I think now it would not be the best policy for our mission to wait for them. Several can now read, but I do not think it would be proper to give the instruction of the children into the hands of individuals who are not pious. Some of them might soon make assistants under pious and efficient principals.

I would propose to the Board that they establish here, as soon as practicable, two good boarding-schools, one male, and one female; and that one of them be in connexion with each of the two stations on this island, and under the supervision of the resident missionary at the respective stations.

If you can send out white teachers they would be much preferred, and more respected by the people....

[Speaking of the expense of these schools, Mr. Mackey says, "I have introduced the cultivation of the sweet potato from Gaboon, and it grows luxuriantly. We have also plantains, bananas, and cassada in abundance, and fresh fish of the finest quality can be procured at a small expense all the year. The cost of boarding schools, for boarding and clothing, may be estimated at $25 a year—perhaps not quite so much."]

Mr. Mackey concludes his letter thus: "It will be with great joy that I will welcome some additional labourers here, and I trust you will be at no loss either for men or means to uphold this mission. It ought not to languish. To my own mind, one of the most important fields is open here. If our Saviour has a people here, he will provide men and bless means to their salvation."

With our Saviour's command before us, to preach the gospel to every creature; with a most important field open before us in his providence; with the men in our ministry and the means for their support abundantly in the hands of our people—what seems wanting to the vigorous prosecution of this great work? What, but the out-pouring of the Spirit from on high, both on our ministers and our churches? And this great blessing is promised, in answer to the prayers of the people of God.

SIAM MISSION.

COMMUNICATION FROM DR. S. R. HOUSE.

Ceremonies at the Accession of the new King.

Bangkok, Siam, May 15th, 1851.

We have been permitted to-day to gaze on royalty enthroned in all the pomp of state. Our friends in republican America will, perhaps, be gratified with a description of the novel scenes we have witnessed. They were novel and interesting to us, for never before had any missionary been within the walls of the Royal Palace on any occasion; and now we were all invited by a special messenger from the King himself, to be present at a great ceremony of State, and to dine even at the palace as his Majesty's guests. Under the rule of the enlightened Prince who has just succeeded to the throne, our condition is certainly in some respects, at least, different from what it was under his late Majesty, who had become so strangely jealous of foreigners.

At an early hour in the morning, an officer was sent to conduct us to the palace, which stands on the east bank of the Meinan, about a mile above our residence. We landed amid a throng of princes' and nobles' boats, of all descriptions, and soon entered within the outer wall of the palace, continuous here with the wall of the city itself, and like that, built up of brick twenty-five feet high, by some fifteen feet perhaps, in thickness. Within this, again, another wall shut out the palace buildings, and we were led along between the two for some distance, having on either hand long lines of painted galleries or corridors, where hundreds on hundreds of men in the King's service were busy at their meals, till at last we came to a gateway that opened on a large square, dotted over with numerous little buildings, that served to protect pieces of artillery from the weather. Some of these cannon were of immense size; one was seen that was deemed to be full eighteen feet in length. Through lines of troops they were marshalling here, we passed on to a large open building in this royal arsenal, where we were received by Pya Wiset—a nobleman of Portuguese extraction—a general in his Majesty's service. Here we were joined by the few remaining European residents in Bangkok, and after some delay, were conducted through a double gate, lined with guards, into the principal inner court of the palace. The scene that now presented itself was peculiar and picturesque in the highest degree. We were in a vast quadrangle, adorned with trees and numerous ornamental structures, and surrounded by various buildings of strange oriental architecture; their many-storied roofs, and the glittering spire of the main royal edifice, being the most striking objects. The whole area before us was alive with thousands of the swarthy natives—all bareheaded as usual, and for the most part naked to the waist. Here and there among them were to be seen Buddhist priests, with their cumbrous yellow robes, or a Mohammedan, with his snow-white turban and garments, or a Chinese, perhaps, with his long braided queue twisted round his head. Soldiers in strange uniforms, with stranger weapons, some bearing three-pronged spears; some swords and shields; some bows and arrows; others again armed and equipped more after the manner of European troops—were either drawn up in long line, or were parading back and forth. At one end of the principal avenue, standing at their ease, under awnings of white cloth, were the royal elephants—huge creatures, decked with the richest trappings—at the other end were several horses elegantly caparisoned, their grooms standing by them. Now and then a prince would come by, preceded by lictors, and followed by a numerous train of servants, bearing his betel, his sword, umbrella, fan, &c., when the mass of forms before us would be bowed like a field of grain before the wind, till the great man had passed by. Some of the elephants were brought forward, each with gold netting over his head, and a cloth, rich with the same material, on his back. One was a noble animal, and evidently a favourite, though only the tip of one ear was white. Alas! for some years back the Siamese King has been destitute of what would have been his choicest possession, an elephant entirely white. But this one had a title of nobility—his huge tusks were ornamented each with three broad rings, full three fingers wide, of gold studded with gems, a retinue of servants in livery followed him, bearing on large silver trays bunches of bananas and fresh cut grass for the lordly beast's refreshment, while the people got down before him as if to some dignitary of the realm.

Chairs had been placed for us in the shade of some trees, and there we remained till about eleven A.M., when we received our summons to the hall of audience. Passing on through the guards, under the escort of Pya Wiset, by a flight of steps, we entered the portico. Our attention was here at once attracted by a row of enormous elephant tusks ranged four on a side, the curves of all pointing inwards. They were striking objects, indeed; so large, so white, so polished, so elegantly curved; the inner pair a perfect wonder for size. A large ornamented screen stood before the door by which we now entered; passing round this, we found ourselves in a large hall, crowded with all the nobility of the land. Each one had on a court dress, a wide-sleeved tunic of white gauze, girt about with a handsome sash, with gold fringe. We took the places assigned us, seating ourselves like the grandees around us, on the carpet-covered floor, with particular attention to the indispensable point of etiquette with the Siamese, to have our feet behind us, directed away from the presence.

We had now a brief space to look around. The apartment was a large one, oblong, over a hundred feet in length. The roof was supported by two ranges of large square brick pillars, six on a side; they, as well as the wall, painted in imitation of papering. Numerous chandeliers and lustres were suspended from the ceiling, while some poor mirrors and coarse pictures of Europeans in the costume of the last century, were the paltry adornments. But all the magnificence of the apartment was concentrated at its further extremity. A considerable portion of this was just then shut out from observation by a splendid pair of curtains, each high and wide, and one resplendent sheet of woven gold. Just in front of this was the throne, which stood on a little platform, itself six feet high to the seat. It was some four feet square, heavily covered with gold, and had a low gilt railing around the top, save just in front, where was a place large enough for one to seat himself. The ascent to it was by two or three steps. Over the throne was suspended a handsome canopy, composed of circular umbrellas, as it were, each of white cloth, with a gold border, arranged in a lessening series, several stories high. Numerous similar storied umbrellas, of divers colours, stood in stands on each side of the throne, with other like insignia of royalty. The most beautiful objects, however, were two trees, standing in tall porcelain vases, and each some seven feet high; the leaves and flowers of the one on the right made entirely of gold; of the other, on the left of the throne, of silver.

And now we heard a flourish of wind instruments, that betokened his Majesty's approach. The golden curtains slowly parted in the centre, and in walked, with a grave and solemn pace, a figure strangely but magnificently clad. A high conical crown of gold, sparkling with precious stones, was on his head. Over a shining vest, he wore a robe fairly glistening with gold and gems. In his hand, loaded with jewelled rings, (the diamond on his fore finger worth $10,000,) he held a sceptre like a golden staff. His feet were bare. Ascending the steps that led up to his throne, he seated himself; when the whole assembly, who were now lying prostrate on their knees and elbows, as if with one accord, raised the joined palms of their hands to their foreheads, and then bowed themselves quite to the floor. Thrice they thus in concert repeated this swaying their bodies back and forth. As requested, we joined in the triple bow, but only as far as our republican ideas would allow. The whole court continued in their attitude of worship, throughout the entire audience, lying bowed down on knees and elbows, with their faces looking to the floor. It was a strange spectacle—that prostrate throng—and their new crowned monarch, as he sat there, high in royal state, on his golden throne. It was not difficult for one to realize he was in the presence of the "lord of life" and property of millions, when he saw the highest officers of government themselves, with thousands and tens of thousands under their control, and the highest princes, as well as nobles, crouching like slaves at his feet. And even to the feet of royalty, nobility must not draw too near; for even the Prime Minister, who was nearest in front, was half a dozen yards distant.

We had expected to have witnessed the ceremonies of investing the new king with the crown and other insignia of royalty; but these ceremonies had taken place at an earlier hour of the morning, and in the inner apartments of the palace; so that it was rather the enthronement and first audience to which we were invited.

His Majesty had hardly taken his seat, when one of the Brahmans attached to the court commenced a chant, the nature of which we did not understand. It was soon taken up by another, on the other side of the throne. Then the Chief of the Royal Secretaries, who, with a small tree of gold by his side, was stationed in the centre of the hall, read off the title by which the new king is to be known, and invoked a blessing on it and him. It is "Somdet P'ra Paramendr Maha Mongkut." And now his Excellency, the Praklang, and other chief officers, formally delivered over to his Majesty the different possessions of the crown with which they had been entrusted by his predecessor—as the palace, the army, the royal elephants, &c., whereupon his Majesty, in receiving them, was pleased to address some very gracious words to his ministers and nobles. It pleased him, then, to take notice of the strangers present, and naming "the American missionaries," the Portuguese Consul, the other Europeans, and, I believe, also the Mussulman merchants who were there, he proceeded to speak of us. We were too far off to catch, save now and then, a word; nor did he address us directly, as court etiquette requires, his message to us was received by Pya Chulah, the chief of the interpreters, (received, as every thing from the king is, with the customary triple prostrations,) and then he, keeping his face still towards the throne, backed down, a la crab, on his hands and knees, to where we were, and transmitted it to Pya Wyset, who, in turn, in a low voice, communicated it to us. It was to this effect—"that we were not strangers—his Majesty had long been acquainted with the foreign gentlemen present; hence he had been pleased to invite us to grace the occasion with our presence. He was glad to see us. He desired us to be happy, and to go on with our respective pursuits as we had been doing. We need not fear, we need not be afraid. If we had any matters of business with him, they should receive attention. As a token of his consideration, he had ordered refreshments to be provided for us at the palace. As a further token, he had given orders to have distributed to each of us specimens of the new gold and silver coinage of his reign."

The only reply expected to this message was a bow; and soon after there was a like flourish of music as at the commencement of the audience, when his Majesty left the throne, and the golden curtains were drawn to again, closing him from our view. As he was leaving, the whole court, in concert as before, made thrice the same profound obeisance as when he entered; and then each, for the first time, ventured to sit upright.

I forgot to mention that when the curtains were drawn back as they were during the audience, they disclosed, a little behind the throne on which the king was seated, a still higher throne, with pillars sustaining a pyramidal roof or canopy. This was occupied temporarily then by an image of Buddh, before which wax tapers were burning, evincing, as did too many other things we saw, that Buddhism is still enthroned as the religion of state as much as ever.

Making our way out of the hall of audience, we were now conducted through a gateway into a small inner court of the palace. In an airy apartment here, we found a table set out in European style, chairs provided, &c. An adopted son of the king soon came to us here, to say that "his Majesty would have been glad to shake hands with us all, but Siamese customs not allowing it, he had sent him to do it for him. He desired us to accept of a gold and silver flower, with certain coins," with the stamp of the new reign upon them. Each of us was then presented with a gold salung, of the value of a quarter eagle, with a neat little flower of gold, &c., some five dollars worth of gold and silver in all. His Majesty after this came across us in another part of the palace, as he was going by, showering silver right and left among the people, as the custom is during the festivities of his coronation, and rained down his favours, then, too, upon our party, in the form of silver drops, with marked liberality. While waiting for dinner to be announced, we embraced the opportunity to visit the private chapel of the kings of Siam, a spacious temple, where are idol Buddhs of ivory and of alabaster, of precious gems, it is said, and of gold. And after a repast served up in European style, we returned by an early hour in the afternoon to our homes, with the sincerest wishes for the health and prosperity of him who had that day been established on the throne of his fathers; and for the peace and happiness of the nation over which God, in his all-ordering providence, had made him supreme ruler.

OBITUARY.

THE LAST HOURS AND DEATH OF MRS. BUSH, OF THE MISSION TO SIAM.

The Rev. S. Mattoon wrote the following narrative under date of July 31st, 1851. It will be read with deep interest.

Our last letters will have prepared you to hear that our dear sister, Mrs. Bush, is no longer with us. She has exchanged earth for heaven—earthly service for heavenly rewards—the uncertain and fleeting joys of this world for the sure and abiding bliss of the world to come.

She lingered, growing weaker and weaker under the wasting power of consumption, till the evening of July 23d, when she gently, sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. Her death is a severe blow to her bereaved husband, and to our mission, but we desire to put in in practice the lessons she taught by precept and example, and bow submissively under the stroke, saying, "It is the Lord, let him do what he will." We mourn not for her, but for ourselves. She has left us abundant reason to feel that for her to die was gain, and God has given us another proof that he will never leave nor forsake his children.

During her whole illness, Mrs. Bush was in a quiet, submissive frame of mind, truly desirable. She seemed to have no will of her own; what God appointed was best. Her language, in reference to her removal, was ever, "when God pleased, and how he pleased." Her Bible and hymn book were her constant companions while she was able to read, and the truths of the gospel grew more and more precious to her soul as she drew near the grave. Christ was her only hope, and in him she was able to trust with implicit faith. She spoke cheerfully of her approaching end, gave such directions as she thought necessary to her husband, and charged him not to grieve for her death. Some days previous to her decease, her husband asked her if she had any special views of the glories of heaven. She replied, "No, you know I never had a vivid imagination. It is enough for me to know that Jesus will be there, and I shall be with him." She added, "O, the wonders of redeeming grace; 'for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation.'"

For some days previous to her death she was evidently in the land of Beulah, in full view of the gates of the celestial city, waiting almost impatiently the summons to pass over the river. Two nights before her death, we gathered around her couch, thinking her end had come, but she revived again, and said, "I must tarry a little longer, but I thought I had gone. Oh, for patience to wait all my appointed time till my end come." Upon this occasion she expressed her feelings by such language as this; "Oh, the pain, the bliss of dying;" and "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?" A few hours before her death God appeared to pour special grace, light, and bliss into her soul. For nearly two hours, she talked almost incessantly, repeating such hymns as "Jesus, lover of my soul," and "Not all the outward forms on earth," &c., quoting and most aptly applying numerous passages of Scripture, speaking in raptures of the glories of redemption, and recalling with pleasure her missionary career, only regretting that she had not been more faithful in pointing every Siamese she met to Christ as the only Saviour. She expressed a strong desire that this deluded people might abandon a religion which had no power to bless, and believe in Christ who could make them happy even in death. I cannot refer particularly to even a few of the many interesting things which fell from her lips. In speaking of her death, she said she had prayed that it might be easy and peaceful, but if it were not, it would all be right; "Jesus said, 'not my will, but thine be done,' and I will say so too."

She seemed conscious of every advancing step into the river, and at every step found a firm foothold on the sure word of promise. As she felt the chill of its waters, she remarked that it was cold; but when her husband proposed to make efforts to restore the heat to her body, she said, "No, you can never make me warm again." Soon after, her sight failed her; she said, "there, I cannot see you any longer, I have done with you, but I see Jesus," and she seemed to set her face more resolutely toward the celestial city, and soon its light burst upon her spiritual vision, and she exclaimed, "How light it is!" and soon after, "How beautiful! beautiful!—one great beauty!" And again, after her voice had so far failed that we could not catch all her words, she exclaimed in a voice of triumph, "I mount! victory! victory!" And after her voice had again become indistinct, she broke forth singing clearly, "Alleluia! Alleluia! Alleluia!" She had caught the song of the New Jerusalem—a song which with her shall never end. Words can but faintly describe this glorious death-bed scene. I shall ever regard it among the most precious privileges of my life that I was permitted to witness it. I would record it as a new testimony of God's faithfulness to his people. Let no one imagine that their death-bed would be any the less happy for leaving home and kindred to labour and die among the heathen.

Pray for us, dear brethren, that this interesting dispensation of God's providence may be sanctified to us all. Yours, in the labours and trials of the gospel,

S. Mattoon.

A MISSIONARY TEACHER.

OBITUARY NOTICE OF MRS. MORRISON.

Although months have passed since the sudden death of this valuable missionary lady, it is not yet too late to do for her memory what circumstances hither prevented. This is due to that grace that made her what she was; it is due to the church in whose service she was; and it is due to that important class of missionary labourers of whom little is said or known—the teachers in our mission schools—that the people of God may know them better and pray for them more.

Mrs. Susan Dutcher Morrison was born November 25th, 1815, near Tarrytown, New York. She grew up under the ministrations of the late Rev. Thomas Smith, pastor of the Reformed Dutch churches of Unionville and Tarrytown. She had the benefit of early religious instruction in the family and the Bible class—there being then no Sabbath-school there. Often did she speak of the interest with which in her very childhood she listened to religious conversation between her father and a still surviving Christian friend, to whose instructions in the Bible class she always felt deeply indebted for that solid substratum of Scripture truth, upon which the grace of God reared the well-proportioned structure of her faith and practice. At an early age, probably about thirteen, at the commencement of a revival still remembered as "the great revival," she sought and found the Saviour, and united with the church. Her mind more quickly than is usual became calmly confident in the possession of faith that rested on Christ's finished work alone, as all-sufficient. From the time of her conversion, onward, she took a deep interest in the missionary work, and throughout her Christian course, she would probably at any time have welcomed a call of Providence to share its labours and trials. In the church in which for many years her lot had been cast, (the Carmine street church, in New York city,) she was regarded by the pastor and session as a most efficient helper. Its Sabbath-school and missionary associations will long remember the zeal and ability with which she threw into them all her energies. Her remarkable skill and success in the instruction and management, and especially the religious training of children, multitudes can bear witness to. This was a work for which God had in a very eminent degree qualified her. It was this that led to her appointment by the Board in the summer of 1848, as a teacher in Spencer Academy, where she arrived in November following, and immediately entered on her labours. During the summer and fall of 1850, these labours were much interrupted by ill health. She became better however, and on December 25th, was united in marriage to Mr. Samuel Morrison; and with prospects of augmented usefulness she entered anew upon her duties, in which her husband was associated with her. Six weeks afterwards, she was suddenly summoned to the rest of her Lord, in the way already narrated in the May number of the Record—after three hours of suffering on the road side, by night, in the forest.

How tenderly she was loved, how highly valued, we know from the language of deep and unaffected grief that reached us from those who laboured there with her—from the deep gloom with which it seemed to enshroud the mission, and from the tears shed by her pupils and the other boys of the Institution at the announcement of her death, and as they followed her remains to their last resting-place in the "forest grave yard." There they lie on missionary ground, by the side of a sister in Christ to whom she had been many years strongly and tenderly attached, just where she had often expressed a wish to have them laid.

As a missionary teacher she excelled. Thirty of those Indian boys were placed under her care on her arrival, she, entirely ignorant of their language, and they, with but three exceptions, ignorant of hers, to be taught and trained both as to their heads and hearts, and habits. The task before her was indeed a vast one, and she felt it, and with true humility trembled, and even wept over it in view of felt insufficiency; but she entered upon it with all her might, and very soon the most happy results were manifest, in the decided and rapid improvement of her pupils both in knowledge and character. As she progressed in her work, her love to it and to her "dear" boys, became more and more ardent and all-absorbing. The self-sacrificing zeal, the steady, untiring, indomitable energy—and the singleness of purpose with which she pursued her proper missionary work, it was a privilege to witness; and these qualities have made her missionary career though short, yet bright and fraught with blessing. The main elements of this success were three.

In her general character, grace had so moulded nature as eminently to fit her for usefulness. Strong feelings and warm affections, under the control of a sound, discriminating judgment, combined with a self-sacrificing spirit, produced great force of character, and a persevering energy in duty that often gave her a prominence from which she shrunk. It was owing to this that she to an unusual degree stamped her own impress upon her pupils. Her greatest excellencies, as also her infirmities, arose from an unusual combination of great decision of character, with great delicacy of feeling; and it was especially in the moulding, modifying, and correcting influence of divine grace on these points of her character, that that grace in her case was most signally manifest. For such were these peculiarities, that while they must have rendered her unhappy without it, they under it became the very chief sources of her influence and usefulness.

Her religious knowledge was remarkably full and clear. She seized hold of all the great doctrines of the Bible, as held by our church, with a strong grasp, that bade defiance to the arts of error, and that made them her firm support in trial and consolation in sorrow, and a steadily operative and powerful motive to duty. Strong as were her impulses, we have seldom known one who more habitually spoke and acted under the steady governance of religious principles, instead of mere feeling; principles that drew their power from her clear, strong, and impressive views of divine truth. She was an example of the vast influence and importance of such an early religious training as fills the mind with clear views of the great system of Bible truth in its suitableness to the felt wants of a sinner's soul; and her case is one affording great encouragement to parents, teachers, and pastors to spare no pains to secure this.

There was yet one other thing that, throwing around her character an air of cheerful spirituality, of vital godliness, gave much of its real beauty and power. She had for many years been accustomed to regard death as at hand, and to preserve a posture of habitual preparation for it. Of a large family of brothers and sisters, only one half-brother survived—all the rest had become the victims of some form of pulmonary disease. From the way in which we have often heard her speak of it, she seemed to have the words of her Saviour ever sounding in her ears—"Surely, I come quickly." And though, when in health her kind spirit often shrunk from the last conflict, still we have reason to believe, that through the strength of Him that died for her, she feared it not. She had her seasons of darkness—but the general tenour of her experience was, she was waiting for her Lord's coming; and feeling that it would be soon, she was stimulated to live to some purpose while she lived. Hence, "whatsoever her hand found to do, she did it with her might!" Her very weakness became thus the main element of her power. And as it was the habitual posture of her life, so we doubt not it was the predominant feeling of her filial longing heart in death, though the suddenness and severity of the stroke by which the Master called her to himself, precluded any expression of it.—Even so, come Lord Jesus.

Such was this excellent woman. Even this brief sketch suggests important instruction to us all. With a single remark, it may be closed:

Let it bespeak for that important class of missionary helpers, of which Mrs. Morrison was one, our sympathies and prayers. We fear these persons are too often overlooked. They occupy indeed a humbler sphere than the ordained missionary, for the most part, but one of great toil and self-denial, and whose importance cannot easily be overrated. It is a task of no small difficulty to train young minds and hearts from civilized and Christian firesides; but when they are heathen minds and hearts, or nearly so, it becomes one which taxes all the skill, and tries all the faith and patience of the most accomplished and devoted Christian teachers, and draws from them many a sigh and tear of anguish. They greatly need our prayers—they should feel that they have our sympathies;—and it will cheer their hearts and nerve their energies to greater and more self-denying efforts, to feel that they are specially remembered at the throne of grace by the people of God.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I bequeath to my Executors the sum of dollars in trust, to pay over the same in after my decease, to the person who, when the same shall be payable, shall act as Treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, to be applied to the uses and purposes of said Board, and under its direction; and the receipt of the said Treasurer shall be a full and legal acquittance of my said Executors, for the same.

Certificates, of Honorary Membership, on the payment of Thirty Dollars; of Honorary Directors, One Hundred Dollars.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 265 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, colportage, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to Rev. JOHN LEYBURN, D.D., Corresponding Secretary and General Agent.

Orders for books, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. JOSEPH P. ENGLES, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. ENGLES, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M. D. Treasurer.

WE ALSO MOURN.

In common with the Church at large, this Board has reason for mourning over the departure of that venerated man of God, the Rev. Archibald Alexander. Dr. Alexander was one of the oldest, warmest, and most useful friends this Board has ever had. He had been its President from its organization to the day of his death. We have reason to know that he felt an ever-increasing interest in its operations. His remarkable appreciation of the power of the press, and his love for the system of truth which he himself taught from his theological chair, and from the pulpit for so many years, led him to place a very high estimate on the labours of the Board of Publication. He was always ready with his lips and his pen to contribute to its efficiency and success. The system of colportage, which was engrafted on the Board a few years since, met with his most hearty co-operation. When the Corresponding Secretary first visited Princeton to engage the students of the Seminary as colporteurs, the venerated Professor himself took the Seminary catalogue, and carefully pointed out such as he thought suitable, and used his personal influence to induce them to engage in the work.

By far the greater portion of what Dr. Alexander has published has been issued through this Board. The first book we ever published was his "Way of Salvation Familiarly Explained," a work written for children, and of which thirteen thousand copies have been circulated. His work on "Religious Experience" has been a closet companion to Christians of every name; it has reached a circulation of 15,500 copies. The "Evidences of Christianity"—regarded as the best work of the size extant on that subject—has been adopted as a text-book in literary institutions under the care of other denominations, and still has an undiminished sale: 11,000 copies have been printed. The "Practical Sermons," a larger and more expensive work, has attained a circulation of 4000, in the short time that has elapsed since it came from the press.

The remaining books and tracts from the same gifted pen, and the number of copies printed by the Board, are as follows: Divine Guidance, 6,000 copies; A Brief Compend of Bible Truth, 6,600 copies; The Canon of the Old and New Testaments, (recently published,) 1,000; Universalism False and Unscriptural, (do.,) 2,000; and the Log College, (in press.) TRACTS.—The Duty of Catechetical Instruction, 3,000; A Treatise on Justification by Faith, 3,000; Christ's Gracious Invitation to the Labouring and Heavy Laden, 15,000; The Immediate Choice, 6,000; The Refuge of Lies, 5,000; Ruth the Moabitess, or the Nature of True Religion, 5,000; Love to an Unseen Saviour, 5,000; and A Dialogue between a Presbyterian and a "Friend," 2,000.

The total number of pages from Dr. Alexander's pen, issued by the Board of Publication, is sixteen millions, twenty thousand, five hundred!

The reader will observe how large a portion of these works are, like the preaching of the venerated author, on practical, experimental religion. How extensively and powerfully they have preached the blessed gospel all over the land, is more than any human mind can tell, but the great good they have already accomplished is but a drop in the bucket compared with the long and useful work which they are yet to do. The spirit which indited them has indeed fled from its clay tabernacle, the hand which wrote them has been palsied in death, but in these works the venerated author still lives, and through these pages he continues to speak, and will speak on till time shall end.

Dr. Alexander's example is a powerful illustration of the importance of using the press as a means of doing good. The results of his spiritual, searching, heart-stirring preaching, are immeasurable; his influence in instructing and forming the characters of a large portion of the ministers of the Presbyterian Church, has probably been greater than that of any other man of his times; but when the revelations of the last day are made known, we feel assured that the good he has done, through his numerous and admirable writings, will be found not to have been second to that accomplished in any other department of his invaluable labours. The Board of Publication is most happy to be the agency for storing up and scattering abroad the treasures of such a spirit as was that of its late and lamented President, Archibald Alexander.

A VOICE FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Our readers will, we are sure, participate with us in the pleasure afforded by the following extract from a letter we have just received from a distinguished Congregational friend in the "land of the Pilgrims."

"I talked with an aged man yesterday," says the writer, "declining in a consumption, and who was for many years a deacon of the Congregational church in ——, Conn., and to whom I gave, a few weeks since, a number of your doctrinal tracts. As I was about to leave, he inquired about your Board of Publication, and asked if any other denomination was associated with you in the publication of your books. I replied, 'No;' and asked him how he liked them. He said, 'Exceedingly. They were what he had longed for, and that they had refreshed him greatly.' He added, 'a member of the church in —— had read them, and with great satisfaction.' He inquired for more, and, as he is poor, (his aged wife and daughter were in the room making shirts,) I told him I would give him as many as he wanted, and as he could find readers in the church at ——, whose pastor has but little sympathy with our doctrines. You must be cheered by such blessed fruit of your bounty in the land of the Pilgrim Fathers. I felt myself abundantly repaid for all my pains from the first, in having been the humble servant of the Lord in giving 'a portion of meat' to his aged, and famished, and waiting disciple."

A LETTER INSTEAD OF A SPEECH.

A most excellent brother, who spent several years in circulating the publications of this Board, and whose modesty is only equalled by his worth, has sent us the following, as a substitute for a speech which he was not bold enough to make. His testimony confirms what we have often stated as to the kind and fraternal appreciation which our work is receiving from brethren in other departments of Zion.

"Dear Sir—I listened with pleasure to your remarks before the Synod. Were I blessed with 'the gift o' the gab,' I might have been tempted to make some statements in confirmation of what was said by yourself; but I am not thus favoured. As one wrote me a few days since, 'you can write, but you cannot talk; you can drive the quill, but your tongue is not hung in the middle, &c., &c.' Hence I thought it best for me to be silent. However, I will now write a few lines.

The particular point on which I would have spoken is the acceptableness of our books to other denominations of Christians. During my agency of four years, I visited many churches not in our connection. Reformed Dutch, Associate Reformed, Associate, Congregational, New School Presbyterian, &c., &c. I found no more warm and cordial reception from our own pastors and people than from many in the bodies above named. Some of our Dutch and Associate brethren hailed with joy my visit, and did all in their power to promote the sale of our books; and this is also true of our New School and Congregational brethren, &c. Even before my visit, one Dutch pastor was making arrangements to procure the Congregational Library, published by our Board; others engaged personally in the circulation of our books, and the largest sale effected by any one volunteer, was by a sister in the Reformed Dutch Church.

New School Ministers buy and circulate our books; and one of them who was formerly among the most ultra, expressed a wish that our distinctive books might be introduced among his people; 'for,' said he, 'our people have been fed on milk and water so long that they are just prepared to be led away by any designing proselyter;' and his son spent several days in selling our books. Recently, our Psalms and Hymns have been introduced into a New School church with general satisfaction; and the Great Supper, introduced into the families, has been read with delight. This is also true of our tracts, and one of them, 'Musgrave on the Decrees,' has been blessed to the removal of doubts from the mind of an interesting young lady, so that she has since joined a Presbyterian church.

Such facts may be familiar to you, sir; they confirm the statements made by you before Synod, and in this view, though not novel, may be interesting. There can be no doubt that this Board is growing in favour, not only with our own churches, but others—and we may say, with both God and man; nor can there be a doubt that it is destined to do a great and good work for our Church and for other churches, for our country and for the world. And though I have seen some hard service while labouring in its behalf; and received, I suppose, permanent injury to my health, I do not, on the whole, regret it; my only regret is that I have not been able to do more for it. I regard the Board of Publication as one of our most interesting, useful, and efficient agencies for good; and while I live, I hope to do what I can to promote its interests and secure its prosperity. The Lord bless and prosper it.

I hope you will pardon the freedom of this letter, especially as it is a substitute—a poor one—for a speech; and though poor, it is no doubt better than the speech would have been, for I am no speech maker—I'd rather do than talk. But then some must talk and others work. Let others do the talking; I'll be content with the doing. But then I do but little—alas, how little!

As ever, yours truly."

THE "GERMAN REFORMED MESSENGER" ON THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The following remarks from the German Reformed Messenger will show that the principles upon which this Board is founded are approved in other branches of the Church of Christ, and that the necessity for a distinctive religious literature is becoming more and more apparent.

"This Board," says the Messenger, "is accomplishing a great and truly laudable work, in issuing from its press, at reasonable prices and in the very best style, the flower of practical Christian literature. It has probably originated in the sense of a want which is also becoming more and more to be felt in our own Church, namely, the want of a denominational literature. However this expression may, in the opinion of some, savour of sectarianism, yet we firmly believe that a Christian denomination, no matter how well founded and supplied with means of improvement in other respects, cannot prosper to a very high degree without a sound and well approved denominational literature; and that no institution of a general character can fully and successfully supply this want. We have never felt inclined to bigotry, and would not have any of our people exclude from their firesides and libraries what has been written by other approved authors than German Reformed; but we maintain that it is the duty of every church member first of all to patronize the publications of their own Church. When shall we have a more extended denominational literature?"

A FRIEND TO THE GERMANS.

An anonymous friend in a neighbouring city encloses us a five dollar note in the following letter which will explain the donation together with the views of the author, and perhaps lead others to think and do likewise. The German works either already published, or now in press by the Board, are the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, The Pearl of Days, (one of the prize essays on the Sabbath,) The Three Last Things, or Death, Judgment and Eternity, and Dr. Baker's Address to Mothers.

BALTIMORE, November 12th, 1851.

Rev'd and Dear Sir—In looking over the last No. of the "Home and Foreign Record," my attention was arrested by an article on the subject of the "German Population" of this country—increasing daily by the numbers emigrating from their "Fatherland," and bringing along with them, as the groundwork of their future lives, the erroneous views inculcated by education and strengthened by the customs of their native country.

The very pertinent remarks contained in the article referred to, are worthy of serious consideration, and a subject recommending itself to the notice of all who feel an interest in the cause of Christ, in bringing to the knowledge of these poor Germans the "glad tidings of great joy" proclaimed in the free salvation promised through the Saviour to all that believe. This will secure to them and their children not simply a refuge from that tyranny from which they have fled, in sheltering them under the glorious banner of liberty in the land of the free, but that light, life and liberty which the Christian alone may enjoy; and not merely that freedom they have sought in coming amongst us, which their vague conception has pictured as a species of libertinism, and so engendering a consequent spirit of infidelity, endangering both our religious and civil privileges. Alienated from God, estranged from their native soil, and ignorant of our language, with false ideas of our free institutions, without the means of learning the truth and judging for themselves, they are fit subjects for any kind of fanaticism; which, if not checked, may at some future day manifest itself with a violence that may not easily be remedied.

A wide field is here, and the object of the writer is to call upon his Christian brethren to adopt some measures whereby the pernicious influence of infidel publications may be counteracted, and this possibly could be in some considerable degree accomplished by the extensive circulation, among the Germans, of tracts and religious newspapers published in their own dialect, that they may be brought to know the "God of our fathers," and to serve him as they did, in spirit and in truth—a Father to all who fear him and hope in his mercy, but a consuming fire to all who do not.

I would suggest that every one approving of this preparatory step subscribe as liberally as their circumstances will admit of to this object. Enclosed please find $5 to be thus appropriated, with the hope that others who are better able will contribute liberally to this great and important work.

A FRIEND OF THE GERMANS.

BOOKS PUBLISHED IN THE UNITED STATES.

The number of books published in the United States for the year ending July 1851, was 1298, containing 213,000 pages: 817 were published in New York; 223 in Philadelphia; and 203 in Boston. The number in quarto was 23; in octavo, 291; in duodecimo, 547, &c. Novels, the most unprofitable kind of reading, form by far the largest class of these publications. Of theological works, there were 170; biographical, 96; scientific, 50; mathematical, 17; classical books, 7; dictionaries and treatises (not grammars) on language, 13; school-books, 50; legal works, 43; medical works, 47; agricultural, 20; practical mechanics, 18; artistic, 6; architectural, 8; political, 16; commercial, 12.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

EARS OF THE SPIRITUAL HARVEST; or, Narratives of the Christian Life. 12mo. 180 pages. Price, 45 cents.

We have here a very entertaining volume of sketches from real life, by such men as Dr. Thomas Guthrie, the Rev. Frederick Chalmers, and other Scottish divines. The object of the book is to illustrate the work of conversion, and the inner life of the Christian, by the history of individuals. The narratives are remarkable for their air of truthfulness, graphic power of delineation, discriminating casuistry, rich scriptural illustrations, and thoroughly evangelical spirit. It is a book which will interest, and ought to profit, all classes of readers. The Pastor of Resolis, the Ransomed One, Helen McKenzie, Luke Heywood, the Soldier of Fort George, and The Highland Kitchen Maid, are among the best of the sketches. An exquisitely engraved title-page, and a Country Minister in a Snow Storm, by Darley, add no little to the attractions of the volume.

THE LIFE OF COL. GARDINER, who was slain at the Battle of Prestonpans, Sept. 21st, 1745. By Philip Doddridge, D.D. 18mo. pages 228. Price, 27 and 33 cents.

A work from the author of the "Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul," would need no introduction to evangelical Christians of any name, even had it been before unknown; but in the Life of Col. Gardiner, very many will recognize an old and valued acquaintance, with which their spirits have often held communion. No religious biography, of the same compass, is richer in material than this. Col. Gardiner's valour as an officer in the British army, his career of fashionable dissipation, his remarkable conversion, his eminent piety, and his death on the battlefield, furnish a great variety of incident, whilst his very peculiar religious experience edifies and instructs, This book has long been known and prized by the older generation of Christians, and should be put into the hands of those who are rising up to take their places. The present edition is the most beautiful we have seen, and is illustrated by a fine mezzotint portrait.

CONFESSIONS OF A CONVERT FROM BAPTISM IN WATER TO BAPTISM WITH WATER, from the Second English edition. 18mo. 180 pages. Price 24 and 30 cents.

If our readers are in want of a pleasant and effective medicine for minds troubled on the mode of Baptism, we very earnestly commend to them this little work. Often as the arena of the Baptist controversy has been trodden, we have seen no knight upon the field who used his weapons with more good nature, dexterity, and effectiveness, as to execution among the people, than this champion who has "come up out of the water." We shall be surprised if these "Confessions" do not meet with an extensive demand.

THE CONVERTED UNITARIAN. A short memoir of E——— E———. A patient sufferer, who entered into rest, August 13th, 1825. 18mo. 160 pages. Price 22 and 28 cents.

In this well-written narrative we have the history of the daughter of evangelical pious parents, who was afterwards thrown amongst Unitarians and imbibed their sentiments, of the subsequent struggles of her mind between truth and error, her ultimate conviction of the Divine character of Christ and of the necessity and efficacy of his atoning work, the sustaining grace of God in her toils and sufferings, and finally her triumphant death. It is a volume full of sweet, heavenly piety, and well adapted to do good in several directions.

THE CRIPPLE, THE MOUNTAIN IN THE PLAIN, AND TO A BOY ANXIOUS ABOUT HIS SOUL. 18mo. 36 pages. Price 12 cents.

The beautiful pictorial frontispiece, representing the Cripple, is itself enough to make our young readers wish for this little volume. But it contains better things than this beautiful picture, as they will find when they read it.

STILL WATERS, or Refreshment for the Saviour's Flock at Eventide, by the Rev. James Smith, author of "The Believer's Daily Remembrancer. 32mo. 188 pages. Price 25 cents.

GREEN PASTURES FOR THE LORD'S FLOCK, by the same author. Same size and price.

These are selections of texts of Scripture, one for the morning, and the other for the evening of every day in the year. Appended to each passage is a verse from some sacred lyric, and a pertinent practical observation.

IN THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.

The Pearl of Days—one of the Prize Essays on the Sabbath. 18mo. 68 pages. Price 15 cents.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

Varieties.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO MINISTERS.—Dr. Judson was at his station six years before he baptized a single convert. After three of these years had elapsed, he was asked, in view of the little apparent progress, what evidence he had of ultimate success. "As much," he replied, "as there is a God who will fulfil all his promises." This faith had not grasped a shadow. Thirty-one years had elapsed since his first baptism, and now seventy churches, averaging one hundred members each, were exhibited.

A GOOD WAY TO SAVE MONEY.—Judge Parsons recently said, "If the city and county of Philadelphia could appropriate the sum of $50,000 annually for five years for missionary purposes, more than that amount would be saved to the people, in the sustenance of paupers, the administration of law, and the pay of police officers."

DR. ROBINSON, the Oriental scholar and traveller, is to sail for Palestine in December, to make additional researches of importance in respect to the topography of the Holy Land.

BISHOP PAYNE, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has spent fourteen years in Africa, has preached at least four thousand sermons in thirty or forty different places, and has not been interrupted by ill health a single Sabbath.

A FRENCH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, in connection with the New School, has been formed at St. Louis, composed of twenty-five members. Rev. Francis Mitchell, from Switzerland, is their minister.

PARSONAGES.—The Presbytery of Baltimore have resolved to endeavour to raise $500 annually, towards the erection of parsonages in their vacant churches.

RAILROAD SABBATH-KEEPING.—The Vermont Central Railroad has lately issued a regulation prohibiting all access to the shops and depots on Sunday, and also all running of cars on that day, except in cases of necessity, to be determined by the Superintendent.

ANOTHER.—The directors of the Long Island Railroad have resolved to discontinue the practice of running trains on the Sabbath—to the great satisfaction of all good citizens.

THE GREAT METHODIST CHURCH CASE.—The decision in this case, delivered by Judge Nelson in the U. S. Circuit Court at New York, settles the dispute, by giving a portion of the property now in the hands of the Methodist Church, North, to the Methodist Church, South. The decision of the Court is, that the separation of the Church took place in pursuance of the action of the competent ecclesiastical authority—by the action of the founders of the fund themselves, and the beneficiaries falling within the new organization have not forfeited the character which entitles them to its enjoyment. The complainants are entitled to their share of the produce of the book concern; and a decree will be ordered accordingly. Whether the fund shall be administered by an application of the produce pro rata, or by an apportionment of the capital, are questions reserved until the settlement of the decree. The value of the fund is $750,000. From the recent report of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, it appears that the sales for the last twelve months were more than $200,000, being an increase of $65,000 over the previous year, and exceeded all former years. The profits on the new Hymn Book were $47,461. The Christian Advocate and Journal has a circulation of from 25,000 to 29,000. The Missionary Advocate, 20,000. The Sunday School Advocate, 65,000, with a yearly sale of Sunday School Books amounting to $5,000. The Quarterly Review has 3000 subscribers.

OF THE

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME III. No. 1. | PHILADELPHIA, JANUARY, 1852. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

HOW WILL YOU SPEND THE YEAR 1852?

This is an important question. You may not spend the year just begun, in time at all. A very small portion of it may elapse before, to you at least time shall be no more. When the next New Year arrives, bringing joy to many hearts, your's may have been for months before cold and pulseless in the dust, and the going out of the old year, and the coming in of the new, be alike unheeded in your long and lonely sleep. Who knows but that the reader whose eye now falls upon these lines may not already have entered upon the year whose end he shall not see? If so, where will you spend the year —part of it in time, the other, and probably the greater part, in eternity. Think of your so soon being in eternity—the land of spirits, the land of retribution for the things of life, the land where the state once fixed cannot be changed, the land where the great truths which pertain to God, to Christ, to salvation, as well as to the soul's immortal loss, are felt realities. Are you ready for an entrance into that mysterious, solemn, spirit-land?

How do you purpose to spend the year, if life be spared? As the last? This might be doing better than in former years, but does the last satisfy you? In looking back over its sanctuary and closet privileges, its public and private duties, its reading, its praying, its heart-watching and heart-keeping, its kindly benevolence, and its active labours for the Saviour and perishing souls, do you see no cause for regret that nothing has been left undone, and nothing badly done—are you satisfied that 1852 shall be a perfect counterpart of 1851? When that midnight bell rung out the knell of the year just dead, could you from your heart have uttered the prayer, "Lord, let the year begun be but as well and faithfully spent as that just gone?" Or did not the notes which tolled out of life the dying year, wake up in your soul unfeigned regrets that so many of those moments, now for ever gone, had run to waste, that so many priceless privileges had been allowed to pass unimproved?

Will you not strive to spend the year 1852, so that it shall bear to the judgment, and to your own conscience, a better report than any one which has preceded it. If a Christian at all, why not be a Christian in earnest? Why compromise with the world, and sin, and self, when your happiness, your usefulness, your high and holy obligations to God and to his Son, demand an entire, cordial, cheerful, obedience. The beginning of a year is a favourable time for laying aside what has been evil, and seeking that which is good. Reader, with this year begin to live your Christian life anew. Seek the grace which cometh from above, to guide you, keep you, strengthen you, help you. Walk with God, walk in the footsteps of the Saviour, walk under the teachings of the Spirit, be ready for every good word and work, and then the year begun will be a year rich in its results and rewards both in time and in eternity.

"IN MAJOREM DEI GLORIAM."

"FOR THE GREATER GLORY OF GOD."

This is a truly Christian motto. It expresses a truly Christian aim. It reveals the purpose of all true Christian labour. It is the high end of the whole scheme of Redemption. In its beginning and its end—its wonderful inception and glorious consummation the gospel ministers to the "greater glory of God."

Yet this motto, so expressive of what is good and true, has flamed for centuries on the banner of the most unscrupulous, crafty, and energetic of the enemies of the Church of God. It is the motto of the Society of Jesus—the right arm of the Papacy in her warfare against the truth. And wherever the Jesuit has set himself to do battle against the word and Church of the living God—wherever, as in the days of Pascal, he has busied himself in uprooting the foundations of morality and making the laws of purity and honesty of none effect—wherever he has used his skill in dashing the counsels of kings and statesmen—wherever, in the day of his power, he has stained the earth with the blood of the saints, or in the day of defeat bent a supple knee to the authority he hated, and would fain have destroyed—wherever he has lurked and plotted against righteousness, holiness and truth, it has all been "in majorem Dei gloriam"—for the greater glory of God. A hypocrisy that is almost fearful, thus crowns, not unbecomingly, audacious and consummate wickedness.

But this motto is a good one, and its base uses do not impair its goodness. It is excellent for all those who are engaged in the missionary work of the Church. Church extension may be contemplated from two different points of view, and in two different lights. It is the enlargement of the whole Church, the visible kingdom of the Redeemer, or it is the enlargement of a particular church—a branch of the great kingdom. Our danger is that we are prone to sink the former in the latter, and forget the church in the sect. When we thus reduce and narrow our aim, we let in the thousand influences of sectarianism to corrupt the pure work of God. We labour to build up the temple of the Lord, because we say in our hearts, "the temple of the Lord—the temple of the Lord, are we." Thus our anxieties and pains terminate wholly on the body of which we are members, and do so because we are its members, and our feelings degenerate in the end into an intense form of selfishness. The loyalty to our own church, which is proper when properly subordinated to other feelings, by becoming paramount, becomes evil.

The Church of God, blood-bought, and sanctified by the Spirit, is for the glory of God. Every stone that is laid upon her tried and sure foundation—every scheme that is formed for her increase, should be "for the greater glory of God." High aims are the parents of noble endeavours. In the Church they will save us from the petty spirit engendered by the rivalry of sects. Presbyterian is a good name, but Christian is a better; and the Christian is commanded to do all things for the glory of God. This brings our feelings into unison with those of Christ. He lived to show the glory of his Father unto men. It brings our purposes into agreement with the grand purpose which the universe is fulfilling. It exists to make manifest the declarative glory of God.

Brethren, let us silently adopt the motto which the Jesuit has appropriated, but not spoiled, and lift up high before us as the arm of our missionary work, "the greater glory of God." M. B. G.

AN EXHORTATION.

Jas. iv. 7, 8.—Submit yourselves therefore to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you.

We are here warned against several evils, among others pride, v. 1—5. We are cautioned against this, because God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble, v. 6. God is the giver of grace —the God of grace;—hence the exhortations:

I. Submit to God:

1. Submit to his will, and be resigned;
2. Submit to his law, and be obedient;
3. Submit to his gospel, and be humble:

The sinner should submit, and become reconciled; the saint should submit, and become holy.

II. Resist the devil:

The devil is our enemy, God is our friend; hence we are to submit to the one, and resist the other:

1. Resist him when he would excite us to murmur;
2. When he would excite us to pride;
3. To worldly conformity;
4. To put off the soul's concerns:

If we resist him, he will flee, for, like all sinners, he is a great coward,

"—— and trembles, when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

III. Draw nigh to God:

This will protect us from the devil:

1. Draw nigh in reading his word;
2. In meditation;
3. Prayer—secret, family, social, public;
4. In his house and ordinances;
5. In our daily walk—walk with God, as one of old:

And he will draw nigh to us:

1. To pardon us;
2. To encourage us;
3. To bless us;

Remark:—Let us take these exhortations to ourselves:

1. Submit to God;
2. Resist the devil;
3. Draw nigh to God;

And we may then claim the promises annexed to them. W. J. M.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.

Treasurer—Mr. Samuel D. Powel.
Address, Mission Rooms, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.
Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.
William Rankin, Jr. Mission House, 23 Centre street, New York.

NOTICE TO MISSIONARIES.

Owing to large drafts upon our Treasury for the payment of missionaries in much need, particularly those in the western portion of our country, we have not been able, as promptly as usual, to remit to those who have been accustomed to receive their pay from this office. This will account to our missionaries for the delay. We must still ask a little further indulgence of those not absolutely in need, until we meet those more pressing, and due some time since. We are making every possible effort to replenish our Treasury, and thus meet all our claims as they fall due, and as this is the season of the year when the most of our churches make their contributions to this Board, we have good reason to hope that we will be successful.

HOW IT WORKS.

It is not to be expected that in every particular, either the policy, or practice of any, or all of our Boards, will meet with the unanimous approbation of our Church. Scattered as it is, over such a wide-spread territory, embracing in the great Presbyterian family so much intelligence and independence of thought, and involving so many local interests, we are reasonably to suppose that occasionally there will be differences of opinion as to the best course to be pursued in carrying out any of the great operations of our Church. The beauty of our system is, not only the harmonious blending and mutual assistance of each branch of our benevolent operations, but that also, in all these different branches is to be found the embodiment of the mature opinions of the whole Church. All our Boards are but the constituted agencies of our Church, and are equally dependent upon it for their vitality and efficiency. Let but its confidence and interest be withdrawn, and every branch of our benevolent operations would be enervated, and their power and influence for ever gone. We rejoice that ours are ecclesiastical organizations, watched over and carefully guarded by our whole Church, and responsible to it for the manner in which these sacred trusts are discharged. Here is our confidence and guarantee, and none need fear that any course of action either will, knowingly, or can be pursued, which the Church, in its sober judgment, will not approve.

The general policy of any institution may commend itself to all, and yet in its practical workings there may be honest differences of opinion. These can only be settled after a fair and impartial trial, testing fully the wisdom of any given course, and adopting or rejecting it as may seem best. But there are instances in which our Boards may be shut up to a certain course of action, which, under other circumcumstances, would not, to the same extent, be adopted. In all such cases the Boards must exercise the inherent power which they possess, and judge for themselves, with all the facts before them, what changes are to be made in order to carry on efficiently the great work which is respectively committed to them—setting forth fully in their annual reports to the General Assembly the reason and necessity for such action.

Take as an illustration of these remarks, the present financial state of the Board of Missions, and the consequent absolute necessity of still more carefully guarding an increase of its liabilities. In the opening providences of God, new and immense, as well as exceedingly important fields were presented to this Board for cultivation. All these territories, together with our already great and increasing fields, called for immediate efforts and watchful care. The Board were not slow to mark this providence, or to follow its leadings; and relying upon our whole Church for support, they have gone forward, occupying many very important points, and preaching the everlasting gospel to many perishing souls. The liabilities of the Board were consequently largely increased, and had there been a corresponding increase of funds the present embarrassment never could have arisen. But such has not been the case. Notwithstanding all the appeals and efforts that have been made, the whole amount of funds at the disposal of the Board are less to-day than they were at this time one year ago. And even should our most sanguine expectations of increase this year be fully realized, it would not justify the ordinary increase of expenditures. Bankruptcy or restriction were the only alternatives. We must either shape our appropriations to our actual income, or incur a still larger debt, with little or no prospects of soon being able to liquidate it. The only question is, how is this to be done? Either these new and important fields, now fully ripe for the harvest, must be altogether neglected, or those long aided by the Board, and now able in a great measure, if not altogether, to support the gospel themselves, must give up a part of the assistance heretofore afforded, and thus enable the Board to meet the pressing calls in these new fields: still expanding our operations, and the more efficiently carrying on the work of missions in our extended country. This the Board have resolved to do. And by securing from these churches additional aid, no actual loss is sustained by our missionaries, whose salaries, at best, are far too small. Much rather would our Board increase than reduce the salary of any of our devoted missionaries. Our object is, and in this we have been in the main successful, to secure from the churches fully the amount of the reductions made, which in most cases is small, but in the aggregate considerable. Here, then, is a case in which circumstances force upon us a course of action, and with all these facts before us, it seems that no reasonable doubt can be entertained of the correctness of the course pursued.

We are happy to be able to say that we have abundant testimony from almost every portion of our Church of entire approbation in the present policy of the Board. And one of the most pleasing features in the whole, is the very decided approbation of the missionaries themselves. We give in this connexion a few extracts from letters recently received from some of these devoted, self-denying men, that our readers may see in what light they view the present embarrassed condition of our Board, and the claims of other and important fields upon our sympathies and efforts.

From a Missionary in Pennsylvania.

"I am glad to see the late action of the Board with reference to appropriations. I have long thought that some system of reduction ought to be adopted. Acting from such views, I have always felt that it would be wrong in me to receive, for any length of time, the money of the Board, unless I could see that I was made instrumental in accomplishing the purpose of that Board, namely, building up a self-sustaining church. Unless there should be some more encouraging prospects for a reduction of their appropriation, before very long, my conscience will compel me to abandon the field." L. G.

From another in Western New York.

"I would acknowledge the receipt of my commission for the year beginning with the 1st inst. I most cordially concur in the reduction of the appropriation. It appears to me that you could not in justice to the important fields that are opening to our Church have done more. I felt this when the application was made. But it seemed to me that we could not get along with less, and even if I denied myself, and made a considerable reduction, it might be impossible to get a successor when I wished to leave, and thus the success of the enterprise in this place might be perilled.

"From the outset, I placed it before me as the great object of my labours here, to make this a self-sustaining church, and when the year is up I shall think my time has been in a great measure squandered, if the Board is not relieved almost, if not altogether, of any further outlay for our church. I do not expect to do this by any sudden accessions, but by planting another church in the neighbourhood, which will raise half the minister's salary, and then divide my time between them." E. W.

Still another in Western New York.

"Another year of dependence upon the Board of Missions is now closed. I sincerely thank the Board for their assistance during the time that I have been their missionary. A year ago, I felt that our people ought to sustain the institutions of the gospel among them themselves. I frankly told them so, and urged upon them the discharge of what I believed to be their duty. At the annual meeting of our congregation this year, (in October,) I again pointed out to them their duty, and to encourage them by example, told them that I would myself pay twenty-five dollars of my salary for the coming year, if they would make up the rest. I hoped that this effort would be successful. But last week, I was informed by one of the elders, who is also a trustee, that it was their determination to apply to the Board for seventy-five dollars, for the year now commencing. Before this, however, having sought Divine direction I had deliberately come to the conclusion, that it was my duty to the Great Head of the Church to decline further support, as the pastor of this people, from the Church's missionary fund. The Board's debt of some $10,000 is abundant proof that none of this fund ought to be bestowed where it is not needed. I am fully convinced that it is not any longer needed here, and therefore I have declined it. In my sermon yesterday afternoon, I spoke to my people freely and earnestly on this subject, made known to them my resolution rather to do without seventy-five dollars of my salary, than to receive one dollar more from the Board, and taught them boldly and plainly the doctrine of the Holy Scriptures in relation to the support of the ministry. What the result will be I cannot tell, but the hearts of all men are in the hands of the Lord, and he is able to supply all the wants of those who put their trust in him.

Whatever may be the result of the course I have taken, conscious of having desired and aimed to do my duty, I am cheerful and happy, and taking leave as I now do, with heartfelt thanks, of the Board of Missions, at whose hand I have been partly sustained for six years past, I commit myself to that God who never leaves nor forsakes his children." H. L. D.

These extracts speak for themselves. Many others might be given were it necessary. A large proportion of our Synods and Presbyteries, with singular unanimity, have passed resolutions expressing cordial approbation, and urging enlarged liberality to this great cause. Some of these we may hereafter publish.

We commend the following appropriate communication to the attentive perusal of our readers. It speaks for itself. The humblest offering of the poorest saint is acceptable to God. Have we all done what we could?

For the Home and Foreign Record.

SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD.

Mark xiv. 8.

1. She could do but little. She was a poor saint, one of the humblest of the disciples of Christ. She dwelt in obscurity in the little village of Bethany. Perhaps her name was unknown beyond its narrow precincts. Perhaps the church itself scarcely noticed her in her deep retiracy. Her sphere was so narrow, her means were so small, and her household cares so numerous that she might, in modest diffidence, have thought that she could be no help to the church's cause. She might have said, "I am too poor, I am too insignificant to be minded. My influence, at best, can be little—perhaps nothing at all."

2. She did what she could. Such reasoning did not satisfy Mary. Christ had done great things for her and her household. He had raised her beloved dead. As she sat at his feet he had told her the story of redeeming love. Her heart burned within her to show her gratitude. "What can I do for this blessed Saviour?" was the question that came to her again and again. It troubled her long, no doubt; but her purpose to do something never failed. At last, there came a happy thought. Counting over her hard-earned pence, she found she had just enough to buy an alabaster box of ointment. Gathering it all together, away she went from Bethany to Jerusalem afoot. She entered the nearest shop and bought the precious spikenard. Then with eager steps she hurried away to Simon's house. The Saviour was there, and it was enough. Unmindful of the frowning guests, throwing off all her own timidity in the ardor of her love, she washed his feet, and breaking the box, poured the ointment on his head! Oh! it was a most expressive deed! It was the fullness of her loving heart pouring itself into her Master's bosom! It was faith that had joyfully received, now gratefully imparting! It was the outgoing of Christian love—love that cannot live but in self-sacrifices for the Redeemer's sake!

3. Jesus was pleased. The ointment in itself was a very paltry gift. The Creator of the heavens and of the earth had no need either of Mary's spikenard or of her services. She might have kept her pence hoarded up. She might have spared herself the trouble of going to Simon's house. Jesus would have been neither the richer nor the poorer for it. But he was pleased. And why? Not because he so much prized the gift as loved the spirit of the giver—the spirit of humble faith and devotion—the spirit of self-forgetfulness and self-sacrifice for the Master's sake—the spirit that was determined to do something for Christ, and did what it could. There was true Christianity. There was the first token of a flame of love enkindled, never to be extinguished. There was the pledge of future Christian labours, never to be intermitted while Mary lived. Therefore the Saviour was glad!

The gift too was just the one that Jesus wanted. Mary was all-unconscious of any other object than that of testifying to her gratitude. She knew not what a great thing she was doing for Jesus. How astonished she must have been then when Jesus said, "She hath wrought a good work on me. She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying." This was her own peculiar work. There was no one else to do it. There was a Joseph to provide a sepulchre. There was a Nicodemus to bring "the mixture of myrrh and aloes." There were some faithful disciples to prepare the body for burial. But it was Mary's own work to anoint it aforehand. She came only to show her love, but she wrought a great and good work on Jesus! She thought it nothing, but it was a most kind and blessed gift to the dying Christ! Truly, we know not what we are doing when we do what we can.

4. Precious fruits grew out of this simple deed. Mary thought it would be the deed of the passing hour and be forgotten in a day, but lo! "wherever the gospel is preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done is spoken of for a memorial of her." The story of her humble faith and love is written on the deathless page of Inspiration. It has been read in all ages of the Church. It is read now wherever the gospel goes. None but the omniscient God knows the good it has done. In every age, in every clime, it has aroused the desponding, it has strengthened the weak, it has rejoiced the sad, it has drawn sinners irresistibly to the feet of Jesus, to learn of him! We are short sighted, we cannot see into eternity, and therefore we cannot reckon up the good this deed hath wrought, but then we must know that there is many a jewel in Mary's crown in heaven gathered up by the flying report of her touching affection for Jesus on earth!

Reader! learn the lesson. You may be a poor, despised, neglected saint, of little apparent influence in the Church. Still you can do something for Christ. You can put a mite into his treasury, or send up a prayer from your closet, or speak to a sinner of the way of salvation. Do what you can, little though it be. Christ will be pleased. He will love your spirit and your zeal. The little that you do may also be of mighty importance. It may be just what Christ asks from you and what you alone can give him. It may tell upon the destinies of thousands after you are dead. You know not what shall prosper, whether this or that, but God can bring great results out of little things. Look at history. The flitting dream of Joseph carried Israel down into Egypt—the tear on the cheek of the infant Moses brought them out again, through the wilderness, into Canaan—the cackling of geese once saved the Roman Empire—three years ago, the accidental discharge of a pistol set all Europe a blaze with revolutions—and so Mary's simple gift is to this day spoken of for a memorial of her! God works not as man works. Despise not then the day of small things. Do what you can, and God will bless the deed. Have the spirit of Mary, and God will give you Mary's crown. Arise and work for Christ needs you! Though poor, weak and neglected, he needs you none the less! Out of your little he will bring great things—how great, eternity alone will disclose! Happy saint, if you do as Mary did! Joyful home, when the Master shall give you Mary's blessing, "she hath done what she could!"

BLYTH.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

Never since Pentecost smiled, has there been presented to the ambition of the Church, a field so wide, and a heritage so splendid, as that which now expands before us. The manifest destiny of our country is so unlike that of others who have gone before us—it is not of conquest as that of Rome, nor aspirations for universal empire, as the Corsican's—but the working out of the grand problem, in the sight of the nations, of man's capacity for self-government, when directed by the teachings of inspiration. Parted by rolling seas from the effete and worn-out systems of Asia, and the corrupted governments of Europe, with a field wide enough to sustain a people more numerous than the Cæsars ever ruled—one in language, in race, and in religion—possessing resources so immense as to render us independent of the world, we can, undisturbed, move on, a splendid example to mankind of the perfection to which national glory, in its truest sense, can be raised, when inspired by the lessons of the gospel.

But it is not the expanded area, the immense resources, the peculiar position, insulating us from all the world beside, the working of our government with mechanical precision from the checks and balances, improved by the constitution, not the patriotism of the people, which would gather round an insulted flag—these are means to one grand end in the eye of the Christian. It is here, on a theatre worthy of the enterprise, the gospel is to accomplish her marvels of mercy—it is to work out here the august idea of sending the messages of love to all our people, and having her leaven pervade the entire mass of American society. It is to fill the land with churches, manses, and school-houses—to roll the river of life through every vicinage, and to cover all with one blessed flood. It contemplates a church for every neighbourhood, a school in each hamlet, a Bible in every family, and such circulating literature as may give dignity and elevation to the community. To do all this requires earnest and persevering labour, ample revenues, pains-taking effort. It summons the existing church, not to irregular and spasmodic exertion, but to a continued service. It is by the regular and gentle flow of innumerable rills, falling in modest gracefulness from a thousand hill sides, that the Father of Waters rolls its amassing volume to the Gulf, the gathered tribute of a continent; so is it the regular and systematic contributions of the whole Church which is commensurate with the colossal, and, but for grace, appalling necessities of our land.

Our Church is most deficient in this regular flow of the streams. Many are dry as those of midsummer. Hundreds of our people contribute nothing, absolutely nothing. Twenty-five cents per month, from each of our communicants would yield upwards of $600,000; which, divided among the four Boards, would invest them with a power to be felt over the land, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. This will fill up the figure of the rills, whose mingling flow would make the river of a glorious benevolence. Is it likely a church like ours has many who are unable to give this much? It can be accomplished not only on the average, but absolutely. Let every pastor, to whom these humble suggestions come, but make the experiment. Let him invite his members to a willing offering, let him not be dismayed by want of entire success at first, let him persevere, and like the rill which falls in sweet murmurs from its rocky spring and loses itself in the Missouri or the Amazon, he will have done his duty.

It is the vice of our nature, that we lose ourselves in vague and useless generalities. There is a want of speciality and of individuality in the performance of duty. We come not to the dry, but indispensable detail. We are often lost in magnificent speculations—but do not labour with such pains-taking industry as to realize these splendid visions. It grieves me to consider what resources are locked up—what power sleeps unaroused! Opportunities pass unimproved, and the seed time of many a glorious harvest. The time is auspicious—our Church is a unit in harmony—no distracting questions agitate—no novelties disturb our peace. The Church machinery works with blessed exactness—union of effort is all we need—an organization of benevolence based upon our admirable system—Sessions, Presbytery, Synod, rising in gradation. Let each Session consider this a part of their great work, as guardians of the means of grace, and reach each member with the question,—How much owest thou to thy Lord?—to evoke regular donations to this blessed cause. Then shall the glory of the Lord rise upon us, our peace like a river, and our righteousness like the waves of the sea. As when vapours are exhaled from the heated surface of the earth, only to fall in refreshing showers, so the warming power of divine love will draw forth the drops of the Christian's charity, from his store, as God has prospered him, to fall in showers on his soul.

ANOTHER PROFESSOR GONE.

SAMUEL L. GRAHAM, D. D.

Another of the leaders of our host has been summoned to his rest. Dr. Graham, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Union Theological Seminary, Va., has followed his preceptor, the venerable Dr. Alexander, into the world of spirits. He was a man of shining piety and excellent sense. He was among the most learned men in our Church—of that class, whose unpretending modesty prevented all display, and whose true worth was best known to his own friends. We became acquainted with him in 1834, and shall never forget a meeting we attended with him in North Carolina, appointed for the religious instruction of the blacks. Dr. Graham's heart was always in his work; and he excelled, in our judgment, as a pastor.

The following notice is taken from the "Watchman and Observer.".

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. GRAHAM.

Just one week after the venerable Archibald Alexander died, there followed him to the world of spirits one who had loved him on earth, had heard lessons of sacred knowledge from his lips, and, like him, had been a "teacher of teachers."

Samuel L. Graham died on the morning of the 29th of October, and his remains now rest by the side of Doctor Baxter, in the burial ground of Union Theological Seminary in Prince Edward county. He was a professor in this institution for more than thirteen years. He was born in Bedford county, Va., on the 29th of February, 1794. His father was Michael Graham, brother to the Rev. William Graham, who was the teacher of Dr. Alexander, and one of the Fathers of Washington College, and whose body now lies in the grave-yard on Church Hill, in Richmond. Samuel Graham was a student in the Washington College, and graduated with distinction, having taken one of the honours awarded to his class, at a time when College honours were not gained with less labour than at present. His heart led him to become a minister of the gospel. He entered the Seminary at Princeton, and passed through the full course of three years, before he undertook the great work to which he felt called. After being licensed, he devoted himself to missionary labour in the West. He visited several of the Western States lying on the Ohio river, and preached in the wilds, where the settlements were thin and the dangers of the pioneer life had given way to very few of the comforts of civilization. On his return, he preached for a time among the mountains of Virginia; but was soon called to pastoral labour in North Carolina.

For many years he was pastor of the Churches of Oxford, Grassy Creek and Shiloh, and he was the instrument of collecting and building up the church now gathered in Clarksville, Va. In 1838, he was chosen by the College electors Professor of Oriental Literature in Union Seminary, which office he filled till 1849, when he was transferred to the Chair of Ecclesiastical History and Church Government, and in this he continued until a few days before his death. This brief outline necessarily omits many important incidents of his life, but it may suffice to give to those who did not know him the assurance that he was no idler in his Master's vineyard.

As a Professor, he was punctual and laborious, his love of learning was great, and urged him to accumulate rich stores of knowledge connected with his duties, which appeared in the written lectures he delivered to his classes. His mind was active and inquiring, but a sound judgment saved him from errors in religious theory into which many bright minds have fallen.

As a Preacher, he was fervid and often pathetic; his style had little of ornament, and owed its force rather to matter than form. His voice was not strong, but when warmed with his subject, he then spoke so as to still and subdue the hearts of his hearers.

As a Pastor, he was much loved by every flock to whom he ministered; affectionate and sympathizing, he knew how to encourage the desponding, to comfort the afflicted, and to guide those who wandered from the way.

But it was as a Christian that he shone most brightly; his natural modesty was great, and under the influence of divine grace, it manifested itself in a true and dignified humility. He was ever ready to sacrifice self, and to pursue with zeal the course duty seemed to require, however painful it might be. When in error, he was ready to acknowledge, and, if possible, to repair it. He never forgot friends, of whom he had many; he always forgave enemies, of whom he had few. If persecution came, he met it with courage, but without vindictiveness. When reviled, he reviled not again, but exhibited a calmness and forbearance, surprising to those who know not what a true follower of Christ can do.

His last days on earth were full of peace and joy, in view of the happiness awaiting him. He "set his house in order," and, not long before his death, called his family around him, and took leave of each in a few brief and touching words. Dr. Rice, the pastor of the College Church of Prince Edward, said to him, a short time before he died, "Dr. Alexander has got home before you." He opened his eyes, and raising his hands, said, "Oh! is it so? I had almost shouted Glory! Heaven has seldom received from earth such an inhabitant—a great and good man—his society will be precious."

The life and death of Dr. Graham will long be remembered, and will teach the power of revealed truth in forming a Christian—"the highest style of man."

THE PRESENT BASIS OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

It is important that our ministers, elders, and congregations should distinctly understand the present basis of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church. Attention is, therefore, requested to the following explanations:—

Until the year 1847, the Board of Education was exclusively confined to the education of candidates for the ministry.

The General Assemblies of 1847 and 1848 enlarged the basis of the operations of the Board, so as to include the subject of Christian Education in Schools, Academies, and Colleges. These two departments were, and still are, kept distinct; namely, first, Ministerial Education, or the training of Candidates; and, second, General Christian Education, or the establishment of institutions of learning.

The General Assembly of 1851 made a few modifications, which are substantially as follows:

I. In the department of Ministerial Education, the Board is authorized, 1st, to give the appropriations the form of Scholarships. 2d, to dispense with written pledges; the candidate, however, being required, as heretofore, to be examined by his Presbytery on his purpose to enter the ministry, and to declare that purpose as a condition of his receiving aid from the funds of the Church. He is also required to refund whatever he may have received, if he abandons his studies for the ministry. 3d, A renewed examination before the Presbytery is required, after receiving his College Diploma, and previously to entering upon his theological studies officially under the care of the Presbytery.

II. In the department of General Christian Education, the last Assembly authorized the Board to aid in the education of teachers, or young men of suitable character, who are not candidates for the ministry, provided funds are specially given to this purpose.

Upon the basis, as thus defined, the Board expect to conduct their operations without any other change,—excepting, of course, what may be ordered by the Assembly. The funds of the Board, therefore, are to be appropriated, 1st, to the education of young men, who have the ministry in view, as heretofore; 2d, to the establishing of Christian Schools, Academies, and Colleges; and 3d, to the education of teachers, and others, not candidates, provided funds are specially designated to this object. The funds are not applied indiscriminately to these three departments; but each has its own treasury, and is independent of the others.

No other changes are contemplated by the Board.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THANKFUL AND DESIRING.

The dearth of candidates should not cause us to forget God's undeserved favour in giving to our Church as many as we actually possess. A gentleman was once stopped in the streets of London by a stranger, who asked him, "Did you ever thank God for your reason?" "I don't know that I ever did," the gentleman replied. "Do it quickly, then," said the stranger, "for I have lost mine." If we are not grateful for the gifts bestowed by a gracious Providence, we may lose those we have received, instead of securing more. Our Church cannot be too thankful for the great company of ministers whom God has raised up, during the last century and a half, to bless her borders. And though the number of our candidates is small in comparison with our wants, it is great in view of our sins. Let us be thankful.

But gratitude for the gifts in possession does not forbid an earnest desire for more. On the contrary, spiritual favours prompt towards their own enlargement. The graces of the Holy Ghost aspire, from their very nature, to an increase. And the fact that Christ "gives gifts to men," in the form of ministering servants, is itself the argument and justification for seeking them in abundance. Let us be desiring as well as thankful.

We should desire more candidates, because it is in the line of commanded effort. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" is the record of our Saviour's will. From whence are to come the men for this great work? From Himself alone. And what is our encouragement? "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." Our prayers are the measure of our desires. Let us pray much. Grateful for what we have received, let us be spiritually importunate for more. Let us be thankful and desiring.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, VA.

The columns of "The Home and Foreign Record" cannot be used more advantageously than by being made the vehicle of intelligence respecting the operations of our Church in its various departments of effort. Although the Board of Education have no official connexion with the Union Seminary, there is great advantage in making known to our whole Church the condition of our different Theological institutions. "The Home and Foreign Record" is the only paper that circulates freely throughout the bounds of our Church, North, South, East and West; and such documents as the one below give information useful and interesting to all. Moreover, many of our brethren will be glad to preserve them, for permanent use, among the official records.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY TO THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA, WITH THE ACTION OF THE SYNOD THEREON.

The Board of Directors of the Union Theological Seminary respectfully report to the Synod of North Carolina, that, during the Seminary year ending the 9th day of June, 1851, twelve students have been connected with the institution. Of these, four commenced their studies here within the past year, to wit:

John W. Montgomery, candidate of Orange Presbytery, North Carolina.

Thomas W. Witherow, graduate of Jefferson College, Pennsylvania.

Robert C. Taylor, candidate of Lexington Presbytery, Virginia.

James S. Barr, candidate of Concord Presbytery, North Carolina.

The students have enjoyed good health, with the exception of Mr. Erwin, who left the Seminary in January, from apprehension of bronchitis, and Mr. Barr, who left in May, in consequence of sore eyes. The others have pursued their studies to the close of the session, with commendable diligence. Indeed, it is believed that during no year has there been more punctual attention to all the prescribed duties of the Seminary by the students—and their correct deportment and elevated tone of piety have been highly gratifying. Mr. Taylor has been connected with the Seminary one year. Mr. Tidball has been the whole time prescribed by the rules, but fails to receive a certificate, because he did not study Ecclesiastical History under the instruction of the Professor, though he stood an examination on that branch before his Presbytery, which was sustained.

The Permanent Fund of the Seminary consists of the following property, viz:

Virginia State Bonds, 5 per cent.,	$10,000
Virginia State Bonds, 6 per cent.,	23,200
Richmond city Bonds, 6 per cent.,	10,000
76 shares Farmers' Bank, Va., par,	7,600
100 shares Bank of Virginia, par,	7,000
5 shares Valley Bank, par,	500
3 shares Roanoke Navigation Company,	100
Debts in course of collection,	3,600
Subscriptions prior to 1843,	250

Making sixty-two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars.

The bonds and stocks constituting the permanent fund may be safely considered as worth, on an average, par value. The bank stocks are now at a premium of six to eight per cent. The net proceeds of funds which the Directors are at liberty to appropriate, are, this year, owing to the collection of accumulated interest, $4,500. Amount of current expenses, including repairs, from $3,600 to $3,800. The annual income from invested funds is about $3,600. The debts due by the Seminary are—to Rev. Dr. Wilson $336.73, to Rev. Dr. Sampson $380, to West Hanover Presbytery $900. The amount collected from the churches to defray travelling of Directors fall very short of the sum necessary for that purpose.

Touching the small number of students now, and for years past, connected with the Seminary, the Directors would submit to the consideration of the Synod, the following remarks contained in the Report of the Faculty to the Board of Directors, viz: "To those who have contributed their money to establish this school of the Prophets, for the purpose of increasing the number and promoting the piety and intelligence of the future Ministers in our Church, the present small number of its students may seem to be very discouraging. It may be, that God intends in this way to try the faith and patient perseverance in well doing of his people, or he may be calling us to repentance for the neglect of duty, in praying to the Lord to send forth labourers into his harvest—the use of proper means on the part of ministers, churches and parents to accomplish this important object. To prevent unreasonable discouragement on this subject, we may state that, besides the fact that candidates for the gospel ministry are now wofully few, there are other reasons which may account for the small number collected here. Since this institution was established, two similar ones have been erected in the West, and one in the South, which have received a number of students from parts of our country that formerly resorted to this place. Much, however, as we may regret the present small number of our students, when we examine what has been done for the Church through the instrumentality of this Seminary, we shall find abundant cause to bless God for the good fruit already produced, and to take courage to labour and to hope for still greater things to come. Since 1833, Union Theological Seminary has had under its care two hundred and fifty young men, many of whom are now filling stations in the Church of great importance, with high reputation and great usefulness. By their labours many hundreds have been gathered into the Church, and eternity alone can reveal the amount of good that shall be accomplished through their influence. With these facts before us, while it is yet with us "a day of small things," let us go forward, trusting that He with whom is the residue of the Spirit, will give enlargement and make our beloved Seminary a fountain whose swelling streams shall yet more abundantly bless the Church and the world. Respectfully submitted.

By order of the Board.

C. C. READ, Secretary.

U. T. SEMINARY, June 16th, 1851.

The Committee to whom were referred the documents relative to the Union Theological Seminary, reported—

"That they are highly gratified to find the pecuniary affairs of the institution in a condition so favourable. And while it is a matter of serious regret that so few students are members of the Seminary, yet it is a cause of joy to learn that such candidates as have gone there are to be highly commended for their application to all prescribed duties, and their correct deportment and elevated tone of piety. And inasmuch as the Board of Directors and Faculty of the Seminary have sometimes felt themselves discouraged by the absence of students from the annual examinations, and inasmuch as the remedy does not lie in these excellent brethren, therefore, your Committee would respectfully submit the following resolution for the adoption of Synod, viz:

Resolved, That the Presbyteries composing this Synod be earnestly requested to withhold a license to preach the gospel from candidates pursuing a Theological Course in the Seminary, until such candidates have obtained a certificate from the Faculty and Board of the said Institution—unless under peculiar circumstances."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

A PRESBYTERIAN NORMAL SCHOOL.

The difficulty of obtaining suitable teachers for schools and academies is increasing with the increasing number of our literary institutions. It is obvious that facilities must be offered for the regular training of teachers in their great work. Some of our academies embrace within their plan, instruction that has a bearing upon this profession; but it must be necessarily limited and insufficient, although good as far as it goes. There is need of an Institution, whose sole aim and methods shall be to prepare teachers to enter upon the duties of their calling with proper qualifications.

In the early part of the last autumn, the late venerable Dr. Alexander sent a message to the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education, requesting an interview on business. Advantage was taken of an early opportunity to visit Princeton, and the object of the interview was soon found to be the establishment of a Presbyterian Normal School. This was not the first time that Dr. Alexander had conversed on the subject; but he seemed to have deeper impressions of the importance of the undertaking, and of the necessity of commencing its execution speedily. His plan was to establish the Institution in some pleasant, healthy location in New Jersey, accessible to the two cities of New York and Philadelphia; to have it under the care of the Synod of New Jersey, or of the Presbytery of New Brunswick or Elizabethtown; and to conduct it on a plan which would offer inducements to persons in indigent circumstances, as well as others, to avail themselves of its privileges. He said that he had been reading Mary Lyon's life with great interest, and that his views of the desirableness of a Normal School had gathered so much strength that he wished to submit them to the Board of Education. On requesting him to put his thoughts on paper, he smiled and said he was old, and had a great deal to do; but at the same time we saw in his kind manner a willingness to comply with the request at some suitable opportunity. A few days after, he was taken sick, and his work on earth was ended.

The facts of this interview are thus briefly detailed for the purpose of giving to the enterprise the influence properly due to the name and opinions of so great and wise a man. The providence of God kept Dr. Alexander enterprising to the last. To the wisdom of age he united the alacrity of youth; and what was called for by the circumstances of the Church he desired to see carried into execution, notwithstanding difficulties and trials.

The Presbyterian Normal School is a great and practical idea. Our Church, however, has so disconnected itself, within the last quarter of a century, from the work of education, that every scheme of this nature has to contend with the want of preparation inevitably attending so long inertness. But truth and right will prevail. And inasmuch as an Institution for the training of teachers is needed in order to carry forward the educational work on which our Church has entered, public sentiment will not be slack in furnishing the means for its establishment.

The Free Church of Scotland devised its Normal Schools simultaneously with the putting into operation of its system of parochial schools. The Normal School at Glasgow cost $50,000; and that at Edinburgh nearly the same sum. These two Institutions have a corps of twenty-seven teachers; viz. two Rectors, eighteen male teachers and seven female teachers. The number of Normal students is 141, besides 1450 scholars attending the model classes. The Normal Schools are thus thoroughly equipped for the training of school-masters and school-mistresses, and they also provide, in the same manner as ordinary schools, for the instruction of a large number of other scholars. Furthermore, Dr. Candlish remarks in one of his annual reports, "both in Edinburgh and Glasgow, the Normal students are not only carefully instructed in religious truth, and in the best methods of communicating it, but are accustomed to devote some portion of their leisure time to missionary work among the poor. The whole arrangements as to admitting these students, and in carrying them on in their studies, are directed with an especial view to ascertain, as far as possible, and to cultivate their personal piety; and it is hoped that the divine blessing has not been altogether witheld." Thus, the most thorough and searching system for raising the intellectual qualification of teachers has been adopted, and a strong religious influence predominates in all the instructions.

Such is the kind of Normal Schools which our Presbyteries, or Synods, should aim at establishing. One is not sufficient for our educational purposes. Each section of country must judge for itself. Perhaps the greatest demand, just at present, is in the neighbourhood of our two largest cities, where more than one million of inhabitants are concentrated.

The indirect, as well as direct influence of a Normal School would be most auspicious upon our whole educational system; for whilst our existing institutions would be served by a more permanent and better qualified class of teachers, the facility of obtaining teachers of a right character would stimulate the increase of schools and academies.

Let this whole subject be carefully pondered by the friends of Christian education in our Church. And we have so much confidence in their intelligence, liberality and devotion to this great cause, as to believe that a Presbyterian Normal School will ere long be established.

We cannot better conclude this article than by an extract from a speech of Dr. Candlish, Convener of the Education Committee of the Free Church of Scotland.

"Our object is to make the profession of teacher thoroughly respectable, thoroughly honourable. Our first business is to see that the teacher is personally a spiritual man; our next to make his profession respectable and honourable. And I remark that the two objects are more closely connected than a superficial observer would think. So long as the teaching of youth is made a by-job—a business which any man not fit for anything else can take up—you have no right to expect the blessing of God upon the work, or to expect that men of high respectability and liberal attainments will engage in the work. It is a great matter to raise the status of the teacher's profession. I rejoice at the sentiment recently propounded in high places upon this subject—I rejoice at the voice given forth by Lord John Russell upon the degraded position which teachers generally occupy, and the high position to which they ought to be elevated. But I advocate it not for the reasons which he has stated. I advocate it because it is an important step towards the securing of a thorough system of education.

"As in the first place, we propose to seek spiritual men for our teachers; and as, in the second place, we propose to make the profession honourable; so in the third place, we shall aim at making the preparation for that profession thorough and efficient. To propose to raise the salaries of teachers without increasing their qualifications, would be liable to grave objections. But, at the same time that we propose to make the profession more honourable, we propose to make the preparation for the profession thoroughly efficient. In order to accomplish this, we intend not only to keep up Normal Schools, but also to establish grammar and model schools in different parts of the country, at which young men will be brought forward in their profession, and we hope in this way soon to obtain a body of men who shall be able to pass a most searching examination, and be licensed as men are licensed for preachers, out of whom the congregations of the Church may choose their teacher. I feel that this part of the scheme must be commended to the good sense and good feeling of the people. We are at a disadvantage here. The people are asked to contribute increased salaries to the teachers, and they see teachers of a comparatively low grade—they see a man who has become a teacher at random, who has gone through no preliminary education and passed no trial, who has become as it were a teacher at his own hand—and they say that for such a man the support given at present is good enough. But we hope to see soon the commencement of a better order of things. We hope to turn out a body of men highly qualified for their work, highly educated and trained in the art of teaching; and when we present the country with a specimen of the class, we hope to receive a cordial support.

"I have a sanguine hope that the people of Scotland will not consider the scheme which I have now explained unworthy of their confidence. Without boasting, I take leave to think that it would have received the approbation of the reforming fathers of our Church, and that it is not unworthy the approbation of their children. And I now call upon parents, upon Presbyteries, upon ministers, to look out promising and suitable youth to fill the office of teacher in the Free Church. I call upon parents, Presbyteries, and ministers, to look out men of personal piety. Let them be sure that the young man whom they wish to train for the office is—so far as human judgment can go—under the influence of the Spirit of God. I call upon them to look out young men of talent for this work. Let them tell young men of high intellectual attainments that the office of teacher is no longer beneath them in point of respectability. Let them tell these generous youths, that it is the thorough determination of the ministers of the Free Church to make the teachers fellow-workmen and associates with themselves; that if it is their ambition to serve God in the gospel of his Son, they need not aspire to the occupation of a pulpit, but may be honourably employed in the teacher's desk, and no longer be separated by the line which has separated them before from the minister, and rendered the ministerial office the object of their envy; and that they will find the ministers of the Free Church determined to receive the teachers as men, respectable and honourable as themselves, and to hold them, out and out, as fellow-workers in the Lord's cause. On our female friends we also call, for they can lend us valuable help. We do not consider our institutions complete unless they have an industrial as well as a scholastic department; that is, a department for teaching to work as well as to read and write. We would desire to have female teachers in all our schools, and we consider them entitled to a liberal support. We have many already enrolled in our cause, and we long for more, we ask for more. And I shall only say that if the first duty which the Free Church was called to discharge, was the duty of providing the ministry of gospel ordinances for her people, the second is that which she is now setting about, viz., the godly upbringing and careful training of the young in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

A GOOD TESTIMONY.

The two New School Presbyterian Synods in Indiana have united in setting forth to their churches an educational document of no little interest. We republish a part of it, for the sake of confirming our readers in the wisdom of the policy adopted by our own branch of the Church of Christ.

TO THE CHURCHES OF INDIANA.

God, our Father, is the author of light. He said, let there be light, and light was. He formed the natural sun, that the eyes of all his creatures might be enlightened. He made the Bible the moral sun, that none might walk in darkness, but that all might have the light of life. He gave it to parents, and commanded them to lay it up in their minds and hearts, and teach it to their children. He gave it to the Church, and commanded her to obey it and teach it to the world. The Bible is God's great educational book. The Sabbath is God's great educational day. And parents, the Church, the ministry, are God's agents for the education of the world. It is God's appointment that all should be educated in the Bible, and in all those great subjects which human intellect, enlightened, ennobled, elevated, exalted by the Bible, can employ to the honour of God and the good of mankind. We rejoice to proclaim that God is the author of education. We rejoice in the well-known historical fact that Presbyterians have always fallen in with the plan of God, and been the zealous advocates of education.

John Calvin, of immortal memory, the great expounder of Presbyterianism, John Knox, the disciple of Calvin, the fathers of the Presbyterian and the Congregational Church—all, with one accord, elevated the opened Bible before the world, and exerted their great energies that every human intellect, the rich and the poor, the high and the low, should be reached, ennobled, and elevated by it. We rejoice in what these great lights of Presbyterianism have done to enlighten and save the world. We rejoice in the unutterable blessings which their exertions have conferred on us. And we call upon you, dear brethren, to join with us in one great, united effort, that every individual in our connexion may be thoroughly educated in the Bible, and in all those other branches of education, calculated to promote their usefulness; and also to hand down the precious blessings which we enjoy to unborn generations.

We desire that every single child, and man and woman in our connection should have his own Bible, and that its sacred truths, its histories, its doctrines and duties, its prophecies, its psalms of prayer and praise, should be transferred to all their minds and hearts. We desire that our standards, embracing our Confession of Faith and Catechisms, with our books of Church order, should be found in every house, and be carefully studied by all our people. We desire that no child should grow up in our connection, who cannot repeat the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, in his early years: and also that all the more advanced members of our congregations may be formed into classes for the study of our Larger Catechism and our Book of Order. To be a formal, ignorant professor of religion, requires no effort; but to be a highly cultivated and intelligent Presbyterian requires great effort. We do, therefore, solemnly charge upon all our ministers and sessions, whose duty it is to feed the flock, as they would acquit themselves at the judgment of the great day, to see to it that not a single child grows up in our connection, in ignorance of the Bible or our doctrinal standards. We do charge it upon all our sessions, whose duty it is to inquire into the knowledge of the people, to see to it that none of our people live in stupid ignorance. But, dear brethren, if we would carry out the enlightened educational principles of our Presbyterian fathers, we must make much more effort to elevate our educational establishment. We ought to have a complete system, arranged with a large-hearted liberality, embracing the primary school, the academy, and the college; each one pressed up to the highest degree of perfection in its sphere, and all brought under the sanctifying, ennobling influence of the Bible.—Central Christian Herald.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, December 13, 1851.

China.—Our last letters are dated at Canton, September 27; Shanghai, September 9; Ningpo, August 29. The death of Min-geen, the Chinese assistant missionary at Ningpo, is reported. His mind was stayed upon the Saviour, and there is hope in his death. The missionaries greatly regretted his early removal. The project of writing the colloquial language of Ningpo in the Roman alphabet, somewhat modified, was in progress, and those more immediately engaged in it were sanguine of its success. At Shanghai, the missionaries had succeeded after many disappointments in purchasing a piece of ground for a chapel and dwelling-house.

Siam.—The Rev. S. Mattoon, writing on the 26th of August, communicates intelligence of much interest. After mentioning the return of Mrs. Mattoon to Bangkok with improved health, he states that a most eligible site for the mission buildings had been promised—a site so desirable that the brethren do not now regret their former disappointments. At the request of the king, Mrs. Mattoon and other missionary ladies were giving instruction in English to some of the female members of the royal family, going to the royal palace for this purpose, in turns, every day except the Sabbath. Our brethren are much encouraged at the prospect before them, and express a warm wish to have their number reinforced by new missionaries.

India.—Letters have been received dated at Lodiana, September 19; Amballa, September 29; Agra, October 6; Mynpoorie, October 1; Futtehgurh, October 8, Allahabad, October 2. Some changes were about to be made at two or three of the stations. The Rev. J. Newton and family had left Lahor, returning to this country on a visit for his health, which has become much impaired by a seventeen years' residence in India, and to make arrangements for their children. The Rev. L. Janvier was appointed by the Mission to occupy Mr. Newton's place at Lahor. The Rev. J. L. Scott was also expecting to re-visit this country, on account of his motherless children, and the Rev. J. Warren was about to leave Allahabad, in order to occupy the station at Agra. The Rev. L. G. Hay succeeds Mr. Warren in the charge of the printing-press at Allahabad. Two native young men were received by the Session as members of the church at Allahabad. One of them attributed his conversion to Mr. Warren's translation of Flavel's Fountain of Life. A third applicant for admission to the church was deferred. At Jalandar one of the youths in the school of the Rev. Golok Nath, who for more than a year had been anxious to be baptized, came to the mission premises for that purpose; but a mob of his countrymen was raised, who carried him off and placed him in confinement. The matter was taken before the English magistrate, and had not been decided at the date of our letters. At Amballa the government school had been transferred by the British authorities to the charge of the mission. This mark of confidence in our brethren, and the new sphere of duty thus presented, call for a still more vigorous prosecution of the missionary work at that station.

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

The change from one year to another is to every Christian mind a serious event. The end of the old year, reminding us that the end of life is drawing on apace; the beginning of the new year, with all its duties, and the uncertainty whether we shall see its end; the review of the past, bringing to remembrance so many short-comings, so little gratitude and love, in exchange for all the riches of divine goodness and grace; the contemplation of the future, reaching into eternity—these are serious and solemn thoughts. This number of the Record will be in the hands of our readers, while their minds are impressed with the brevity of life, the painful sense of their past omissions and neglects, the humble purpose of living more to the glory of God hereafter, the riches of that grace in which they confide, and the joyful hope of the heavenly rest and glory. We wish that the work of missions amongst those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death may not be forgotten by our Christian brethren at such a time as this.

The interests of this cause lie near the Saviour's heart, and they should be dear to the hearts of all his friends. How far we have fulfilled our duty to Christ, to the wandering sheep of his fold, who are not yet gathered in, to all our fellow men who are our neighbours, because they are within reach of our benevolence, are surely proper subjects of inquiry in looking back on the past year. Alas! how far short have most of us come in the discharge of this class of our duties! Have we felt that love for Christ, and desire to promote his glory in the world, which become his redeemed people? Have we felt a real pity for them that are perishing for lack of vision? Have we offered unceasing, importunate, believing prayers for their salvation? Have we given our pecuniary offerings, according to the measure of our ability, to send the gospel unto them? Have we paid an earnest attention to the progress of the missionary work? Have we sympathized tenderly with our beloved brethren in the dark places of the earth, our agents and representatives among the heathen? Have we humbled ourselves for the discouragement attending this cause at home and abroad? And have we been grateful for the tokens of God's presence and blessing at our missionary stations? We would respectfully suggest these as inquiries appropriate to the end of one year and the beginning of another, and as questions which we ought to ask ourselves, in view of our relations to the Lord Jesus Christ, and to our fellow men. Happy shall we be, if a favourable reply can be given to these inquiries. If otherwise, there is pardoning grace for us, and there is yet a time allotted to us for more faithfully performing this work and labour of love.

THE PRESENT ASPECT OF THE MISSIONS.

This topic might occupy several pages. We must speak of it, however, in a few short sentences.

So far as we can judge, the Missions of our Church are all in a satisfactory condition. Their fields are of great interest, and wide doors are open. Their plans, we think, are judicious and far-reaching. The missionaries are faithful men and women, worthy of the confidence and the Christian affection of the churches. Their labours are not in vain in the Lord. In so extensive and varied a work, we must not look for equal progress at all points. At some there may be discouragement—but, on the whole, we gratefully record our conviction that the Church has reason to thank God and take courage, in view of the present aspect of her foreign missions. Some things, however, are greatly needed—

1. More men—See statements in the Record of last month. This must not be forgotten.

2. Larger funds—The work is great. Let all and every one do something for it.

3. More prayer—This is our greatest want. The Spirit of God must move upon our own hearts, upon our missionary brethren and their native helpers, upon their schools and congregations, upon the Heathen, Mohammedans, Jews, Romanists,—or all these Missions will be utterly fruitless. It is in answer to prayer that the Holy Spirit is given.

4. Enlarged hopes of success, as the result of a stronger faith in the promises of God. We are doing God's work. We are doing it in the way he would have it done. He can easily make it prosper in our hands. The promise is sure. Let us expect a large blessing upon our labours, through his grace.

CHOCTAW MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. ALEXANDER REID.

Want of room has prevented the earlier insertion of the following narrative, written on the 19th of September. Mr. Reid's duties, as Superintendent of Spencer Academy are not only arduous and responsible, but also confining during most of the year. Here we see how his last vacation was spent. Is not this an example which many might follow with great advantage to the cause of Christ?—Many thoughts, some of them painful, others encouraging and delightful, will crowd on the mind of every one that reads this straight-forward account, but we must refrain from any comments.

On the 25th of June I left Spencer for Mr. Allen's [Chickasaw station]... I only spent one night there, having an appointment to preach at Mayhew on Sabbath, fifty miles distant. Here, the Speaker, or Vice Chief of the district, was my interpreter. He came over twenty miles on purpose to interpret for me. From Mayhew I went to Armstrong Academy to attend the examination. Thence I started for Spencer and reached it Thursday forenoon, after an absence of ten days. I reached home weary and hungry, for the night before I slept out in my blanket, supperless, and had no breakfast in the morning. Mrs. Reid not being at home, one of the ladies hastened to get me something to eat. After eating and putting some clean clothes in my saddle bags, I rode off to fulfil another appointment at Wheelock, thirty miles distant. I met Mrs. Reid on her way home, exchanged a few words with her, and passed on.

The meeting at Wheelock was what in this country is called a "big meeting," i. e. a sacramental meeting, commencing usually on Friday afternoon or evening. I preached Friday night, three times on Saturday, and twice on Sabbath, and assisted in the administration of the Lord's Supper. It was a most solemn meeting. The word was in demonstration of the Spirit. There were two Choctaw ministers present, Rev. Mr. Fisk and Rev. Israel Folsom, who is also Supreme Judge of the Nation. He resides near Washitaw. He was in this district holding Circuit Court. The presence of these brethren added much to the interest of the meeting.

On Monday morning, after a parting meeting, I accompanied Judge Folsom and Colonel Pitchlyn to the Court Ground. I may add that my interpreters on the above occasion were Captain Dukes, Rev. A. Wright's assistant in the translation of the Bible, and Captain Gardiner, one of the Trustees of Spencer, and other schools, both good Christian men, and excellent interpreters. On the Court Ground there was a large concourse of people. I made many new friends and saw many old ones. I was deeply interested in all that my eyes saw and my ears heard on this occasion. The Choctaws are becoming a law loving and a law abiding people. Thanks to the gospel for this. I reached home Tuesday night.

Next morning Mrs. Reid and most of the family went to attend the examination of Rev. Mr. Hotckin's school at Goodwater, eighteen miles distant. I remained at home to attend to necessary business until late in the afternoon. I then mounted my horse and started for Goodwater. It was dark when I crossed Kiamishi, and not being very familiar with the road I determined to camp near the river. I wrapt myself in my blanket and lay on the stoop of an old Choctaw cabin, belonging to the father of one of my boys, until the day dawned, when I was on my road to Goodwater again. I was truly delighted with the examination of the girls. At the close of the examination Colonel P. P. Pitchlyn, Judge Folsom and myself made speeches, according to custom on such occasions. I observed that most of my speech was put into Choctaw and published in the Intelligencer. At Goodwater I received information that Brother Edwards was at Rev. Mr. Byington's, waiting for me to send for him. I despatched our mule team next day to Stockbridge. From Goodwater Mrs. Reid and family returned to Spencer, and I went to attend another "big meeting" about thirty miles distant, near Norwalk, within the bounds of Rev. A. Wright's parish. Being quite familiar with the road I travelled by night, and reached Norwalk about two o'clock in the morning.

The meeting was a "big meeting" indeed, the largest I ever saw in the Choctaw Nation. I think there must have been about eight hundred people present. On Saturday there was a grand Temperance meeting. Excellent speeches in favour of total abstinence were made by distinguished Choctaws, by Chiefs and ex-Chiefs, Colonels and Captains. On Friday night I was able to say but little, there being no interpreter. On Saturday night I preached. I conducted the prayer-meeting at sunrise, Sabbath morning, making three short talks. I preached in the forenoon a long sermon—over three hours. This would not do among white people who are surfeited with the gospel. A great many poor Choctaws are hungry for the gospel, and will sit patiently and attentively listening to a long sermon. In the afternoon I made a few remarks and assisted in the administration of the sacrament. Sunday evening I accompanied Brother Wright to Wheelock, and waited there for Brother Edwards. He arrived Monday evening. On Tuesday morning I started in company with Brother Edwards and his wife for Spencer. We reached there Wednesday about eleven o'clock. Not having time to wait for dinner, I took a lunch, and then started for the prairie, four or five miles distant, where Mr. Betz [carpenter] and the men were haymaking. After giving Mr. Betz directions about business to be attended to in my absence, I returned to Spencer.

It was now late in the afternoon. As soon as I could change my clothes and partake of some refreshment I started again for another big meeting, nine miles from Stockbridge, i. e., nearly seventy miles from Spencer the way I went. I rode ten miles that evening, and stayed all night at Pine Ridge. Next morning I had an interview with Mr. Wilson, the agent, and with Mr. Thompson McKinney, the United States Interpreter, and one of the trustees of Spencer, &c. He is an enterprising man and a true friend to his people. As I was mounting my horse to proceed on my way, I stumbled and sprained my ankle. I supposed severely, but said nothing. My first thought was, "I must return home—can't go on a long journey with such a foot." My second thought was, "Shall a sprained ankle keep me from fulfilling my appointment to preach the precious gospel to the poor, perishing Indians? No, no. I shall go forward in spite of my sprained ankle." On I went. After I had gone seven miles I began to suffer very much. I was compelled to rest. I stopped at Mr. Fisher's, the grandfather of one of my best boys. The old gentleman paid me every attention. For two hours he ceased not to pour cold water on my foot. This relieved me very much. My foot was now swollen so that I could not put on my boot. Fastening my boot to my saddle, I wrapt my foot in a towel, mounted my horse and rode along as easy as possible. When I had gone about three miles, the pain became so intense that I was compelled to stop again. I was most kindly received by Mrs. Basil Leflore, who not only poured cold water on my foot for an hour, which eased the pain very much, but got out her little wagon, and sent me to Norwalk, about four miles. I rode in the wagon without any pain worth speaking of. From Norwalk I was sent in a wagon to Wheelock. Here I tarried all night. This was a sore day's ride to me. Next morning I started in a wagon for Stockbridge, (Mr. Byington's place) and arrived there about sundown. By this time my sprained foot was almost well. I had followed up the cold water thoroughly. Saturday morning I was able to put on my boot and ride my horse without the slightest inconvenience. Now I felt very thankful I did not return home from Doaksville. Brother Wright and myself reached the meeting-ground early in the forenoon of Saturday. At this meeting I preached four times and assisted in the administration of the sacrament.

I started for home Monday morning, and on my way attended a large political gathering. The object of the meeting was to give the different candidates an opportunity of defining their positions previous to the election. A more orderly political meeting I never saw in the States. I reached home again Wednesday night, having been absent one week. On Thursday morning, bright and early, I was shut up in my study working at my vouchers and accounts. I was in my study before breakfast and after supper, early and late and constant, for I did not leave it to take dinner, lest I should lose time and disarrange my thoughts. I remained at home on the Sabbath and preached twice, (this was the only Sabbath I spent at home during the whole time intervening between the 19th of June and the 7th of September, nearly three months.) Nothwithstanding Mrs. Reid was sick all the time, I worked steadily at the vouchers, &c. Friday night I got them all ready for the mail. I was very glad.

On Saturday morning early I started to fulfil another appointment to attend a "big meeting" at Goodland, twenty miles from Spencer, within Mr. Hotchkin's bounds, and where Mr. Stark is now settled as teacher and preacher. I left Mrs. Reid in bed, sick. I told her if she wished me to stay at home I would cheerfully do it. She earnestly begged of me to go, insisting that she was not sick enough to keep me from preaching the gospel to the poor Indian. So I went sorrowing, yet rejoicing. I reached Goodland about noon. There was a large assembly of people. A Temperance meeting was in progress, which did not terminate till late in the afternoon. Being tired I took no part in it. I preached in the evening, also Sabbath forenoon, and took part in the administration of the Supper in the afternoon. There were about five hundred people present. It was a very interesting meeting: 17 were received into the communion of the Church; 14 backsliders restored, and about 25 came forward to be prayed for, two of them my own boys, Aaron B. Belknap and William Barnes.

Monday night found me again at Spencer. I now went to work to prepare the second package sent to the Mission House, containing papers Nos. 1, 2 and 3, &c. This I finished Thursday morning. Having set the mason to work in the kitchen, and given Mr. Betz all necessary instructions about the work to be done, I left Spencer again to attend another "big meeting" on the Blue, seventy miles distant. It was about ten o'clock when I left home; at six o'clock next morning I was eating my breakfast at the house of my interpreter, Mr. Cochaneur, within two miles of Armstrong Academy, 53 miles from Spencer. I rode nearly all night. The meeting ground was 17 miles off yet. At Mr. Cochaneur's I learned that the Rev. C. Copeland, within whose bounds the meeting was, and whom I expected to meet at the Interpreter's, was sick, and would not be able to be present. Early Saturday morning I started for the river Blue, accompanied by my interpreter. Saturday night I preached—also preached three times on the Sabbath and administered the sacrament.

There was something peculiarly interesting in this meeting to me. I was the only white person on the ground. I lived in pure Choctaw fashion. At night I wrapt myself in my blanket, and laid me down to sleep at the root of a tree. At meals I sat on the ground and partook with real relish of the miscellaneous contents of some Choctaw brother's wallet poured out upon green leaves in the absence of platters. There I sat cross-legged on the ground with a hunk of hard corn bread in one hand, and a chunk of dry venison in the other. Eating away with all my might, varying the exercise by an occasional sip of coffee from my neighbour's tin cup. I got along first rate. Some of the Choctaws expressed their surprise at the ease with which I adapted myself to them. What astonished them most of all, was the ease with which I sat cross-legged. They said I was the first missionary they ever saw that could sit Indian fashion. Some thought I sat Choctaw fashion better than the Choctaws themselves. Little did they think that I had sat in this way for nearly five years, when I was learning my trade.

Next day (Monday) a Council of the Chickasaws was to be held at Post Oak Grove. The new agent was to be present and make an address, defining his position. On several accounts I felt it to be of some importance to be present. Mr. Allen sent urging me to come and see him and go with him to Council. I was on Sabbath night forty miles from Mr. Allen's, and sixty from Post Oak Grove. As soon as the Sabbath was over, I set out to attend the Council, via Wa-pa-nu-ka, [the Choctaw station.] I was at Mr. Allen's by Monday noon. Next day Mr. Allen and myself went to the Grove. The Council was not organized, the new agent not having arrived. Several hundred Chickasaws were on the ground. On Wednesday about noon, Mr. Harper appeared and the Council was organized. I was called upon by Mr. Love, the speaker, to open with prayer—so far as I know, the first prayer ever made in a Chickasaw Council. Mr. Harper then read a speech which was interpreted to the people. Mr. Allen then made some statements respecting the progress of the building, and asked for an appropriation of $5000 to aid in its completion. By this time the Council found itself incompetent to transact any business, and adjourned sine die. There was no opposition so far as we could see, to voting the appropriation sought. I have no doubt but it will be agreed to at next regular Council, which meets about the 1st of November.

Mr. Allen and I started for Wapanuka. We reached Judge Pitchlyn's on Blue about dark, and tarried with him all night, (Judge Pitchlyn is a brother of Col. P. P. Pitchlyn.) Next morning we were again on our way, from which having gone astray we found ourselves at the going down of the sun on the top of a high limestone hill, at least ten miles north of Mr. Allen's. We had had no dinner, and now there was no alternative but to sleep supperless on this beautiful hill. Mr. Allen fastened his horse securely, as he thought, to the only tree on the top of the hill. The morning came, but our horses were gone! What was to be done? We hunted for them in the timber at the bottom of the hill for two or three hours and found them not. Leaving our saddles and blankets, &c., we trudged towards Mr. Allen's under a broiling sun, faint for want of food, and no water. It was the longest ten miles I ever travelled. We reached Mr. Allen's about three o'clock in the afternoon. We were both not only very much fatigued, but also very sick. To me the tenth mile seemed longer than the other nine. Our course was through an open prairie, and the sun poured down his burning beams upon our unprotected heads. I had a high fever, suffered severely from violent headache and sickness of stomach.... One of my feet became very sore from walking over the rocks; every step I took caused acute pain. My poor sprained foot wouldn't go at all. It became paralyzed below the knee, so that I had to drag it along the best way I could with the aid of my long pole. Whilst measuring in this manner the last long mile, I was compelled to lie down to rest five or six times. At length by dint of perseverance we made a house within one quarter of a mile from Mr. Allen's. Being too much exhausted to walk up the hill to the house, we got the Indian to send us up on horseback. I did feel thankful and happy when I found myself enjoying the luxury of one of Mrs. Allen's comfortable beds. A cup of tea and a little food soon revived our spirits and refreshed our bodies. Next day we felt quite lively—only bones and sinews rather sore and stiff. We would not have suffered so much if we had had something to eat. We tasted no solid food from the time we got our breakfast early Thursday morning at Judge Pitchlyn's until we reached Mr. Allen's between three and four o'clock in the afternoon of Friday. We suffered too from want of water. There is no exaggeration in the above narrative, it falls below the reality.

Early Saturday morning we despatched two Indians to the hill for our saddles, saddle-bags and blankets, but they could not find them. On Sabbath day I preached twice at Mr. Allen's. On Monday I went with Mr. Allen to the hill for our things. On Tuesday morning I was on my way to Spencer, and arrived there about nine o'clock Thursday morning, having been absent two weeks. After spending two or three hours in attending to business about the Institution, I left again for Stockbridge (Mr. Byington's) sixty miles off, to attend another "big meeting" at that place. I reached there Friday night. Saturday I preached twice. Sabbath day I preached three times, two long sermons and one short one, and assisted in the administration of the sacrament. This was a most delightful and precious meeting to my own soul. I hope many others found it so too. There were over three hundred people present.

Monday I started for home again, and reached there Tuesday night. Next morning I found the mason had not brick enough to finish the furnaces, I immediately rode to Capt. Jones', eighteen miles from Spencer, to get brick. From there I went to Doaksville on business, and tarried there all night. By Thursday noon I was back again at Spencer....

I have not been pleasuring this vacation. Very far from it; but I have laboured with all the strength of my body, and all the energy of my mind, to lay broad and deep in the hearts of the whole Choctaw people a solid foundation, upon which to raise the Institution over which God in his providence has made me overseer. Consider the following brief summary of my vacation work:

1st. I visited all parts of the Nation except the Arkansas district, and attended "big meetings" within the bounds of each of the five districts connected with the American Board, viz. those occupied by Messrs. Kingsbury, Wright, Byington, Hotchkin, and Copeland.

2d. I attended in all seven "big meetings," and two ordinary Sabbath meetings. At these meetings I did nearly all the preaching. Between the sixteenth of June and the 1st of September, I preached about fifty-times to large assemblies. It pleased God to own his own truth, and to render it effectual to the conviction and conversion of sinners, and the edification of his own people. Over seventy persons signified publicly their determination to forsake their sins and seek the Lord. Many other persons were very manifestly deeply affected with the truth who did not come the length of a public acknowledgment of their feelings. The seed was sown. Fruit will come in due time.

3d. I rode between twelve and fifteen hundred miles; saw and was seen by between three and four thousand people. I saw and conversed with all the leading men in the Nation, both Choctaws and Chickasaws. I met with some forty or fifty of my own boys surrounded by their friends. The boys and their parents appeared truly glad to see me. I am sure I have shaken hands heartily with over a thousand persons at the different gatherings which I attended.

4th. I was present at sixteen large meetings of different kinds, viz. seven "big meetings," two Sabbath meetings, three examinations, one Temperance meeting, one political gathering, one Court and one Council. These meetings were in different parts of the Nation, and yet at every one of them I met some Spencer boys! This interested me exceedingly. At two of the meetings there were sixteen Spencer boys present; at four meetings there were ten; at each of the other ten meetings there were several present. The sight of so many of my boys everywhere I went, filled my heart with gladness and gratitude to God for permitting me to witness such scenes. I never before had such an overwhelming sense of the greatness of the work in which my associates and myself are engaged at Spencer. Often did this thought arise in my mind—Spencer Academy is a fountain sending forth in every direction all over the Choctaw Nation numerous streams of influences either for good or evil. May God cast the salt of his grace into the fountain, so that all these streams by their united influences may speedily cause the wilderness and the solitary place to be glad for them, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose.

In paragraphs fifth and sixth, Mr. Reid speaks of the Interpreters who were associated with him in these services, and the subjects of his discourses. These we omit with reluctance for want of room.

7th. I saw with my own eyes the destitution of the land, and the sight of my eyes did deeply affect my heart. The Choctaws are not only willing, but eagerly desirous to receive the gospel. From some of the darkest regions of the land the people urgently call upon the missionaries to come to them with the gospel. The cry of the people for the gospel is constantly ringing in the ears of our beloved brethren of the American Board. These brethren are labouring far beyond their strength to supply the people with the bread of life, but they cannot begin to do it. The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak. The frames of their bodies are not iron, nor their sinews brass. Neither are they ubiquitous. They can only preach in one place at a time. The Choctaw nation is a field already white for the harvest. And the Presbyterian Church, without making any very extraordinary exertions, could soon gather the whole of it into our Master's garner if she would. She is abundantly able at once to give the gospel to the Choctaw nation if she was only willing. Why, I am persuaded that five cents a year from every member of the Presbyterian Church would defray the expense of supplying the whole Choctaw nation with the preaching of the gospel. There would be enough and to spare, I know there would. Who so poor that they cannot give five cents a year! Who will say that the Presbyterian Church is not able to give the gospel at once to this people. And if she will not do it, will not the blood of lost Choctaws be found in her skirts.

8th. I will state a single fact,—premising that the society of my wife and the quietness of my own room, may be supposed to afford as much pleasure to me as they do to other men in my situation. The fact is this: Out of one hundred and eight successive nights, not more than twenty were spent in my own room? "Deny thyself and follow me is the Redeemer's great command." I got this line by heart more than twenty years ago. After many years' experience I find this to be true, viz. that it is much easier to commit this line to my memory than it is daily to practise the precept in my life. In the days of the Apostles and their successors the grace of self-denial was held in higher esteem, and much more generally exercised than it is in our days. ....

In the last paragraph Mr. Reid says that it has not been his aim to describe the meetings, nor the interesting scenes, but to show that by the blessing of God he was "enabled to do much for the good of the Institution in particular, and for the Choctaws in general." No one can doubt this, after reading this narrative. And surely no one can doubt that the Church ought to rise in her might to supply the spiritual wants of our Indian neighbours. To whom shall they look for missionaries, teachers, and other helpers, if not to those who now occupy the broad land which was once their own.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA, BY THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS.—NO. III.

Taouism:—Its origin and doctrines—Intercourse with demons—Oppression of the sick; example in Mr. Zah's family—Another example.

Laou-keun, the venerable prince, or Laou-tsze, the old boy, was the founder of the Taou sect, or Rationalists. There is a belief that its founder was an incarnation of reason, Eternal Reason, which according to their doctrine is uncreated and self-derived. This Taou, or Reason, they say pervades all things, is the parent of space, and space is the parent of heaven and earth, and heaven and earth produced men and things. They ascribe to Reason three incarnations: the first, B. C. 1407; the second, B. C. 604; and the third, A. D. 623. The first and third are fabulous, the second, or the Laou-tan or Laou-tsze, born B. C. 607, was the founder of the Taou sect. Their doctrines are, that all material, visible forms, are emanations of Taou or Reason. Laou-tsze says, "Reason has produced one, one produced two, two produced three, and three made all things." He teaches "the emanation from, and return of all good beings into the bosom of Reason, and their eternal existence therein; but if not good, the miseries of successive births, and their accompanying sorrow await them." The votaries of this sect talk much about virtue, and think to promote it by abstraction from the world, "eating their spirits, and stifling their breath for a length of time." Perfect virtue is insensibility, and must be attained by mortifying the feelings and subjecting the heart; and to effect this some of them "wander away to the tops of mountains to cultivate reason, and renounce all intercourse with men, that their studies may not be interrupted. They affect to despise wealth, fame, and posterity." Some of the sect have given much attention to the study of alchymy, in order to find something that may secure immortality, or prove an antidote against death. The principal of this sect is supposed to be immortal, and, like the Grand Lama of Thibet, to pass from the body of one, at his death, to the body of another; thus keeping up the succession. He appoints and removes the deities of different districts, and no tutelary divinity can be worshipped without his appointment or sanction.

The Taouists profess to have constant intercourse with, and control over demons and spirits of the invisible world, and by their tricks they prevail upon a credulous and superstitious people to believe all they say about it; and this belief is a source of disquiet to the people, and of great profit to the priests. They teach that these spirits are about in any place, both abroad and in the houses; that they have the power to injure whomsoever they please, and in whatever manner they please; and that none but the priests of this sect, who have intercourse with them, have power to dispel or appease them. The people believe that these spirits have power to afflict them with disease, and when one is seized with any sudden or violent malady a Taou priest is sent for to eject the demon. People who believe such things are continually in fear. They call a priest, and make use of incense, candles, repeating over and over, in a sing-song or chant, certain parts of their books, accompanied with the beating of gongs, firing of powder crackers, and sounds of bells or cymbals. These noises are supposed to be disagreeable to the spirits, and are employed to drive them away. Feasts to propitiate the demons are also spread out upon a row of tables, around which the persons stand, striking the instruments and chanting the given formulas. Whatever other benefits the priests expect from the nice dishes prepared, themselves and their assistants lay claim to a portion of that which is left after the spirits have satisfied themselves on the spiritual qualities of the food and drink. A strange process, indeed, to eradicate disease! What better are the Chinese with all their boasted civilization and comparative refinement than the besotted Africans with their gree-gree men; or than our American Indians, who employ medicine or mystery men for the same purpose! How greatly we are indebted to God for the Bible! "God made man upright, but he has sought out many inventions;" and how absurd and puerile are these inventions; reason alone does not teach them the folly and wickedness of these devices. All men need the Bible.

In a crowded city there will of course be much sickness, and many of the sick will have such diseases as they suppose only the priest can rid them of: therefore their services will be in pretty constant requisition. The night is the time to which they seem to be most partial for the performance of their ceremonies, so that those who have Chinese for near neighbours must experience many sleepless nights; there are few persons that can sleep soundly amidst the unceasing clang-a-rang of gongs and bells, the singsong and jabber of human voices, and the deafening sounds of powder crackers set off in large handfuls, some of which give a report like a musket. I will relate something of our experience in this matter. When we lived on the north bank of the river, opposite the Salt Gate, we had for one of our neighbours Mr. Zah. He was an old man, quite venerable in appearance, with a long white beard falling down over his breast. He had been a boatman, and his four or five sons all followed the same employment. Most of them were married, and all lived with their father, or within the same enclosure, each family having separate apartments. Our south-east window looked down into their yard, and we were obliged to hear all the scolding that occurred in case of disagreement and quarrel; and sometimes to hear the crying of the wives when their husbands whipped them; for the poor Chinese women have to bear whipping, or whatever their husbands see fit to inflict upon them. One day one of the young men was seized with a violent pain in the head and limbs, which caused great alarm throughout the house. After due consideration it was decided that an evil spirit must have got possession of the young man, and that he was then beating his bones, which caused the pain. Therefore a Taou priest was consulted, and about dark he came to the house, accompanied by assistants. Several tables were arranged along through the centre of the middle room, and spread with an abundance of cooked food, and over this the performers began their incantations. There was very little sleep for us that night, with such a bedlam under our window. The priest continued chanting till near morning, and the assistants did not weary in endeavouring to force from their instruments the requisite quantity of harsh sounds. Candles, and incense sticks were kept burning, and large powder crackers were lighted and thrown high in the air, where they exploded with a report equal to that of a rifle. One would think such confusion and distressing noise would craze a healthy person; what then must be its effects upon the sick! That night's performance must have cost the Zah family several dollars; perhaps all the young man had earned for two months. Thus it is they labour to fee and to feed the worthless priests, who only deceive and injure them; while they deprive themselves and their needy families of wholesome food and comfortable clothing! Is there anything we can do to teach them how they may be released from this cruel taxation.

I will transcribe a few sentences that I find in Dr. Medhurst's book concerning a similar occurrence. He says, "the house where a scene of this kind was enacted was nearly full of spectators; and at the head of the room, near the altar-piece, stood a priest, performing various incantations, and now and then striking the floor with a rope which he held in his hand. He then approached a bench, on which sat a native in a pensive mood, over whose head he blew a horn and rang a bell, and went through a few more ceremonies; when the man referred to began to move his fingers, hands, and arms; then his knees and legs, till his whole body became convulsed, and he sprang up and danced around the room like a madman. Just as he was in the act of falling, he was caught by the bystanders, who listened attentively to what he might have to say, and stood ready to record every expression. The occasion of the ceremony was the dangerous illness of an inmate, for whom they wished to obtain an infallible prescription. The possessed soon announced the requisite remedy, which was something about three skeins of red thread, and half an ounce of carpenter's chips, to be boiled down in a pint of water, and a tea-cup full given occasionally. After the unfolding of this wonderful receipt, the individual sank down with a sort of swoon, and was carried out." Do the wild Indians on our western plains exceed this in extravagance and folly?

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF DR. D. B. M'CARTEE: MARCH 29, 1851.

An Aged Inquirer—A Notice of Romanist Missions.

About eighteen months ago, an old man, named Wong, whom I had for some time observed as a regular attendant upon our Sabbath services, called upon me and professed a desire to become my "disciple," saying that he was convinced that our doctrines were good, and wished to learn more of them. Before I could prevent him, he went down upon his knees before me and would have "knocked head" in the usual way in which boys pay their obeisance to their teachers on first entering upon their studies. I, however, succeeded in preventing him from doing so, and told him that we had but one master, Jesus Christ, and that all his disciples were brethren, but that I should be most happy to give him any assistance in my power towards becoming acquainted with the things relating to his soul's salvation. Since that time he has been a regular attendant upon our services, and for some time received instruction from Mr. Culbertson, then pastor of the church, who thought very well of his sincerity. As he complained of frequent interruptions at his own house, and having no family to provide for or detain him, I offered him a place in my house, where he has now been for some two months. He attends family worship morning and evening, following the reading of the Scriptures in Chinese, and frequently coming to me to ask an explanation of some parts not clear to him. He spends almost the whole of every day, apparently with great contentment, in reading the Bible and such religious books as he can get access to, and twice a week attends a bible class under the care of Mr. Way, who has succeeded Mr. Culbertson as pastor of the Mission Church. Notwithstanding his apparent desire to learn, which I believe is sincere, and although he has received a good deal of instruction, he still seems to make rather slow progress in learning, partly, no doubt, from the fact that he is not very much of a scholar. I cannot find that he has any mercenary motive, as he has enough property to keep him from want, and his age precludes him from the hope of making money in any active employment.

There are in China many elderly persons, and some of middle age, who seem to feel that the time is drawing near when they must be gathered to their fathers, and accordingly set themselves to work, by fasting, (or rather abstaining from animal food,) and many prayers, to prepare for their last great change. Old Mr. Wong appears to be one of those, who, having been led to listen to the story of God manifest in the flesh to take away our sins by dying for sinners, feels anxious to learn how he may find an interest in this great salvation, which is offered without money and without price. He is an interesting character, and although he seems, as yet, lacking in some very important points, such as a proper sense of sin, and appreciation of the wondrous goodness of God in giving his Son to die for sinners, yet I earnestly hope that his hoary head may yet prove a crown of glory, and that, when he leaves this scene of sin and imperfection, as in all human probability he must ere very long, it may be to join in the song of the redeemed out of every kindred and tongue, and people and nation, of glory to the Lamb that was slain and has redeemed us unto God by his blood. I have written thus much, that you may see something of our experience in the missionary work. Those who inquire are, as yet, not many. Few of those who have applied to us, like Mr. Wong, are contented to study along by slow degrees to obtain the knowledge of Jesus Christ. The present seems but the seed-time here. We need the prayers of all who love the Saviour's name and look for his appearing, that the Lord of the harvest would pour out his Holy Spirit upon the seed sown, that it may spring up and bring forth fruit to his glory. For, truly, it requires one to be a missionary not long, to be convinced that it is not of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

The Roman Catholics have several tens of nominal converts in Ningpo. Their mission consists of two French priests, and two or three native priests educated at Macao. They have several stations on the island of Chusan, one at Chinhai, and perhaps also a few converts in the neighbouring villages. At the Roman Catholic chapel in this city are two schools and a kind of foundling hospital, containing, in all, about fifty children. The children are not indentured, as in our schools, but given to them, the boys to be brought up as priests, the girls as nuns, and wives for their converts. Among the books they use for the instruction of their catechumens, is a little breviary, containing prayers to the Virgin Mary, invocations to the cross, &c., which might be curious to some who would like to learn what the Roman Catholics teach the heathen. The prayers, &c., are in Chinese, interspered with Latin words and names, of which the syllabic nature of the Chinese written language permits only a very imperfect transfer, as may be seen from the following specimen, in which I have given a translation of what is translated into Chinese, and retained the Latin words which are transferred, but which some would hardly recognize when expressed as nearly as the sounds of this dialect will allow.

PRAYER TO THE VIRGIN MARY.—Avuh-Mawleaw (Ave Marie,) full of Kuh lah tse aw (gratia,) the Lord is with thee. Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus. Holy Mother of Heaven's Lord, pray Heaven's Lord for us sinners, now and at the hour of death. Awmung. (Amen.)

If any one would find it difficult to recognize Mary in Mawleaw, he would have still more in recognizing grace in Kuh law tse aw, and the names of the Trinity in Paw tuhlah, Fe leoh, Szpe le to San to. (Pater, Filius, Spiritus Sanctus.)

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. C. W. FORMAN.

Discussion with two Moulwis—The correct views of a Fakir.

Lahor, May 14th, 1851.—A money-changer, whom I attempted in vain to draw into conversation, told me that a flight of steps near by would lead me into a Musjid (Mosque) on top of the shops, where I would find a learned man, willing to converse with me. I went up, and upon approaching the place of prayer, was requested to take off my boots. This I declined to do, on the ground of inconvenience. But a young Moulwí having discovered their height by feeling, very gravely expressed the opinion that it would not be very difficult to get them off. Upon my refusing again to take them off, an old Moulwí, who, as I was in the meantime informed, was one of the two most learned men in the city, came to where I was standing. We were soon seated upon a mat, and entered into conversation; but the old Moulwí did not seem disposed to forget or allow me to forget for a moment that he was a very great man. He soon said, "Your Bible has been corrupted, our Koran is pure." I replied, that there was some doubt with regard to the purity of the Koran. "You know," said I, "that Mohammed did not give it to his followers in its present form, but that after his death it was collected from scraps, which had been written on pieces of stone, and upon palm-leaves, and from the lips of those who had heard parts which had not been written: and that afterwards all the copies in existence were collected together by one man, every one of which was destroyed, and a new edition issued in their place. Now, I ask, why were the old copies destroyed?" The younger Moulwí replied, "They were corrupt." "Ah!" said I, 'and how do you know that the new edition was pure." They attempted no answer, but became very angry, and said, "Why do you come to talk to us?" I replied, "We are teachers, and——" "Go and teach the ignorant," said the younger Moulwí. "No," I said, "I intended to say both you and I are teachers, and we are not directing into the same way. It is a fearful thing to lead men astray, therefore we should talk together." They became somewhat pacified, and I went on to show what reason we had for believing the Scriptures were not corrupt, which their profound ignorance of the Scriptures and of history prevented their fully appreciating or replying to. I asked what evidence they had of the divine origin of the Koran, corresponding with the prophecies and miracles of the Bible. They said that prophecies concerning Mohammed were written in the Bible. I told them it was impossible to find a Bible in which this was written. Then they said the character of the Koran was a sufficient reason for believing it: no man, they said, could write a sentence equal to any one found in it. I asked whether they referred to the style or meaning. They replied "both." "The meaning," I replied, "is often very fine, but a single good sentiment cannot be produced, which may not be found in the Bible, and it is very evident that they were obtained from it." They had nothing to reply; so I continued, "As to the style of the Koran, that too is confessedly very good, but in other countries there have been writers unequalled by any of their countrymen; and as for the assertion that no single verse of it could be imitated by any man, that was absurd, for there were many commonplace ideas in it, and if these were not expressed in just such language as was generally used by the people, they would be ridiculous; and besides, God would never give a revelation confirmed only by a miracle which can be appreciated by none but those who are learned in the Arabic language. To all of this they attempted no reply, but endeavoured to draw me into the discussion of another subject, against which I steadily protested. When the time for their evening prayer had come, I arose and made my salam, which was very coldly responded to.

23d.—As I rode through a private part of the city this afternoon, two genteel-looking Faqirs requested me to dismount. I did so, and sat down upon a vacant space they made between them on the little verandah where they were sitting. We began at once to talk about the nature of God, our duties to him, and sin. Never did I hear from a heathen such correct ideas upon these subjects. The views expressed by one of them of the attributes of God would have surprised those who think the Hindús have no idea of a God superior to the blocks of wood and stone in their temples. He expressed very clear and correct ideas of man's duties, and when asked if these duties were to be performed towards enemies, he said they were. He acknowledged that all men were sinners, and that transgression demanded punishment. A man standing by asked, "If we repent and reform, will not God forgive?" The faqir replied, "If a man commit a great crime for which he is brought before a judge, will he be pardoned because he repents?" He then asked me in what way we thought a man could be forgiven. When I explained to him the way of salvation through the sufferings and death of Christ, he seemed delighted, his countenance beamed with pleasure: and when I came away he asked me to return to talk with him again about these things.

Notices of various conversations and incidents.

26th.—A Musulman charged Christians with being idolaters, and when I denied the charge, he said, "Why, you have your cross and images of Jesus and Mary, which you worship." We were standing near a chapel built for the Papists in the English army. Of course I admitted at once that there were idolaters who called themselves Christians. A man behind me said something in favour of Christianity, and another turned upon him with the most diabolical expression of countenance and said, "Will you be a Christian?"

A Hindú asserted that God was not wise. When I asked him if God did not make him, and in his creation manifest wisdom, he said he did. Again he said, the fact that the Incarnation of God had been guilty of theft and other horrible crimes proved nothing against his holiness, for his nature was such that all acts were alike with him. I said many things in reply, but none seemed to make any impression, until I asked him to tell me what he meant when he said God was holy. His inability to define the holiness of God, so as to make it appear consistent with base and wicked conduct, seemed to make a good impression on him.

29th.—Stopped before a hut in which a guard of native soldiers were lodged, and asked them to hear me. They put on their dress and accoutrements and came out to hear me. I read and explained a part of our Saviour's sermon on the mount. When I came to the command, "Love your enemies," one said, "that is very difficult." "But is it not right," I asked. Yes, he said it was right, but very difficult. "True," I said, "it is difficult, but it may be made easy." I then explained to them what is taught concerning regeneration, with which the listeners seemed greatly pleased.

June 9th.—A youth in the highest class in our English school wrote in a composition read to-day in substance as follows: "I must express the pleasure

I feel upon the occasion of your establishing a branch school in the city. Blessed are the men who have left their homes and come a year's journey to teach us true science and religion, and blessed are the people who sent them forth. I hope the Panjábis will be enlightened by your efforts."

10*th*.—The youth mentioned yesterday asked me to-day, if a man could be saved without baptism. He seems to believe the Christian religion, but is not ready to take up the heavy cross which lies in every Hindú's way. Nothing, I think, would please him better than to live a Hindú and die a Christian.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES—DR. CHALMERS'S VIEWS.

The conversion of the nations to Jesus Christ is the greatest work in the world—in its object and means, its extent and difficulty, its triumph and glory.

No single Missionary Institution is able to take the superintendence of this work, nor of that part of it which belongs to each of the leading bodies of Christians. It is one of the weak things of Romanism, that she is attempting to conduct the work of propagating her views of religion chiefly by means of one great society, with affiliated associations in different countries. Among Protestants, it will be found more and more, that each leading denomination in any given country will accomplish most by having its separate missionary organization. This method is not open to the charge of sectarianism, any more than the existence of different denominations in the one Church of Christ.

That missionary organization is best in each body of Christians which best accords with their general organization as a Church. The same machinery would not equally suit an Independent, an Episcopal, a Methodist, or a Presbyterian Church. Yet there may be reasons for adopting a form of missionary organization, which does not come within this rule. In the infancy of the missionary spirit among the churches, it may be expedient to form a "Union" Society like the London Missionary Society at first—that Society now being the organ almost solely of the Independent churches of Great Britain and Ireland. Or when the friends of missions are in a minority, and are opposed by the major part of their own body, it may be wise for them to follow the example of the evangelical members of the Episcopal Church in England, whose missions are conducted by the Church Missionary Society. Cases like these are of a temporary or special nature, and do not invalidate the general rule.

We see in these remarks a part of the ground on which the foreign missionary organization of our Church rests. They altogether mistake the matter, who ascribe it mainly to the controversies formerly existing in the Presbyterian Church. Instead of being an effect, it was largely a cause. No unimportant part of the discussions of former days hinged on the right and duty of the Church to conduct the work of foreign missions. As to the precise bearing of those discussions on this subject, however, we do not at present inquire. We would look at the great question as to the best method by which we can carry the gospel to the heathen upon its own merits, without referring to collateral issues.

In this point of view we have reason to be grateful for the ground occupied by our denomination. We do not refer to the details, but to the principles of our missionary policy. The former may probably be improved upon longer trial and experience; the latter seem to us simple, comprehensive, and true.

1. We engage in this work as a Church. It is a work for the Church, as an organized body, and as consisting of individual believers, all acting voluntarily, yet all under law to Christ. As a denomination, we are large enough and strong enough to engage in missions on an extensive scale. Our Church system easily includes the proper supervision of the missionary enterprise. The appointment of executive officers, the examination of their proceedings, the general direction of measures for awakening a missionary spirit among the churches and calling forth it fruits, the review of the varied labours of missionaries in different fields, all these fall readily within the range of our ecclesiastical system.

2. We wish, as a Church, and as members of the Church of our choice, to give to our destitute brethren of the human family, as far as we can, the same blessings which we enjoy ourselves. First among these we reckon our Scriptural doctrines, next our primitive worship, and we do not exclude our church-order, resting as we think it does on the word of God. We would love our heathen neighbours as ourselves, and prove it by giving to them these priceless advantages. We cannot give an abstract gospel to the heathen. We would not give to them less of the gospel and its scriptural order than we have received ourselves.

3. Our missionary organization is so constructed, that all persons connected with it, at home and abroad, act under full responsibility to the Church through our ecclesiastical courts, under rules open and known to all and easily applied.

Thus, for our theory. In practice, we find—

(1) An extended platform of Missions—affording the widest range for the sympathies, gifts, and prayers of all our people.

(2) These missions are efficiently conducted, and at a less per-centage for home operations than is incurred by a Society of much larger income, although in both cases the office establishment is of necessity nearly the same. The income of our Board might be doubled, with but little increase of expense for disbursement, and then the relative cost of executive labour would be greatly reduced.

(3) Approved men and women have been enabled to go forth as missionaries; their friends, to give them up freely to this work; the churches, to support them.

(4) There has been a steady, though too slow an advance in the pecuniary contributions made to this cause. In 1841, the income of the Board was $67,-081; in 1851, $140,221. The amount received from churches, individuals, and legacies was, in 1841, $60,920; in 1851, $100,147.

(5) Our doctrines, worship, and order are found to be beautifully developed on heathen ground. We might infer this from their divine character, and vice versa. The gospel purely preached, the ordinances of religion simply administered, churches formed after the Apostolic pattern, Presbyteries organized, schools of various grades established for the education of the young, the Press at work, the Sacred Scriptures translated, converts made by the Spirit of God, candidates licensed and licentiates ordained by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery—these are not matters of theory but of history. These things show that our Church is engaged in her Lord's work, and that his blessing rests upon her labours. A missionary heart, therefore, should not be wanting to any minister or member of our body, but the united efforts of all should be put forth with real earnestness and with high hopes of success.

Thoughts like these have often sought expression in our columns, but have been excluded by the fear of appearing to glory in matters which are partly of secondary moment. We may not view even missionary plans and labours with a self-complacent spirit; our sad shortcomings should teach us humility. Nor should we disparage the efforts of our brethren of other churches, but rejoice in the gospel preached by them, and be encouraged by their good example. With these conditions, we may regard our missionary views and efforts as worthy of being mentioned, as the fruits of God's rich grace towards us, and through us towards our unevangelized fellow men. As an occasion for these remarks, passing by many things nearer home, we find the following paragraphs in the third volume of Dr. Chalmers' Memoirs, just published, which breathe a catholic spirit worthy of a great man and a good Presbyterian.

The different missionary societies were introduced to the notice of his auditors by sketches of their leading peculiarities and characteristics. The extracts read from the Reports were interspersed with illustrative observations of his own, and the reading of them was accompanied or followed up by addresses, in which, while all the ordinary motives and encouragements to missionary efforts were enforced, the whole sphere of missionary operation was regarded as one wide field of observation, from the philosophic survey of which there were gathered many an illustration of the peculiar doctrines, and many a confirmation of the evidences of the Christian faith. As a specimen of the manner in which these meetings were conducted, let us present our readers with the preliminary notice given of the Church of England Missionary Society.

"The first peculiarity to be observed of this Missionary Society is, that one and all of its agents must be of the Episcopal persuasion, and that they employ none to preach the gospel, even in heathen countries, but those who have received what, according to the principles of their own Church, is held to be a valid and regular ordination. We have heard the Society reproached with bigotry because of this spirit of exclusiveness. We do not sympathize with the jealousy which even the best ministers of our sister establishment [the Church of England] have of those who are without her pale, but we confess that, on various accounts, we feel ourselves completely reconciled to the way in which they have so completely separated themselves in the present instance from all other denominations of Christians. They, in the first place, secure a much larger support from a class who probably might not have felt inclined to contribute of their means to any other missionary society—the most wealthy and influential class, perhaps, of the British population, the members and zealous partisans of the Church of England, who have come forth largely and liberally in behalf of this particular institution, so that their annual income very nearly reaches £40,000 [now, in 1851, over £100,000, or $500,000.] They, in the second place, by having so wholly a distinct agency at home, will the more readily be led to chalk out for themselves a distinct walk of missionary exertion abroad; and I do prefer a number of independent societies, each selecting its own territory of that immense field, which affords room and occupation for the utmost efforts of all the societies that have yet been instituted, and many more besides. I say, I prefer, and think it a more efficient instrumentality for the propagation of the gospel, than were the whole of missionary exertion to be placed under the superintendence of one immense and unwieldy association. In the third place, I think that this separation of themselves from all other societies has led to another advantage: it has furnished us with an additional style and character of missionary enterprise, and I do like to see all the possible varieties of methods that can be adopted for the carrying forward of this vast scheme. I like to see the experiments multiplied and diversified in every conceivable way. And accordingly the Church Missionary Society has furnished us with a very pleasing and instructive variety. They have directed their attention more to the sending out of catechizers and readers, and to the founding of schools for the education of children, and to the settlement of literary correspondents in various stations abroad, whose business it is to furnish all the possible information which they can collect in their respective territories; and, lastly, to the making out of alphabets and written languages for those barbarous nations who never have been so gifted before, and in these languages to furnish the natives with school books and bibles, and the whole apparatus of that scholarship, which is brought to bear on the boyhood of our own land.

"I am not sure if, upon the whole, I do not like this Society better than any others which are now in operation, always excepting the Moravians. I say not this to disparage any one of them. But people will have tastes and preferences; and I must confess that from the whole complexion of their proceedings from the numbers of their Missionary Register to which I had access more than ten years ago, from that vein of devoted spirituality, and of admirable sense by which I think they stand characterized, I have always had a very strong partiality and admiration for this most respectable and respectably supported Society. The very best of English society patronizes it; and among the payments which are made to it, you will observe the names of the most noble and wealthy and lettered individuals in all England. But it is the beauty of Christianity that it rallies rich and poor around a cause which is felt to be alike dear to the common sympathies of both. And accordingly there is no Society which has carried the penny-a-week system to a greater extent, than the one which I am now introducing to your notice."

A FEW WORDS ABOUT ALMANACS.

The march of improvement is not much more obvious anywhere else, than in the change between what Almanacs were, and what Almanacs are. We remember what sort of one we used to recognize as one of the familiar household things of our childhood. It was a very shabby-looking little tract, printed on very bad, yellowish paper, with black, tarry ink, ornamented on the outside with the picture of a plough, and in the inside with that of a man with his hands outstretched towards a circle of very miserable looking beasts, bugs, and creeping things, and his mangled body, looking as if he had come to life and walked off from the dissecting bench of a medical college. We subsequently learned that this picture was allegorical, having reference to certain matters of astronomy, and particularly the signs of the zodiac. The stale anecdotes, doggerel rhyme, and apocryphal recipes, which made up the reading matter, corresponded with the illustrations and general mechanical execution. Still this Almanac of our early days was a thing by no means thought lightly of. It hung conspicuously on its nail the whole year round. It was looked into by the older heads of the family, oftener than any other book in the house, except the Bible. We children consulted it to know which day of the week would be our birth-days, and when the school examinations would be over and vacation commence, and especially as to the precise time in the week for the advent of the Fourth of July and Christmas. It was a standing book of entertainment too—resorted to, once and again—the anecdotes and doggerel read much oftener than have been many better books since, and remembered, when whole chapters of Plutarch, Rollin, and even Alison have faded into dim oblivion.

Times have changed with Almanacs as well as with many other things, since a score or so of years have been rolling their rounds. Instead of the little shabby, yellowish tract, with its plough and mangled man, we have now an elegant pamphlet, printed on the finest paper, filled with valuable information, and illustrated with engravings from the first artists of the age. This is well. That permanent household resident which comes in with the year and stays until the year is out, should wear a garb suited to the best parlour, and the best society. Consulted as he is by old and young, he should come with words of wisdom and instruction, and with the elevating and beautiful, to inform, enlighten, and refine. He is to make lasting impressions, and they should therefore be pleasant, cheerful, and valuable. He admonishes us of the shortness of time, and of the rapidity of its flight, and how can he stoop to trifle, or lead us astray to the impure and immoral? The Almanac is almost the only annual which is ubiquitous. It goes everywhere, it reaches all classes and all ages.

We are very happy to find that the Presbyterian Almanac for this year has elicited such general approval and admiration. It has probably never been excelled, if equalled by any other whatever, in artistic attractions. The illustrations are executed in the first style of art—several of them being from designs by Darley, the illustrator of Washington Irving's Works, and others of the most elegant of the illustrated publications of the day. The reading matter embraces valuable information in reference to our own Church and its benevolent operations, as well as subjects of a general nature—and also a catalogue of the publications of this Board, which it is important to have in every household. We believe pastors and others might do no little good by supplanting the ordinary and often mischievous almanacs, by so beautiful and useful an annual as this.

THE NEW BOOK OF SACRED MUSIC.

Many of our readers will be gratified to learn that the book of sacred music, which has been in course of preparation for some time past, by a Committee of the General Assembly, is now in the stereotyper's hands, and will probably appear not later than the month of April. The Board have selected the distinguished Professor of Music, Thomas Hastings, Esq., of New York, to edit the material placed in their hands by the Assembly's Committee. Mr. Hastings's name will be a sufficient guaranty as to the scientific skill and good taste of the work. The tunes have been chosen with reference to the various wants of different portions of the church; they are to be adapted to the words of our book of Psalms and Hymns; and the notation is not to be what is known as the "patent notes," but the round notes, such as are now uniformly adopted by musical publishers who have any pretension to acquaintance with the science.

ACTION OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION IN REFERENCE TO THE DEATH OF DR. ALEXANDER.

The following minute expressive of the sentiments of the Board of Publication, in reference to the character, eminent services, and decease of their late President, was ordered at their stated meeting held at the Publication House on the 16th Nov. 1851.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication have with sorrow received the announcement that their venerated President, the Rev. Archibald Alexander, D.D. LL.D., departed this life at his residence in Princeton on the 22d October, in the 80th year of his age.

In common with the Church at large, the Board regard the exit of such a man as a severe providential bereavement, by which his family have been deprived of their venerated head, the world of a bright example, the school of the prophets of a learned teacher and sage counsellor, and the Presbyterian Church of one of its most distinguished ornaments and zealous friends.

The Board of Publication regard their own loss, by this event, as peculiarly afflictive. Their late presiding officer cherished a sincere attachment for this Institution, and his concern for its prosperity was unabated to the last hours of life. His advice and counsel, always judicious and wise, were promptly and cheerfully tendered, while his able pen was as freely employed in aiding their efforts to provide for the Church a sound, Christian literature. Nine volumes and seven tracts from his pen are to be found on their catalogue, all calculated to be permanently useful, and many of them are already widely diffused through the Church. His last contribution in this way was issued from the press just about the period of his death.

The Board in contemplating the departure of their venerable friend, express their thanks to the great Head of the Church, that his life was so long preserved; that he accomplished so much for his generation and generations yet to be born; and that he was permitted to go down to the chambers of death, with a Christian character so unsullied, with mental faculties vigorous and unimpaired to the last, and with a hope of immortality so serene and bright.

To the family of the deceased the Board would present their sympathy and condolence, with their heart-felt prayer, that they may find their affliction alleviated by the manifested presence of Him who is more than a husband or a father.

Resolved, That the Board, as a token of their friendly regard, present to the widow of Dr. Alexander, copies of all his works which have been published by them, in handsome ornamental binding.

THE COLPORTEUR AND THE CONSUMPTIVE INVALID.

A candidate for the ministry, who has been spending his vacations as a colporteur for this Board, gives the following interesting account of the use he made of Alexander's Religious Experience, in imparting comfort to a consumptive invalid. His statements as to the aid afforded him by pastors and elders are also worthy of notice and of imitation.

The pastors of these congregations did all in their power to make my labours pleasant and useful. If all pastors would co-operate with the colporteurs of our Board as the Rev. Messrs. Knox, Wood, Hunt and Townley did with me, a great work could be done for the Church by the circulation of books and tracts, the colporteur's labour would be easy—and eternity alone could reveal the important results which would be produced.

They engaged in the work cheerfully, and in the right way. I would lay before them the plan of operation, and suggest to them that as it was the work of the Church, perhaps some of their people would be willing to engage in it. Previously to my visiting the families, they would call their sessions together, introduce me to them, and then devise some plan by which either a pastor or an elder would accompany me with a horse and carriage. We would then engage in the work in good earnest, not, however, making it entirely a book-selling business. We visited the poor and needy, the sick and afflicted. We ascended the mountains, traversed the valleys, and went out into the by-ways and hedges.

The season seemed to be adapted for us to do good. While we were labouring in German Valley, two men were instantly killed with falling earth, while digging limestone. One was a young man in the midst of his days, and the only support of a widowed mother; the other had reached the period of threescore years. I attended the funeral with Mr. Hunt. They were both buried on the same day and in the same yard. The scene was a very solemn one. In the morning they both passed by the graveyard in good health, next evening they lay side by side among the coffined dead. We endeavoured to improve this dispensation of Providence, by warning the careless to make immediate preparation for death, and to encourage those who had in anticipation eternal bliss, to rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him; for as he had come to their neighbours unexpectedly, so he might come to them.

When I was engaged about a year or more ago, I met with a lady whose mind was greatly concerned about her spiritual welfare. She appeared to be a victim of consumption, and, aware that her life on earth would be short, she felt that an interest in the Saviour was all-important. I endeavoured to impress upon her mind the importance of attending to the matter in good earnest, of being much engaged in prayer and following the directions of the Bible. She complained of evil thoughts, which seemed constantly to darken her spiritual sky, so that hope would seem almost gone. I gave her a copy of Dr. Alexander's Religious Experience, saying that I thought it would meet her case. I left her, some time passed and I received a note from her, stating that the "reading of the book had relieved her mind—it met her case exactly—it was full of encouragement and interest. And now as her body was fast sinking into the grave, she had resolved, 'If I perish, I will pray and perish only there.'"

Such a note is very cheering to one who has laboured in this work. The reading of this book, and the influence of the Holy Spirit may have been the means of leading this soul to Christ. And if I could be sure that God had made me the instrument of leading one sinner to turn to Christ, it would abundantly reward me for a life spent in his work.

BAPTISM IN WATER, AND BAPTISM WITH WATER.

We have already noticed the "Confessions of a Convert from Baptism in water to Baptism with water," a little work recently issued by the Board of Publication. The author is the son of a leading member of a Baptist congregation, and was himself a superintendent of a Sabbath-school, when he became incidentally convinced that immersion is not the scriptural mode of baptism. There is much to interest the popular mind in the perspicuous, sprightly style of the book. We give the following as a sample of the author's skill in handling an argument.

"There is a third question with which I am tempted to trouble you. It is this: How, upon your views, do you account for the circumstance that, in all the predictions and promises of the Holy Spirit contained in the Old Testament, you never meet with any allusion to divine influence which agrees with your favourite mode of representing it? Had God intended to appoint immersion as the standing and only symbol of the Spirit's operation to the end of time, might we not have expected to find some metaphor or some reference in accordance with this practice? But there is none. Not a line, not a word occurs in psalms or prophecies which alludes, even in the most remote manner, to dipping, plunging, or any such mode of employing the element which God has consecrated for the service of his sanctuary. But while there is not a syllable that agrees with immersion, there are several very striking descriptions of the dispensation of the Spirit which allude to the mode which you reject. Need I remind you of such passages as the following? 'Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean.' 'So shall he sprinkle many nations.' 'I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring.' 'And it shall come to pass afterwards that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh.' Now, how is this? With the importance which you attach to your mode of baptizing, how do you account for the very strange circumstance, (to say the least of it,) that numerous prophecies of the descent of the Holy Ghost should exactly agree with affusion, but never with immersion? And between these prophetic representations of the Old Testament, and the history of their accomplishment in the new, the accordance is most exact. Here we read that the Holy Spirit 'came upon' those that received him; that he 'fell upon them, was 'shed upon' them, and was 'poured upon' them. Now, as visible symbols and audible sound are only two forms of language—the one addressed to the eye, the other to the ear—we might therefore naturally expect, when both are employed to represent one thing, that some correspondence would be found between the modes of representation. And this correspondence exists between the 'divers baptisms' of the law (which were principally sprinklings) and the manner in which the prophets describe the divine influence, of which these sprinklings were the sign. Why, then, should no such agreement appear under the gospel? While the same verbal form is retained, what reason can be assigned or imagined, why the visible should be changed? Why should the counterpart of a promise to pour out be found in the very different mode of plunging in? And why, moreover, should a long consecrated symbol of the Spirit's influence be superseded by another, which presents no accordance whatever with the language either of the Old Testament or of the New? How is all this to be explained?

"But I must trouble you with one question more, and it shall be the last. Without asking you to account for the singular circumstance (singular, I mean, if the word 'baptism' only signifies immersion) that, when the Saviour's promise—'Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost', was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, the Spirit was 'shed forth' upon them. I should like much to know how it could have happened, when Peter saw that 'the Holy Ghost fell upon' Cornelius and his company, that then 'he remembered the word of the Lord, Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost?' Believing, as you do, that the word baptize describes a mode of applying the body to water, and that mode to dip, I am sure that any thing which 'fell' upon a person would never remind you of a baptism. It would be one of the very last things to suggest such an idea. How, then, did it happen that the descending symbol of divine influence had precisely the opposite effect upon Peter's mind which it must have had upon yours? Why did such an action, unless there was a correspondence between it and the usual mode of baptizing, bring an idea to the apostle's thoughts that no Immersionist would have ever entertained? Surely he must have had very different associations with the word baptism from those which your practice is calculated to form. And I see not how to account for this difference, except upon the supposition that Peter had been accustomed to administer the ordinance by pouring, whilst you deem dipping a more excellent way."

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS AND TRACTS.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES of the Founder, and principal Alumni of the LOG COLLEGE. Together with an account of the Revivals of Religion under their ministry. Collected and edited by Archibald Alexander, D. D. 18mo. 279 pages. Price 50 cents.

Much as we valued the treasures from Dr. Alexander's pen whilst he was living, they have a greatly enhanced value to us now that he is gone. The volume before us contains narratives of the times, and the men who were connected with the early history of Presbyterianism in New Jersey. The work is popularly known as the "Log College"—deriving its title from Mr. Tennent's School at Neshaminy, at which most of the earlier members of the Presbytery of New Brunswick were educated. In the year 1838, Dr. Alexander preached a centenary sermon before that Presbytery, which they requested for publication. Finding the material before him too great to compress into one sermon, he determined to enlarge it into a volume. The result we have before us in a series of biographical sketches of the Tennents, Blairs, Finley and others, and narratives of the remarkable revivals with which they were connected. We are quite sure that the interesting topics, as well as the name of the venerated author will secure readers for the Log College.

THE CHILD'S POETICAL KEEPSAKE. Prepared for the Presbyterian Board of Publication. 18mo. square, 112 pages. Price 40 cents.

We do not know but that in regard to these books, we may fall into the very venial error of some partial hearers in regard to their pastor's sermons, of thinking the last in some respects always the best. Certainly if there have been more exquisitely delicate and beautiful wood cuts in any former publications of the Board, or in any other American publications, we do not remember to have seen them. The poetry is very well selected for the class of readers for whom it is designed. This volume will probably be a favourite gift-book for all holidays for some time to come.

CATECHISMUS MINOR Westmonasteriensis, Latine redditus A. G. Dillingham, 1656, et nunc denuo in lucem editus, mendis aliquot expurgatus. 24mo. pp. 24. Price. 12 cents.

The friends who have for some time past been desirous that the Board should publish either the whole or a part of the Confession of Faith in Latin, will be gratified to see the Shorter Catechism in the language of the old Romans. The Covenanter Magazine suggests that it would be well to use it as a school book. We believe there was formerly in this city a teacher who was accustomed to require his pupils to commit to memory the Latin Shorter Catechism. We cannot be too familiar with so excellent a compend of theology in any and every form.

THE SHORTER CATECHISM IN GERMAN is also amongst the publications just out. Price 6 cents.

We trust that the brethren living in contiguity with Germans, some of whom have requested the publication of the Catechism in this language, will now avail themselves of it, and as far as practicable make it the medium of instilling a sound Theology where it is so much needed.

TRACTS.

GUILLAUME ET SA MERE; ou Quel est le vrai Repentir?

This is a translation from one of our interesting narrative tracts already published in English. The attractions of the narrative and the discriminating views of repentance adapt it to be highly useful for circulation among the French portions of our population.

SALVATION BY GRACE. 12mo. 16 pages.

On such a theme, how could a pious heart and well instructed mind fail to produce a profitable tract? We have here rich material for edification—presented in a lucid and logical method, and in the right spirit.

The Rev. Josiah Crawford has resigned the care of the Smyrna and Lancaster churches, and taken charge of Owen Creek and Utica churches. His address is Polk Run, Clarke Co., Indiana.

Varieties.

Free Church of Scotland.—Dr. Candlish, at the re-opening of the Free College, read a lecture in which he maintained that there should be between the Church and State, a co-ordination of powers, with a subordination of persons; that the Church should be supported by the State, but not controlled by it; a beautiful thing in theory, but an impossibility in practice.

Conversions from Popery.—Conversions from Popery continue to multiply in Ireland. The Connaught Watchman says that upwards of 15,000 persons of the Roman Catholic persuasion, in that province, have now embraced the Protestant religion. The Tablet cannot disguise the fact that an anti-Popish spirit exists in all ranks of the Irish Roman Catholics.

Reading Sermons.—The charge of reading sermons was recently tabled against one of the ministers in a Scotch Presbytery, and by his own session. But he so defended himself, that the Presbytery, though they condemned the practice in the general, allowed it in his case.

A Pleasant Fact.—More Bibles have been sold in Hungary, within the last two years, since the Revolution, than for any time during the previous twenty years, notwithstanding the mass of the people are so nearly beggared by the losses of the Revolution and Austrian extortion.

Church of England and Dissenters.—The Committee of Parliament on church rates, have recently examined Edward Baines, Esq., who has gathered extensive information on the subject. He states that nearly or quite one-half of the population of England and Wales are dissenters—that the number of dissenting chapels, being over fourteen thousand, is somewhat greater than the number of the houses of worship of the Established Church. In the great manufacturing and commercial towns, the dissenting congregations exceed in attendance the established churches; and in the rural districts, the case is reversed.

Mortality in the States.—The census of 1850 shows the following proportion of deaths to the whole population in the following States: Vermont 1 in 100, Iowa 1 in 94, Georgia 1 in 91, Michigan 1 in 87, Tennessee 1 in 86, North Carolina and Alabama 1 in 85, South Carolina 1 in 83, Maine 1 in 77, New Jersey 1 in 75, Virginia 1 in 74, Illinois and Delaware 1 in 73, Arkansas 1 in 70. Texas 1 in 69, Rhode Island 1 in 66, Kentucky and Connecticut 1 in 54, Maryland 1 in 60, Massachusetts 1 in 51.

Stamps.—Over $600,000 worth of postage stamps have been issued by the post-office department since July last.

Leaving the Priests Behind.—The London Times states it as a remarkable fact, that the peasantry of the south and west of Ireland who have been and are emigrating to America, "have evinced no greater inclination to carry with them their priests than any of the other miseries which ground them down to the dust in their native land."

Bibles in England.—Returns laid before the House of Commons, show that during three years, ending December 31, 1850, the Queen's printers printed 1,157,500 Bibles and 750,000 Testaments. At the Cambridge press, 138,500 Bibles and 304,000 Testaments.

Paper for Roofing.—A paper mill in Georgia is engaged in manufacturing an article of paper for roofing, which is believed to be better and cheaper for that purpose than almost anything else. It is made of the same materials as common wrapping paper, is a quarter of an inch thick, and is securely nailed to a well seasoned covering of boards, and then thoroughly tarred and sanded. It is said to be fire-proof, and as hard as stone.

Coal in Iowa.—Dr. Owen, the geologist, reports that the coal fields of Iowa extend nearly across the State, and are 200 miles in width, and in some places 100 feet in thickness. The river Des Moines is to be made navigable through these fields.

American Literature Abroad.—The American Magazine is a new monthly just started in England. The design is to render it a stated medium of communication between the ablest American writers and the British reading public—in our judgment an excellent idea.

Liquor Selling in Boston.—Agreeably to a recent order of the Mayor and Aldermen, directing the City Marshal to ascertain the number of places where intoxicating drinks were sold within the city, he reported to the Board that the whole number of such places was 1500, viz:—American dealers, 400; German and Swedes, 110; Irish, 900. Sold in cellars, 310; above ground, 1190. Male dealers, 1374; female dealers, 126. Sold in oyster and ice-cream saloons, 65; sold in bowling alleys, 90; sold in grocery stores, 469; in other places 1031. Open on the Sabbath, 979. All of the first-class hotels, with the exception of four, have open bars for the sale of intoxicating drinks.

What Does it Mean!—It is three hundred years since Rome entered on the work of missions; within this period she has made converts among people speaking sixty or seventy different languages, but not a single instance is known of her having translated the Scriptures into the language of the people where she has her missions.

Newspapers in the United States.—Holdridge's Statistical Almanac for the year 1852, estimates the number of newspapers published in the United States, annually, at 412,880,000 being equal to sixteen and a half copies per year for every man, woman and child. While in the British Empire only one is published for every 2000 of the inhabitants; in Belgium one to every 25,000; in Persia, one to every 20,186; in Russia, only three copies to every 1,000,000.

A FIXED HEART.

"My heart is fixed, O God, my heart is fixed." But on what is your heart fixed, dear reader? To have a fixed heart, provided it be fixed on the right object, is well; but to have your heart directed to a wrong object, and then fixed there, is any thing else than well. Some hearts seem not to be fixed at all. They are restless, uneasy, ever seeking for some new thing on which to lay hold, and pour out upon it the strength of the soul; ever tossed about on tempestuous seas, crying, "Who will show us any good?" —wandering stars shot from their courses, and able to return to their orbits never more.

But on what is your heart fixed? Is it on the gathering together in the greedy walks of mammon a little of this world's gains? Are you, like the Cyclops, with but one eye, and that always turned upon some golden goal before you? Who can watch the ceaseless throngs who press along the thoroughfares of our crowded cities, without descrying in the rapid gait, restless eye, and anxious countenance, tokens of the inward workings of some great ruling passion which has laid hold upon the man, and bound him as with some mysterious "possession." To have the heart fixed supremely upon the sordid gains of mammon's walks, to make gold your meat and drink, your conversation, your meditations, the all-absorbing "one thing" that you strive for—this is far from well.

Plead indeed you may, the lawfulness of your pursuits, the honour of honest labour, the scriptural injunction to industry, the necessity of providing for wife and children both while you tabernacle with them and when you may have been taken from them—all these and more you may plead, in order to convince others and yourself that you are not a true worshipper of the idol mammon, but merely a faithful labourer in things approved. But what motives inspire your heart and propel your busy hands? "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all for the glory of God," is the divine prescription as to the spirit with which the truly faithful man is to sail his ships, sell his goods, drive his trade or cultivate his fields. On any other platform your toils must begin and terminate with self, the world will be an end for which life is to be expended here, and not a means towards a better life here and hereafter.

Some fix their hearts on that honour which cometh from their brother men, on feats of statesmanship, of literature, of eloquence, on places of distinction and power; and some, more senseless still, like insects of a summer's day, on giddy sensual pleasure, on sumptuous furniture and apartments, on rich and imposing attire, on the excitements of the opera and the waltz, on all that endless round of emptiness and folly comprehended within the circle of what is called fashionable life. Such heart-fixing is not well.

To fix the heart on God—the high, the holy One, whose habitation is eternity, but who reveals himself through his incarnate Son, our Saviour—to centre the hopes, and the affections, and lay all the interests of the soul upon the provisions of his grace; to find delight in contemplating his character, his works and his word; to draw the motives from the lofty and immortal themes which he reveals; to lay out the life, expending its energies and directing its purposes to the advancement of his glory and the upbuilding of his kingdom; and to walk through this world as a strange country, in the sweet expectation of finding an eternal home at last in God's immediate, heavenly presence—this is to fix the heart on God. This is to find a soul-satisfying, soul-absorbing, ever-during good. This is to bring back the wandering star from its long and dreary exile and fix it in its true orbit, where, bound by the all-delightful and unceasing power of a celestial gravitation, it shall pursue its true path onward and forever!

A SHORT PRACTICAL SERMON.

My text is Matt. xiii. 31—33, and I give you as the doctrine:—The kingdom of heaven planted and hid in the heart of the true believer is small in its beginnings, but surely advances unto perfection.

An important doctrine this, a fact, if you please, clear as a fountain. "A grain of mustard seed!" The least of all seeds, very small as it lies in the earth, in its beginnings of life, grows, becomes a tree, advances unto perfection! "The leaven," a little, hid in the three measures; it leavens, till the whole is leavened, advances unto perfection! We add that this doctrine is confirmed by our regeneration; by the power of indwelling sin subdued, not wholly destroyed; by our sanctification, the same work of the Spirit being carried on, we are enabled daily to die unto sin and live unto righteousness; by the experience of all true believers that now are, and that have ever been on the earth. Who can say, "I have made my own heart clean?" Who were Noah, Abraham, Sarah, Lot, Isaac, Rebecca, Jacob, Leah, Rachel, Moses, Aaron, Miriam, David, Solomon, Peter, Paul, James and John, while on earth? Perfect or imperfect believers?

But what is the reason of this fact or doctrine? "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." The mighty God and Saviour could perfect holiness in us in a second of time, and keep us holy on earth a thousand years if he chose to do it. But not so. His will is to make us meet—advance us unto perfection—from a small beginning. Herein is his infinite wisdom and benevolence: 1. It falls under his great system of government and laws, pervading all creation. All things passing from a lower to a higher state of being and organization require time, longer or shorter. This belongeth to creatures. There is a law of development, training and progress unto perfection, visible in all God's works, in all his kingdom of nature. The same law obtains in his kingdom of grace. 2. In this process the Lord acts for his own glory and the good of man. Take an illustration. Why did God lead his people through the wilderness? To prove them, to humble them, to make them feel their dependence, and finally when they should pass Jordan to make them say, "Not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name, O Lord, be all the glory!" Why do the redeemed in heaven cast their crowns before God and the Lamb? The true believer well knows.

One step more. How is the fact evidenced? Why, if the kingdom of heaven is set up in the heart of the true believer and advances unto perfection, it will be known in the experience of the believer himself, and observed by the Church and world around him.

I cannot stay to show this. The believer knows it to be so. I will bring my discourse to a close by a few inferences and remarks, to which I invite your particular attention.

1. There is sin remaining in every Christian on this earth. Scripture, and facts, and experience, abundantly prove it. This the true believer knows to his cost, to his shame, to his sorrow.

2. The mere fact of the existence of sin in a man does not prove him to be no Christian. The true test is, what is the power and extent of sin, and how is it regarded and treated by him, in view of the love of God, through Christ Jesus our Lord, towards his soul. Young converts, and old converts, afflicted with indwelling corruption, apply this test, and come to comfort.

3. The Christian life is one of warfare, self-denial, watchfulness, perseverance, prayer, faith. Christ is every thing,—"without me ye can do nothing."

4. The true believer has evidence that he is advancing unto perfection. He sees the day dawning. O glorious hour, when his soul shall be freed from sin and made holy as Christ is holy. Precious is the work of the Holy Spirit. The contrary is true of the hypocrite and self-deceiver! Lord, open their eyes!

5. And lastly, the practical and important matter which I have had in view for myself first, and you and your Christian readers next, is: we must have charity one toward another, and learn to bear one another's burdens. Your brother or sister falls into sin, in word or deed, he or she offends you—wounds the Lord. You cast stones, you blame, depress, persecute almost unto death! Are you yourself without sin? Do you never do wrong? Do you never need the charity of your brethren and sisters? What is the state of your heart and life before God and his people? Have charity among yourselves!

For the Home and Foreign Record.

A STRIKING FACT.

Among about one hundred and sixty persons added to one of the churches in Saratoga county, New York, as the fruit of a revival some thirty years ago under the preaching of the Rev. Dr. Nettleton, there were about twenty cases of discipline; and from recent investigations it appears that of these twenty delinquents, not one had received a religious education in childhood! Such a fact needs no comment. It is of itself a strong argument for the present education scheme of the Presbyterian Church, as well as for faithful household instruction.

BOARD OF DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Business Officers of the Board.

Corresponding Secretary—Rev. C. C. Jones.

Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. Happersett.

Treasurer—Mr. Samuel D. Powel.

Address, Mission Rooms, No. 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Letters relating to Missionary appointments, and other operations of the Board, including Church Extension, should be addressed to the Corresponding Secretary.

Donations and Subscriptions should be sent to the Treasurer; or, if more convenient, to the following persons:

J. D. Williams, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Andrew Davidson, Louisville, Ky.

Thomas Moodie, Columbus, Ohio.

NOTICE.

To save space, our matter is printed in small type throughout. We commend the different articles to our readers, and we trust they will be used by our Pastors in their Missionary meetings and refresh the spirit of the people of God. We are happy to report that the contributions from the churches, from May 1851 to January 1852, compared with the same period last year, from May 1850 to January 1851, in the Treasuries at Philadelphia, Louisville and Pittsburgh, have increased, but not largely—nor sufficiently to enable the Board to meet the excess of expenditures over the income of the past year. The falling off in the entire receipts, for the period compared, is $2473, and chiefly in Legacies; they have been less in this than in the past year. We have need of renewed exertions. Yet, Brethren and Friends, we have reason for thankfulness, our spiritual—our best condition—we trust is improving. Speak to the children of Israel therefore that they go forward in this great work, in the fear of the Lord.

THE GREATEST WANT OF ALL.

Amidst all the wants that gather upon our beloved Zion, we labour under no more serious want than that of the presence and power of the Spirit of God in the hearts of our Ministers and Members. Here and there we have comforting evidences that He hath not forgotten us; that our sins and iniquities have not separated us from Him for ever; but alas! the general state of religion is such as to affect the hearts of all God's people, and to awaken them to the fact that they have left their first love, and that they should remember from whence they have fallen, and repent and do their first works. If the Divine Spirit, the source and only source of light, love and activity in the soul, were with us, our Zion would arise and shine. It is indicative of good, that we are beginning to feel our true spiritual condition, and in many cases to look to the right source for aid. "We need especially the Spirit's influences," is a sentence now frequently occurring in the Reports of our missionaries. Exhortation to duty in a case so plain would perhaps be deemed unnecessary. Better that each for himself should turn unto the Lord, and hear him speak to us in his Holy Word, and examine ourselves thereby, that we may be revived in every grace and quickened in every duty.

May not the 80th Psalm be expounded by our Ministers, and applied in the great congregation to our present spiritual condition as a Church, and may not all our Members make it a subject of prayerful meditation.

We surely need that our God in mercy would stir up his strength before all our States—and come and save us; for in no one of them is there any thing like a general seriousness, or turning to the Lord. In sincerity let our prayer be—"Return, we beseech thee, O God of Hosts, look down from heaven and behold and visit this vine." And should he return, the happy influences of a general revival of religion would spread over all this land, and be felt for generations to come. Hasten it, O Lord!

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

By direction of the Board of Missions we attended the late meeting of the Synod of Georgia in Griffin; which makes the eleventh Synod visited this season. There was an excellent attendance: much business despatched, and an uncommon energy and zeal displayed in all the interests of religion, and the welfare and prosperity of the Presbyterian Church in that wide field occupied by the Synod. All the schemes of our Church received attention from the Synod, which, as a body, is remarkably united in their support. The Domestic Missionary work of our Church, carried forward through the Board of Missions, was brought before Synod, and received most marked expressions of affection and confidence: and we trust beneficial effects will follow the feeling and action elicited upon the occasion. The Synod passed a series of Resolutions—calling attention to the dearth of divine influences in our Church generally, for some time past—enjoining collections in all the churches—expressing confidence in the Board—and the desirableness, that the Synod should raise for the current ecclesiastical year all the funds that might be needed for the support of the missionaries in connection with the Board, labouring within its bounds.

The Synod fell short last year, and in view of that fact, the last resolution was introduced. That the resolution can be carried into effect, there is no doubt, and even more than it calls for might be done. We earnestly hope, nay, confidently expect that the Brethren will faithfully come up to the work, and enable us to say at the close of the year, that the Synod of Georgia has fully sustained all her missionaries—and, may we add, left a balance in our treasury to her credit. So be it, by divine blessing. The disbursements for missions in the Synod last year were $1601. Surely with 114 churches, 74 ministers, and 5221 members, we can make up this sum. Think of your destitutions, Brethren, and the call for missionary labour in the State. Let us seek the true spirit—a love to Zion—a love to souls—a love to our Divine Head.

We have returned refreshed from this visit as from others. There is nothing more sweet in this world than the communion of brethren beloved, the fellowship of saints in Christ Jesus: no work more happy than the up-building of His Kingdom of Glory.

CHEERING NEWS OF OUR PACIFIC MISSIONS.

A letter has recently been received from Rev. R. Robe, who went the overland journey to Oregon. He arrived safely in August last. Mr. Geary, who went by the Isthmus route some weeks earlier, arrived before him. Says Mr. Robe—"Having just arrived in this Territory, I hasten to transmit to you a knowledge of the fact. I forbore writing on my journey out, on account of the delay and uncertainty in the transmission of letters written from points on the route. In looking back on the dangers and difficulties of the way, surely we may ascribe to our Preserver, care like to that exercised toward Israel of old: "He found him in a desert land and in a waste, howling wilderness, he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye." Never before have I been placed in circumstances, where the Lord alone seemed so emphatically my helper: and never before have I tasted the sweetness (as now I trust I have) of that promise—"Every one that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or land, for my name sake, shall receive an hundred fold, &c." Christ dwelling in the heart by faith, I have found a hundred fold more precious than they all! Brother Geary I understand is already situated in a field of labour. I purpose going to see him immediately. Other denominations, especially Methodists and Campbellites seem already to have considerable footing here. May we not hope for the day when our own beloved Zion shall abundantly flourish in this goodly land! I intend commencing my labours without delay, and feel that I have need of your prayers, and the prayers of the Church under whose patronage we labour. "Pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified." I return my sincere thanks for the present of books which you sent out by Mr. Geary."

The letters of Mr. Geary have not yet come to hand: we are expecting to hear from him daily.

Rev. Lewis Thompson, our other missionary, writes one month later from Coltsop Plains—"A short time since the box of books forwarded to the ladies of this congregation by our Board of Publication was received, and last Sabbath we were permitted for the first time to use the Bible and Hymn books in our public worship in the house of God! On a review of the history of this Church, we find many causes of regret, and yet we have not been left without some encouragement. When we came here, now more than five years ago, there was not one Presbyterian family in all the Plains; now there are seven. On the first Sabbath after our arrival (a Presbyterian family came with us) we met in a private house for the worship of God! Our Sabbath services were continued in that place until last fall, when our Church building was finished! Since that time we have worshipped in it. The fact that so small a church has been enabled to build a house for the worship of God at an expense of some $2300, should ever call forth the most lively feelings of gratitude to Him who has the hearts of all men in his hands. For the first three years nothing was contributed towards the support of their minister, nor for benevolent purposes. But including the present year not yet closed, and collections not all made, for the three last years, they have contributed annually an average to their pastor of $128, and to benevolent objects, for Bibles and hymn books, Temperance documents, American Bible Society and our own Boards, an annual average of $99.67. We desire to feel humbly grateful to the great Head of the Church, that he is evidently communicating to us a better spirit. He has graciously remembered us in all our wanderings from him. For nearly three years the pastor of this church was almost entirely without books; but in the kind and watchful Providence of a gracious God, through the instrumentality of two of our Boards, the Board of Missions and the Board of Publication, a most acceptable supply of some of the best standard works has been received, now more than two years ago. Besides his spiritual mercies, the Almighty is daily crowding around us the common bounties of his providence. It would really be encouraging if in God's gracious providence we should be enabled to report the organization of the Oregon Presbytery before the close of the present year. It would constitute a new era in this Territory. We should then be encouraged to cherish the hope that our branch of the Church was coming up to her duty in publishing the glad tidings of salvation in these ends of the earth."

A reinforcement of this Mission will go out, as soon as the season will permit, in the spring, of another Minister with his family. He is connected with a colony. Another colony in the West has been projected, which intends taking, in like manner, its Minister with it: and the Board may be called upon to aid in his settlement and support.

Another Minister also will go out to reinforce the Mission in California in February, from Tennessee, accompanied, we trust, by his family. And through a recent letter from California, we learn the pleasing fact, that a community of Presbyterians are making arrangements for his settlement among them so soon as he arrives. The probability is, that his support wll be made up by them.

The Rev. Albert Williams of San Francisco, under date of Dcember 2, writes:—"I have hope for the prosperity yet of our branch of the Church. Presbyterians who are Presbyterians, must have Presbyterian ministers—and no half-way, no compromising measures and organizations can satisfy them.

Mr. Woodbridge's return is waited for with longing, and indeed impatience, by his people: for the hearts of the people are with him.

I am happy to report that the prospects of my church since we have entered our new House of worship are increasingly encouraging. Last evening was set for the public letting of pews for the ensuing year; and, I am told, the business went off in a very spirited manner. The highest premium paid for the choices was a little over 50 per cent. upon the assessed annual rent. I trust we shall present soon a pretty strong force. But enough about ourselves.

Our cry is still, come over and help us. The mail steamer which arrived to-day, brings the sad news of the death of Dr. Alexander. Great and good man! I have much reason to cherish and respect his memory, among other things, for the kind and encouraging words he addressed to me, in the view of my leaving for California. I remarked to him that I had something of the spirit of adventure in my constitution. He said, 'I am glad you are going, and (pardon me for repeating it) you may do something great.' And added, 'were I a young man, I would go myself.' These were his words, uttered in that well known and most attractive place, his own study."

MINNESOTA ENTERED.

We take pleasure in stating that the Board have commenced their Missions in Minnesota, after a delay which, under the circumstances of it, was unavoidable. The Rev. I. G. Riheldaffer has been commissioned to this Territory, and is now located at St. Paul's. He arrived upon his field of labour the 30th of October, 1851, and writes under good impressions, and with the spirit of an ambassador for Christ. This beginning will be followed up as fast and as far as we are enabled to do so in Providence. He remarks: "It is very important that we should have a House of Worship as soon as possible. A church should be built next summer. Are there not some good people East, who have enough and to spare, whose zeal for God and desire to extend the faith we hold, will prompt them to aid us liberally in building a good church in the capital of this rising State.

REINFORCEMENT TO TEXAS.

WHERE WE MUST LOOK FOR MINISTERS.

Two Ministers were sent out by the Board, in the month of November, to Texas. They are both single, young, and ardent, and of good report, and we trust may prove efficient aids to the brethren labouring in that vast and important State, and assist in settling firmly, by God's blessing, the foundations of our Church there.

Rev. Dr. Daniel Baker, under date of December 12th, 1851, holds the following language:—"The tide of immigration is flowing in upon us surprisingly; but no ministers scarcely, of our communion, coming in upon this tide! What are we to do? We call, but they will not come! What has become of the Missionary spirit? The spirit, I will not say of a Peter or a Paul, but of a Brainerd or a Martyn? Alas! alas! In these days, all men seem to seek their own, and not the things which are Jesus Christ's. We need in Texas fifty active Missionaries, and we have not half a dozen—scarcely one! What is to be done? Other denominations are shooting ahead, and we are standing still! Many Presbyterians are coming in, but they come only to be scattered and lost to us! It is estimated that we have already in this way lost a thousand! and the process of losing is going on. Brother Jones, I have lately had a new idea. Despairing of efficient aid from the old States, I think we must raise up preachers amongst ourselves. The other day, this idea flashed upon me with great force; and now, when I see a promising young man in the Lord, I make it a practice to tap him upon the shoulder, and say, 'Young man, are you sure it is not your duty to preach the gospel?' I am happy to say there are now, some four or five in the circle of my acquaintance in Texas, who have the Ministry in view. The Lord increase the number of such an hundred fold. Our College enterprise is still in a prosperous state. I trust it will be a great blessing to Texas and our Church."

Happy would it be, if our ministers and missionaries in our newer as well as older fields of labour, would adopt this "new idea" for a supply of labourers in the Lord's vineyard, as our venerable and devoted Brother pleasantly terms it; and whenever they see a promising young man in the Lord, "make it a practice to tap him on the shoulder, and say, Young man are you sure it is not your duty to preach the Gospel?" Verily we are remiss in this thing. EVERY STATE AND TERRITORY SHOULD LOOK TO ITSELF FOR ITS OWN MINISTRY:—that, if possible, by Divine blessing, it may have enough and to spare.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE COLOURED POPULATION.

We are receiving Reports from time to time of the openings for, and labours in this good work. The following recent letter from Mississippi will be read with interest.

"When about to leave the Seminary a year ago, by the advice of Dr. Alexander, I accepted a proposal from Rev. Mr. W———, to become a missionary to the negroes, where I now labour, and took from the Doctor a letter of recommendation to the Board, which procured me a blank commission to be filled up after my arrival out. But meanwhile Rev. Mr. W——— had made provision for my full support by the Planters. I have agreed to remain a second year in this place, and have reason to believe that the blacks would be sorry were I to leave them. As many as thirty or more have professed conversion since I came among them. The evidence of some is more satisfactory than that of others: and Rev. Mr. W——— expects to receive into the church in a short time, such as may be approved by the Session.

Knowing that you are interested in the religious instruction of the blacks, I will mention the present encouraging state of things here. After Mr. W——— had me settled in my field, he went through his congregation, and succeeded in getting several planters to unite in providing for the support of another missionary, and very soon Mr. F. R. M———, (who I understand has the pleasure of your acquaintance) was employed in this new field. He has just returned from a visit North, and the experiment has worked so well that four or five more planters have entered into the arrangement, making work enough for half Mr. W's time, Mr. M's, and Mr. R's, who is appointed a catechist and resides as private tutor in the family of one of the elders of the P——— R——— Church. My field is in Louisiana, on the river below N———, and is so arranged that I go over my whole parish by preaching thrice, once every Sabbath. If God continues to smile upon the enterprise as he has already done, and grant prudence to those engaged in the work, Mr. W——— will have introduced a new era into this Presbytery and Synod, for the number of ministers in their bounds devoted to the instruction of the coloured race, will in a little time exceed those who labour for the whites. The N——— church now want to find some one to assist their minister by labouring chiefly for the blacks, and so of one or two other points in the bounds of Presbytery, as I am informed." J. W.

An efficient missionary in North Carolina has just retired from his connection with the Board, to take charge of a church where he is supported, and is engaged to devote one half his time to the coloured people.

Our space will not allow of further extracts from letters from brethren in Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, who are directing their attention to the coloured people of their charge, some preaching to them, oftener than others, according to circumstances, and all with encouraging success.

CLOTHING.

A word to our kind friends and helpers, the Ladies of Sewing Societies.

The following letter is from an esteemed lady in the state of Ohio, acknowledging the receipt of a box of clothing prepared at the Office, from clothing sent there, and forwarded to her family. Her own benevolence, by her statement, is now returning upon her. May Christian females, who read her impressive lines, be moved to sympathy, and to a continuation of their efforts to aid the cause of Domestic Missions in so efficient a manner. The season for working is at hand, we shall have many families applying for clothing, and a large supply will be needed, if all are served.

"Dear Sir—I should have answered some time since the reception of the box of articles sent by you, which came duly to hand. It will be useless to tell you of the value of the articles contained in it. They were all useful, all good, all just what we needed. Very few of the persons who assist in making up such a box, can imagine how much they contribute to the happiness of the missionaries, as I know from my own experience. When at home I helped to fill many, but little thought then that I would ever be placed in a situation to receive one; yet it is even so. If you know any of the contributors, please give them our sincere thanks, for their labour of love and benevolence. They will have their reward, although we can never repay them. I know not what we should have done since we came to this region, had it not been for the articles of clothing we have received from a distance, for the people are very poor, very destitute; some of them even of the comforts of life. We have seen some rather hard times, but perhaps not so severe as we may yet. However we have always been helped some how or other, and I trust we will be in time to come. I have little further to add. From Husband's reports you have all the intelligence necessary. With many, many wishes for your welfare, and for those who feel and act for us, I am, yours respectfully." * * *

CHURCH EXTENSION.

Dear Sir—In the Record for December, my attention has been directed to two articles on the subject of Church Extensions; one, bearing against application to the Churches for aid in building, when the congregation is too weak of itself to build; the other giving instances of great liberality, and making some valuable suggestions. If the Board were in a condition to render aid in this matter, as they are in reference to the support of their missionaries, it is undoubtedly the safest, the best and the most expeditious. But unfortunately it is not, and I fear our wealthy churches do not feel its importance as they should. It is a very unpleasant and an unthankful business truly, to go from church to church, to solicit aid for a weak congregation—for it is a very common feeling, and one which is sometimes expressed, that a church ought not to undertake the erection of a building until it has the ability within itself. If the church as a body should settle down upon this principle, it would be better to change the plan of the Board, and apply for a year or two the aid which would otherwise be given to a Missionary, and build a church first and then send an ambassador afterwards. A building, if not of the first, is of very great importance in a new and growing country like ours. In the community in which I live it is vastly important. Two years I have laboured at great disadvantage, where we have a population of from 1500 to 2000, and the children and youth, who are between the ages of 5 and 21, numbering nearly 500. But our church is a mere handful of women—poor in this world's goods, and in a community where error, vice, and immorality abound; a community on the whole who feel no interest in the erection of Churches, but the reverse. Will some one answer, "Let them alone." But what shall become of the children? If we abandon them, are we complying with the Savour's injunction, "Feed my Lambs"? Few though we be, and weak as we are, we have commenced the house, and it is more than half completed, but without aid we cannot finish it. The Board cannot aid us, what must we do? We do not wish to interfere with the plans of the Board, or in the least degree to divert from its proper channel any funds intended for that purpose. There seems to be no other way left us, but to solicit wherever we can the aid which we need; for the church must be finished, or the field abandoned. If the field is thus given up, it will be at a sacrifice of two years' labour, a loss of property now worth 1800 dollars, including the parsonage lots, and an abandonment of those whom Christ has directed us to feed.

Besides, it is a refusal to hold up the hands of these women, who, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, are labouring to build up their Master's cause to the best of their ability. It should be remembered too, that three years ago the place existed in little more than name, and it must before many years be a place of importance, at least as a manufacturing town. When I thus view it, I conclude it is impossible; the Presbyterian Church of the United States, hitherto distinguished for its enterprise, will not fail in such an emergency, and in a place where not only Romanism but even Unitarianism is entrenching itself.

I cannot ask that the Board would receive any aid to be specially applied to this object at the request of donors, or employ its organ to solicit such aid; it would be doing injustice to others as well as the Board. But will it be improper for me to profit by the suggestion of one of your correspondents, and to say that if there are any persons under whose eye this may fall, who wish "to enjoy the luxury of continued good by investing a given sum in one edifice, to be refunded when a gathered and established people shall come to appreciate the priceless value of the blessing, and then reinvested in a similar effort, on like condition" they may have a good opportunity of commencing such an agency for good, by donating in that way to the church in Cannelton, Indiana. And I do not doubt there are many others similarly situated, who would be glad to receive donations in the same way. Might not the ninety applications now made to the Board, and for which no provision has been made, be thus provided for in the benevolence of some, who have not only enough of the goods of this world, but to spare? And will they not thereby relieve the Board? Then, too, in the words of your correspondent, "the stream would flow and the agency be at work, when the heart and hand which gave the impulse shall be mingled with kindred dust."

The amount we need to supplement the contributions already made is six hundred dollars.

A MISSIONARY.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE DAY OF SPECIAL PRAYER.

The General Assembly having recommended the observance of the last Thursday of February as a day of special prayer for the conversion of young men in our institutions of learning, with a particular reference to the increase of the ministry, we have brought this subject to the attention of the communicants of the Church and of our pious youth in several articles. A circular will be sent to our ministers in due time, containing additional statements, with statistics, &c.

SOME THOUGHTS FOR EVERY COMMUNICANT.

THE DAY OF SPECIAL PRAYER.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has solemnly set apart the last Thursday of February as a day of special prayer. What subject is it that, in the judgment of our supreme Judicatory, needs a more than ordinary interest at the throne of grace? The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the last Thursday of February be observed as a day of special prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the youth of our land, who are pursuing their studies in literary institutions, and especially that many of them may be called and qualified by divine grace for the work of the ministry."

1. Prayer is a general duty perpetually binding upon individual Christians and upon the Church. It is among the highest privileges of the soul; for it brings us into communion with God, and encourages the hope of a gracious answer to our requests. Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

2. Days of special prayer for particular objects are in the course of Providence highly useful. They serve in an emphatic manner to arouse the Church to important duties, too much neglected, and to unite the hearts of God's people in importunate and persevering supplication. When the love of many waxes cold; when the absence of Divine influences impairs all our energies; when the world is enticing our youth by the multitude of its fascinations, and few of them make a profession of faith in Christ, and still fewer think of looking forward to the work of the ministry; when death is invading the sanctuary with more than ordinary ravages; and the cry of our country and of the heathen nations for the gospel is unanswered to a great degree from the want of faithful labourers, it seems to be peculiarly important for our congregations to call upon the name of the Lord, and to make our wants known according to the terms of his precious promises. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!"

3. The Holy Spirit is the gift to be sought in the prayers of the Church. No progress can be made by the church without His influences. God has given His Son as a sacrifice; he has enlightened us with revealed truth; and has added the aids and sanctions of ordinances, sacraments, and providential discipline; but without the quickening grace of the Divine Spirit, all is as the means without the end. To pray for the Holy Spirit, kindles within the Christian heart hope and supplies it with power. The believer finds at the mercy-seat help for all his individual wants, and help for the Church in the aggressive work of preaching the gospel to every creature. The outpouring of Pentecostal gifts is the only hope of Pentecostal results. Our youth cannot be converted, and will not enter the ministry, unless God's power, invoked in prayer, descends into their hearts with conquering grace.

4. What a glorious subject of prayer is the conversion of our youth! Endeared to our households by the tenderest ties, consecrated to God from early infancy, the hope alike of the Church and of the State—immortal, privileged, influential youth—who will not pray for their present and eternal well-being? If they enter upon the scenes of life, destitute of love to Christ and of the controlling principles of piety, how little hope that they will ever turn from the error of their ways! Their opportunities for intellectual elevation constitute a weighty plea for their special remembrance in the prayers of the Church. The lax principles of educated men have always been a snare to the community. It has been supposed that every student of respectable talents and acquirements may be regarded as the representative of at least a thousand immortal beings, who will be moulded by his opinions and example. And then, when to this is superadded the immense influence which every such man must send down into the next and future generations, the relative importance of our youth may be to some feeble extent conceived. Shall it fail to awaken a special interest in their behalf?

5. The Church needs ministers, an increasing number of heralds to proclaim the word of life. How are they to be obtained? Let us hear the instructions of our Saviour. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into his harvest." Our dependence is above. Our hope of supply, thanks be to God, is in heaven. Christ has enjoined the Church to acknowledge his sovereignty, to invoke his power, to be supplicants at his throne. Never was a duty expressed in clearer language. Pray ye! Lord, send down the spirit of prayer into our hearts. Pray ye! Ye parents, ye sisters, ye brothers, ye grandfathers and grandmothers, all ye members of the household; ye ministers, ye elders, ye communicants; ye presidents and teachers in schools, academies, and colleges; ye candidates for the ministry and pious youth pursuing a liberal education; all ye that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth, pray ye—individually and collectively; privately, in the social meeting, and in the sanctuary; day by day, and on the day for special prayer, pray ye to the Lord of the harvest. If we would have ministers, we must ask for them. They are gifts, they are ascension gifts. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." And the fact that Christ has thus connected the supply of ministers with Himself, with his own ascension into heaven, with his own glory and dominion and grace, is the sweetest encouragement to believers to draw near with assurance of hope.

Especially in view of the fact that the number of our candidates is at best stationary, perhaps declining, should the Church unite in solemn prayer for an enlargement of the ministerial ranks. There has certainly been no increase in the number of the theological students in our Church, for the last five or six years. Where is the responsibility? Whose is the fault, the sin, the shame? If ours—and where else is the blame?—let our prayers testify to our sincere endeavours of amendment, to our awakened sense of obligation, to our endearing reliance upon the Lord of the harvest for the forgiveness of past omissions and for grace to fulfil our duties in the future.

The following remarks of the venerable Dr. Alexander, who last year united in the supplications of Zion, and who now rejoices in the praises of the saints above, will no doubt arrest the attention of the thoughtful reader.

PAUCITY OF CANDIDATES FOR THE HOLY MINISTRY.

The great Head and Founder of the Church had this subject in his mind, and urged it on the attention of his disciples, while he was on earth. His commandment on this point, which is as obligatory now as it ever was, is, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." It is evident from these words, that the Lord of the harvest is able to supply the deficiency of labourers; and that He will only do it in answer to prayer. Christ could have offered a prevailing prayer for this gift, but no: Christians must pray. "Pray ye." He will be inquired of for this blessing, that he may do it for us. When there is a great deficiency of faithful labourers, does it not suggest a reason for an inquiry, whether this command has been obeyed? In some cases, we cannot be certain that what we ask is agreeable to the mind of God; but here all room for doubt is removed. It is not often that Christ, in exhorting his disciples to the duty of prayer, informed them particularly what to pray for; but in this case, he puts words as it were, into their mouth—"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest." It cannot be, then, that he would omit to answer a prayer thus expressly dictated by himself. If there be a want of labourers, the neglect must be in the Church. The blessing has not been asked, with due importunity and perseverance. The people have depended on Education Societies and Theological Seminaries to provide the candidates; and there has been but little earnest supplication to the Lord of the harvest.

Thus the matter now stands; and if this state of things continues, your Education Societies and your Theological Seminaries will soon experience a great falling off in their numbers. Let Christians know and remember, that no organized societies or seminaries can supply this want. They may educate pious young men when they come to them; but what if the number of such shall go on diminishing, every year, can they create a supply? Surely not. We must have recourse to the Lord of the harvest. Formerly pious parents dedicated their children to this sacred service, from their birth, and were incessant in their petitions, at a throne of grace, for ministerial grace and gifts for their devoted sons; and such prayers God has heard and answered, in thousands of instances. But where now do we find the consecrated Samuels, growing up under the light of the sanctuary? Where are the Hannahs, to wrestle with God in public and private, until they obtain their heart's desire! This ought to be a weighty care with every Church of Christ. The Church cannot exist without a ministry; and where are we to look for candidates for the ministry, but in the churches? Can that church have done its duty, in which few or no candidates for the sacred office have been reared up? Or what judgment must be formed of those large and flourishing churches with their hundreds of communicants, which once had a succession of young men in training for the harvest, but now have none? Perhaps it will startle some of our good people to hear it alleged as a fault, that particular churches are rearing no candidates for the ministry. But I will maintain it. There must be a grievous fault somewhere, in relation to this important concern; and as it is a matter of common duty, when there has been a continual barrenness, there must have been a want of due culture. Why have you no pious young men, on their way to the ministry? Have you not many sons who, if their hearts were touched by the finger of God, might be useful? But you may say—We cannot give them grace. True; this is not the ground of your accountability. But have you, as a church, prayed for the conversion of the dear youth, that might be prepared for this work?

Every church, rich in numbers, as well as worldly substance, which has no young men in a course of training, ought to appoint a day of fasting and humiliation to inquire into this matter, and to beg of God not to leave them like a barren tree, in his vineyard. You say that you contribute every year to the Education fund. This is well; but it is not all, nor the half of your duty on this subject. You must furnish men, as well as money; and the men are by far the most important part of the means. Without suitable men, money in this concern is worthless. You must bring forward pious and promising men. Do you ask how you can accomplish this? I answer as before, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest." Do not forget to pray this prayer, as you have too often done. Think much of it, and lay it before God in secret, in your families, and in the church. And be not contented until you receive this blessing of the ascended Lord, to be the honoured instrument of furnishing the harvest field with at least one labourer. There are a few churches in our land, which can number more than one devoted missionary in the foreign field. The writer knows a church of moderate size and little wealth, in a remote station, which within his recollection has furnished five or six faithful men for the work of the ministry, the bones of one of whom lie among the heathen. He could designate another place, where at least a dozen ministers have proceeded from one church, and some of them men of eminence. But, alas! the glory is departed; for years past, this fruitful spot has been barren in this respect. An able and excellent minister in Virginia was snatched away from his family without a moment's warning. His children, mostly sons, were then small—now, five of them are labouring in the field; and possibly the sixth may enter. Do you not suppose that this was in answer to the prayers of the father?

Some people say, that there is no real deficiency, or we should not have so many unemployed ministers. It may be admitted, that if the sacred office be viewed as a secular trade, by which men may make a comfortable living, the profession is already overstocked. At any rate, it is overstocked with men who will not work—or will only work where they can find everything ready prepared to their hand. The Church wants no cumberers of the ground, but labourers—not men who wish to enter on and enjoy the fruits of other men's labours, but working men, willing to break up the fallow ground, and ambitious to preach the gospel even where Christ has not been named. No class of educated men are more to be pitied than those clergymen who are not occupied with the proper business of their profession. Although they may grow rich, (though Providence commonly thwarts their schemes and disappoints their hopes,) they are not to be envied. In fact they lose all respectability in the eyes of the world. What would be unnoticed in another, public opinion will not tolerate in them. But to bring up such as a proof that there are supernumerary ministers, is as absurd as to plead that reapers are not wanted for a great and ripe harvest, because many idle loungers or busy triflers may be found in the country. The Lord hath spoken it, "The harvest is great and the labourers few, Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth labourers into his harvest."

1. Our readers will unite, we trust, in regarding this whole subject as one of vast importance to the Church.

2. It demands steady, not transient attention.

3. Prayer is a clear duty in reference to it.

4. Much depends upon the fidelity of every church member.

5. If all do their duty, who can doubt that the "Lord of the harvest" will "send forth labourers into his harvest?"

MORE MEN AND OF HIGH CHARACTER.

The Church should ever remember, in her prayers for more labourers, the importance of praying for men of the right kind. As is the ministry, so is the Church. A feeble inefficient class of men is rather a curse than a blessing. The times require ministers of the best sort. Let this great truth be remembered in all our prayers and efforts for the raising up of leaders for the sacramental host of God's elect.

The following remarks from that great and good man, Dr. Samuel Miller, will be read with interest.

HIGH CHARACTER NEEDED IN THE MINISTRY.

It is evident, that, while we greatly need a much larger number of ministers, WE STILL MORE URGENTLY NEED AN INCREASE IN MINISTERIAL ZEAL AND FIDELITY. That there is real, nay, a most distressing deficiency in the number of labourers employed in the "great harvest," in almost every part of our country, every well-informed person knows to be a fact. Taking into view the missionary as well as the pastoral service, it is probably safe to affirm, that if we had a thousand able and faithful men, added, at once, to our present number of ministers, they might all be usefully employed. This, I am aware, is doubted by some, because they now and then find a candidate for pastoral settlement, or for some other branch of evangelical service unemployed. But the inference drawn from this fact is, undoubtedly, delusive. May it not be said of a portion of these unoccupied candidates, that they are NOT WORTH EMPLOYING? That they are so strikingly deficient in the most important qualifications as to be little, if any, better than none? And of the rest, that they are not willing to go where they are pressingly invited, and greatly needed? But if some, evidently wanting in the furniture requisite for instructing and edifying the people; and others, not willing to labour where they are called, are standing idle; does either case afford evidence that able, willing and faithful labourers, and even large additional numbers of them, are not greatly needed? Certainly not. Every enlightened friend of religion, then, will pray without ceasing that MORE LABOURERS may be raised up, qualified, and thrust forth into the harvest. But the friends of piety ought to pray still more earnestly that all who are sent forth may be of the RIGHT STAMP. It is unspeakably more important that ministers be men of the PROPER SPIRIT, than that they be VERY NUMEROUS.

Many people appear to speak and act as if it were desirable to obtain a large number of ministers of almost any sort. But, truly, this is a great mistake. Of what advantage is it to any church to add to her ministry a drone, an ignoramus, or a learned formalist? A thousand such additions to her clerical ranks would do her no good. Good, did I say? The more such ministers are multiplied, the worse it is for the church. They draw down upon her blasting and desolation, rather than a blessing. What the church needs is a greater number of pious, humble, and enlightened ministers, who know how to labour, and who love to labour, for Christ, and for immortal souls. One such man as Brainerd, or Whitefield, or Tennent, or Martyn, is worth fifty or a hundred of your cold, timid, indolent men, although they go through a formal round of duties, without any disreputable deficiency, and preach the truth and nothing but the truth, every time they enter the sacred desk. One such man as the apostle Paul, has been, and may be again, the means of regenerating a nation; while scores or hundreds of men calling themselves ministers, but either bloated by sacerdotal pride, or paralysed by frigid indifference, may slumber through their miserable routine for years, without witnessing the regeneration of a single soul.

THOUGHTS TO OUR PIOUS YOUNG MEN.

Beloved Youth—Permit a few meditations to be suggested to your minds on the occasion of the observance of a day of special prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon those who are in the morning of life. Your influence upon the Church and upon the world must be great within your sphere. And you have personal interests which add to the responsibility of deciding how, or in what manner, you will spend the time allotted by your Creator.

Our Church has set apart the last Thursday of February for the purpose of engaging in special prayer for the conversion of her youth to God, and for an increase of labourers in the gospel harvest. It may be supposed that you will have peculiar sympathies with these solemnities of Zion. You yourselves will be the subjects of special prayer. The whole Church will supplicate before the mercy-seat that many of you may be called into the ministry, if it be God's will; and that all of you may consider earnestly your duty to your Creator, Preserver, and Redeemer, in choosing your profession in life.

You are invited to ponder upon the following questions, suggested on a previous occasion by a well-wisher to your souls; and may the quickening Spirit of all grace enlighten you as to duty and strengthen you for its performance.

QUESTIONS RESPECTING THE MINISTERIAL PROFESSION.

I.

First.—Is there any office in which we can render more substantial service to our fellow-men, or more advance the glory of God? Should not the good of society and the glory of God influence us in the choice of a profession?

Is there any office, however splendid or lucrative, of greater real dignity, than that of God's ambassador?

Is there any office which affords more and higher prospects of true happiness in this world?

Is there any office which affords as many incitements to piety, as many helps and facilities in the work of salvation, or more comfortable prospects of future glory and reward?

Does it require the relinquishment of any habit or indulgence necessary to the highest enjoyment?

Are not multitudes in the world possessed of the ability to serve God in the work of the ministry, prevented by the love of ease or of pleasure, or of profit, or of distinction?

While it is admitted that much may be done in every condition of life for the special benefit of piety, can as much be done in any other for these ends, as in the ministry?

II.

Second.—Is not every man when he is sent into the world, and endowed with rational and bodily powers of ordinary excellence—is he not called and commanded, not only to work out his own salvation, but to assist others to the utmost extent of his ability?

The age of miracles being long since terminated, have we a right to expect a supernatural designation to the sacred office; or anything more than circumstances and dispositions providentially favourable, or not providentially unfavourable?

Are we not bound to use our own endeavours to remove obstacles, and support inconveniences in this cause as well as in any other?

Does not the fact that there are many whole congregations going astray from the way of life, rendering no worship to their Maker, ignorant of their danger, their wants, their privileges, and their Saviour, and in the broad road to destruction, who might, by the blessing of God, through the exertions of a pious minister, be rescued from vice and misery, and be led to the inheritance of eternal glory—does not this fact constitute a call, and the most powerful call—a call from Jesus Christ, upon young men of pious dispositions and ordinary talents, to engage in the work of the ministry?

Will not this call continue to be thus providentially addressed to such persons, as long as there remain any flocks without a shepherd, or in danger of being in that state?

III.

Third.—Is it not very often the case, that the greatest good is rendered to the cause of religion, and the souls of men, by persons certainly not possessed of singular abilities?

Do not the promises of Jesus Christ—"I am with you always, even to the end of the world;" "My grace is sufficient for you," furnish every good man with just grounds of confidence in this respect?

Is it not as much, and even in a greater degree our duty to rely upon the sufficiency of grace for the work of the ministry, than in the work of individual salvation?

Do not the solemn and unequivocal promises made to persevering prayer, through the intercession of Christ, extend to prayers offered up for ability to glorify God by advancing the salvation of souls?

IV.

Fourth.—Have you ordinary talents?
Have you a pious disposition?
Do you love Christ?

Do you love the souls of men?
Is not his Almighty grace promised to you?
Is not his Almighty grace sufficient for you?
Has not his providence afforded you means, or the prospect and assurance of means to enable you for the work?
Would not the efforts used for your worldly establishment in some other manner, succeed in accomplishing this?
Are not souls now perishing, which by the blessing of God, you could be instrumental in saving?
Will you hear Christ in vain?
Shall they perish?
Before you deliberately weigh these considerations, invoke, on your knees, the guidance, and overruling power of the Holy Spirit.

If, after proper inquiry and prayer, any of the beloved youth of our Church should feel disposed to follow on to know the mind of Christ, they are affectionately urged to consult their pastor, or pious friends, and to read such tracts or books as may give light upon the point in question.

The Board of Education have published a treatise on the Nature of a Call to the Gospel Ministry, which, with the divine blessing, may materially assist candid and prayerful minds. This treatise may be had gratuitously by addressing the Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education at Philadelphia; or perhaps it is in your pastor's library.

Young Men! the hope of the Church in her ministry, the occasion solemnly invites you to have much intercourse with God in deciding upon your profession. You are strong. Without you the ministry must cease. But you are frail and must die; and you must render an account to God for the time and talents lent to you. May the decision be one which your Judge shall approve!

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

A NEW INSTITUTION.

A new institution on a religious basis is an appropriate Ebenezer for our Church at the present day. The Synod of Georgia is engaged in establishing two female Institutions under its care. One is ready to commence operations, as we learn from the following notice.

GREENSBORO' FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Trustees of the Greensboro' Female College hereby give notice to the public, that this institution will be opened on the second Monday in January 1852.

OFFICERS.

Rev. Robert Logan, President, and Instructor in Mental and Moral Philosophy, Evidences of Christianity, History, and Belles-Lettres.
Mr. J. L. Lyman, Professor of Mathematics and Natural Sciences.
Miss L. L. Bass, Instructress in English branches, and Mathematics.
Mr. Nathan B. Clapp, Professor of Vocal and Instrumental Music.
The necessary Assistants, in the several Departments, will be provided.
In connection with the College there will be a primary, and an Academic Department, under the supervision of the President.
All branches belonging to a thorough Collegiate Course of Female Education will be taught.
The following are the rates of Tuition, per annum: Primary Department, $18.00; Academic $26.00.
The Four Collegiate Classes, each $40.00 and $3.00 to meet contingent expenses.
Instrumental Music, Piano or Guitar, $50,00.
Should there be a class desiring a regular course of instruction in vocal music, each member of such a class will be charged at the rate of $5.00 for Twenty-five Lessons.
French, and other Modern Languages, each $15.
No extra charge for Latin and Greek, for the use of Piano, for fuel, or stationery, such as slates, copy-books, pens, ink, &c.

Board may be had in the most respectable families, on moderate terms,
By order of the Board of Trustees.
Francis Bowman, Pres't.
Homer Hendee, Sec't'y.
Greensboro,' Ga., Dec. 10th, 1851.

The following is the action of the Synod o Georgia, relative to the Female College in Greensboro,' at its Session in Griffin, Nov. 1851.

"The Committee to whom was referred the Report of the Board of Trustees of the Greensboro' Female College beg leave to say, that they have given the subject of that Report such consideration as their limited time would permit. They are pleased to learn that a fine college building has been erected, and is nearly completed; and that a faculty has been elected and will be ready to commence the important business of instruction in the ensuing January.

This Institution will occupy a most valuable field in our State and Church, forming as it will, a school where the education of our daughters may be finished, and made as perfect as at any other Seminary North or South. Your Committee therefore deem it very desirable that this College be properly endowed in a pecuniary point of view: that it have the ablest Professors and Instructors; and that it be conducted upon correct principles. And without stopping now to go into any details, your committee beg leave to mention two points upon which they desire to remark. The one is, the absolute necessity of having such distribution of the pupils among the pious and cultivated families of Greensboro' that no pupil will be left for a moment without the domestic influence of the family, and especially that the system of College Dormitories be carefully eschewed. And your Committee are happy to know that there is no community in Georgia, to whose care our daughters can be confided with more safety and advantage for fine examples of lady-like and Christian deportment, combined with the exemplary discharge of the duties of the wife and the mother, than Greensboro' affords. In the same spirit your committee would insist upon the exclusion from this Institution of all exhibitions in "mode theatric," but they have not time now to discuss this topic. The other point is, that steps be taken at an early day to raise funds to complete and enlarge the improvements. And also to raise a permanent fund to educate the daughters of deceased ministers, (and of every living minister whose means will not enable him to educate his daughters,) the entire expense of education being contemplated by the Committee, including board, tuition, &c. Your committee submit the following resolutions.

I. Resolved, That it be the duty of the Trustees to see to it, as a fundamental rule, that the pupils of the Greensboro' Female College be judiciously distributed among the pious and cultivated families of Greensboro', so as to secure to each pupil the influence of the domestic circle.

II. Resolved, That the Trustees of the Institution be instructed to employ an agent to raise funds to complete and furnish the Institution. And also to devise the ways and means as rapidly as possible, to educate, free of charge for board, tuition, &c., the daughters of deceased ministers, and of every living minister whose means will not enable him to educate his daughters at his own expense.

III. Resolved, That the agent to be appointed be commended to our churches and members, and that the cause he presents be favorably regarded and duly patronized by our people and the public generally, both with their money and children."

All of which is respectfully submitted.
William L. Mitchell, Chairman.
This Report was adopted by the Synod.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, January 13, 1852.

Africa: Corisco Mission.—We have received letters from the Rev. J. L. Mackey, dated to the 20th of October. He was in the enjoyment of good health, and the prospects of the mission continued to be encouraging. A small church, to hold two hundred hearers, had been erected with the help of the natives in ten days, at a cost of $40, an example of economy both of time and money not often witnessed! The attendance and deportment of the people at religious services were such as to awaken hopes of their receiving spiritual benefit. As they do not know when the Sabbath day comes, Mr. Mackey agreed to have the bell, sent from this country, rung on Saturday evenings. It is "swung at a respectable height on a tree close by the church."

Mr. Mackey had made a second journey up the river Muni, on the main land, in company with Dr. Ford of the American Board. His account of this journey will be given in our next number. He was desirous of crossing the mountains, and penetrating the region beyond, and hopes to do this soon after the mission is reinforced by new labourers. He concludes his last letter by saying, "I long for help." Africa: Liberia Missions.—We have letters dated to the 17th of October. The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, to that date, had suffered but slightly from the climate.

China Missions.—Letters have been received from Ningpo, to October 3; Shanghai, October 17; and Canton, October 27. A strong application is made from Ningpo for funds, to purchase ground and build two chapels in different parts of the city, at an estimated cost of from $800 to $1000 each. It is important that these buildings should be provided. The outlay required for such objects is one of the proofs of the prosperity of the mission. One girl, A-jing, of the boarding school, was received by the church-session as a member of the church, and was to be baptized on the next Sabbath.

Siam Mission.—A letter of the Rev. S. Bush, of September 16th, mentions the continued favourable state of the mission, though we learn with regret the death of the Rev. J. T. Jones, of the Baptist mission at Bangkok, and also of Mr. Mattoon's little son. Mr. Bush was occupying a floating house, at the request of the prince, near his palace; and Dr. House had moved his floating house and stationed it alongside of Mr. Bush's. The prince, Mr. Bush adds, "wishes to have us near to him that he may talk with us the more frequently."

India Missions.—Letters has been received from Lahor, November 6; Lodiana, November 6; Saharunpur, November 7; Rev. J. Newton, at Meerut, November 7; Futtehgurh, November 7; Mynpoorie, November 8; Rev. J. Warren, on the Jumna river, October 29; Allahabad, November 3. Mr. Newton and his family were on their journey homewards. Mrs. Newton had been quite ill, but was so far recovered as to resume the journey. Mr. Warren and his family were on their way to Agra. At Lahor, Captain Simpson had generously made over to the mission a chapel, which had been erected at his expense. With some additions, costing about $200, it will answer also as a school-house, and thus save the expenditure of a considerable sum for that object. At Jalandar, the boy who desired to be baptized is still under the strict watch of his friends. He has been offered two thousand rupees if he will abandon the thought of becoming a Christian, but thus far he remains firm. On the last Sabbath of October, four adults and two children were received by baptism into the church at Lodiana. Mr. Newton was present, and the occasion was one of deep interest to all the brethren and the little church. The converts were all Sikhs, one a soldier, the others of the weaver caste. Messrs. Campbell and Woodside had returned from a journey of three hundred miles among villages in the interior of the Himalaya mountains, with health greatly improved. These villages had never been visited before by missionaries, and many of them heard the gospel with much apparent interest. One man came several miles to obtain the Scriptures. At Allahabad, Mirza John Beg had been taken under the care of the Presbytery, as a candidate for licensure, and trial pieces and studies were appointed to him. His answers to all the questions were considered very satisfactory. He understands but little English, but a course of study, including Church History, Theology, Greek and Hebrew, was given him, besides texts for a lecture and a sermon. Mr. Hay adds, "Mirza has already exhibited fine abilities as a speaker . . . and I have great hopes of his future usefulness."

An interesting and an important application has been forwarded through Mr. Newton, for two missionaries to occupy a new station, at Peshawar. This city is west of the Indus, on the borders of Afghanistan. It is a key-place to a large territory, whose inhabitants have never heard the voice of a minister of the gospel. A pious English officer, a member of another branch of the Church of Christ, generously offers a hundred rupees a month, about six hundred dollars a year, towards this mission. We wish this matter may gain the heartfelt interest of our churches. Then men and means will not be wanting. God seems to be calling his people to greater efforts than have yet been put forth.

Indian Missions.—By a letter of the Rev. E. McKinney, of November 7th, we regret to learn that much sickness had prevailed in the mission family among the Omahaws and Otoes; and by advices from the Choctaw mission to December 10th, that the whooping-cough had appeared among the scholars at Spencer Academy. Two of the younger boys had died of this complaint. Our missionary brethren, in these trying circumstances, need the sympathy and the prayers of the churches. At Tallahassee, among the Creeks, three of the pupils, all girls, were admitted to the church in October, and others were under serious impressions.

LETTERS FROM A MISSIONARY TO HIS CHILDREN IN AMERICA:—NO. VIII.

Astronomy of the Hindus.

My Dear Children—It is evident that in remote periods the Hindus made considerable progress in astronomy, and it is very probable that to them we are indebted for much of our knowledge of this science. The Chaldeans appear to have been the first to turn their attention to the movements of the heavenly bodies. By them the practice of observing the stars was introduced into Egypt, and was transferred thence into India. Remains of Astronomical and Mathematical instruments, constructed of stone, and immensely large, some of them twenty feet in height, and proportionably thick, are still to be seen at the ancient observatories in Benares and Delhi. The Signs of the Indian Zodiac are also still visible on the ceilings of many Pagodas. Besides these remnants of a once flourishing science in the East, the modern Hindus have astronomical tables which were constructed by their ancestors many hundreds of years ago, and by the help of which, they still calculate eclipses of the sun and moon, with much accuracy. This is now the chief, and almost sole object of Hindu astronomy. It is, so far as it goes, merely descriptive. Of Physical Astronomy, they have no correct knowledge whatever. They have lost all knowledge of the time, and manner, in which the above tables were constructed, and say they were revealed to the sages by the gods. To these wonder-working calculations the Brahmans often triumphantly appeal in their discussions with the missionary, as an irrefragable proof of the inspiration of their Shastr. For them they claim a most extravagant antiquity. No reliable record, however, of their invention exists, nor can their actual age be ascertained from the facts they furnish.

M. Bailly, a celebrated French philosopher and astronomer, endeavoured, in 1795, to prove that they were constructed 4800 years ago, and to this hypothesis Professor Playfair at one time expressed himself a convert, but, some years afterwards, confessed that his confidence in Bailly's theory was much shaken. European astronomers have since shown pretty clearly, that these tables cannot be more than 800 years old. The Surya Siddhánta, which is confessedly the origin of them, was written between the year of our Lord 1000 and 1200. These tables, however, show decidedly, that astronomical science was not in its infancy among the Hindus when they were constructed. Ages must have passed away, from the time the Patriarchs, while watching their flocks in the silence of starlight, beheld with the eye of contemplation and wonder, the celestial orbs which rolled above them, merely as so many lesser lights to rule the night, and the time when the Hindu astronomers attained that proud eminence from which they handed down their important discoveries to the world.

The principal Hindu systems of astronomy are the Puranic and Siddhantic, and although as antagonistic as life and death, both rest on authority deemed divine.

The former, like every thing contained in the Puráns, is a mass of absurdity, defying all description. They tell us the earth rests on a tortoise, and that this is supported on the back of a boar, what supports this upholder of all things, it would be folly to inquire;—that the terrestrial world is a plane figure, surrounded by seven seas of milk, butter, nectar, and other fluids;—that the golden mountain Sumeru, rises and gleams in the centre; that it is 756,000 miles above the earth, and 144,000 below its surface; that the Ganges falls from heaven on its summit, and flows thence to the surrounding world in four streams; that when the sun passes to the north of this mountain, darkness settles on the earth, and when it again appears in the south, it becomes day. They tell us that the sun is between the earth and the moon, and the former much smaller than the latter; that when an eclipse of either takes place, it is caused by a dragon's head attempting to swallow them. But in justice to the Hindus, we must not confound this system of the Puráns, or poetical fabulists, with that of the Siddhánt, or mathematical astronomers, though the latter are few in number compared with the believers in the Puráns. But to the Siddhántists such a confusion would be as unjust as to make our nursery stories about the man in the moon with a bundle of sticks on his back, a part of our Copernican or Newtonian system, and yet many such mistakes are made by Europeans on the subject of Hindu science. We hope the day is not far distant when the Puráns, with all their degrading, superstitious divinations, incantations and astrology, will be numbered with the monstrosities of the past. The educated Hindus in Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras, are becoming ashamed of their stupid, disgusting mythology, and are endeavouring to resuscitate the obsolete pantheistic system of the Veds, as more rational. This feeling of dissatisfaction with the present popular religion of India is also spreading over the whole land, and pervading all ranks; a something more adapted to the spirit of the age is a great desideratum—a something that will not destroy the foundations of Hinduism. But so closely is the religion of the Puráns interwoven with the present system of Hinduism, and the whole frame-work of society, that with the abolishing of it, away would go at one sweep, all distinction of caste, the worship of idols, of Krishnu, with his obscene rites, of Ram Chandr, and of Mahadev, in all its disgusting forms. This would be a step in the right direction, but it would be far short of the goal. The system of the Veds is not one of monotheism, but of pantheism. The Vedantist considers himself identical with God—every thing is God. Such a system is a poor substitute for idolatry. The gospel is the only remedy.

But I must now notice the Siddhántic system of astronomy. This is nearly the same as the Ptolemaic, which was almost universally adopted until the sixteenth century, when it was refuted by Copernicus, who proved that the earth, and all the planets, moved around the sun as a centre. According to the Siddhánt, the earth is placed in the centre of the universe, and around it revolve the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. The sun, you perceive, is considered one of the planets by the Hindus, as also the moon. Besides those mentioned, they know nothing of any other planets. They have no telescopes, to reveal those which move beyond the reach of unassisted human vision. Nor are they aware of the vast dimensions of those they behold, nor of their immense distance from the earth. They are not in possession of suitable instruments for making such observations, nor have they that thirst for knowledge and enterprise, requisite for using them when provided.

The Brahmans have divided the Zodiac, as we do, into three hundred and sixty degrees, and twelve signs; but in addition to this, they have subdivided it into twenty-seven lunar stations, which they call nakshatras. To each of these they allow thirteen degrees and twenty minutes. The twelve constellations they have distinguished by the figures of various animals, and other imaginary similitudes, which nearly all correspond with our own nomenclature. Namely, Mesha, (Ram); Orisha, (Bull); Mithuna, (Twins); Karkati, (Crab); Singha, (Lion); Kanya, (Virgin); Tula, (Balance); Orishkika, (Scorpion); Dhanus, (Bow); Makara, (Seamonster); Kambha, (Waterman), and Mina, (Fishes).

To each of these solar stations thirty degrees are allotted. The Nakshatras have also their appropriate names given, in conformity to the hieroglyphic taste of the ancients. From twelve of these asterisms, the twelve Indian months are denominated. Although these months are the same in number as ours, they do not correspond with them as to the division of the year. The Hindu year commences when the sun enters Aries, which, according to their time, is about the tenth of April. The length of their months is regulated by the time which the sun occupies in passing from one sign to another. They have no fixed number of days for each month as we have, and it is only by consulting the Brahmans, or the calenders, which they prepare annually, that the people can find out the length of each month.

The Hindus also reckon time by lunar months, each of which consists of thirty tithis, or lunar days. They contrive so far to reconcile the lunar and solar years, as to make them proceed almost concurrently. In order to remedy as much as possible the irregularity between the solar and lunar year, the Brahmans have added to every third year an intercalary month, as we, every fourth year, add an additional day to February, to remedy the irregularity occasioned by the difference between our solar and astral year. This, however, is but one approximation to accuracy. The lunar year of 360 days is more ancient in India than the solar. This may be inferred from the fact that the names of the months are taken from the lunar stations.

It is supposed by some astronomers, that the Hindus derived their knowledge of the Zodiack from the Greeks and Arabs. The reason assigned is that the solar division of it in India is the same as that of the Greeks, and the lunar similar to that of the Arabs. It is, however, more probable that this knowledge was received from an older nation than either the Greeks or Arabs. The precession of the equinoxes, as calculated by the Hindus, is something more than ours. "From the best observations, it appears that the equator cuts the ecliptic every year, 50″. 25 more to the westward than the year before." But the Hindus make it 54″. This, in 600 years, would amount to a difference of 34′ in the position of each of the heavenly bodies.

It is a remarkable and interesting fact, that in India, the days of the week are arranged as in Egypt and Greece, according to the number of the planets, and called by similar names. Nor is the resemblance between the most of our Gothic days of the week, and those of the Hindus, which are dedicated to the same celestial objects, less extraordinary. Sunday is called Itwár (the day of the sun); Monday, Sombár, (the day of the moon); Wednesday, Budh, or Budhbár, (the day of Budh); Saturday, Sanibár, (the day of Saturn.)

The nations referred to above, could not all have fallen upon this practice by chance. They must have received it from a common source, probably from Noah and his descendants, and thence it was handed down through the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Hindus, Greeks, and Romans to our ancestors.

Although the Siddhántic system of astronomy is much preferable to the Puránic, it is far from being free from philosophical and religious falsehood. A gross and degrading superstition pervades it throughout. The sun, moon, and stars, are supposed to be animated intelligences, and receive the worship due to the Creator. Their influence for good or evil in human affairs is all-powerful. On their movements depend the fate of nations. A transit of a planet over the sun's disc, its conjunction with a constellation, an eclipse of the sun or moon, or the sun's entering a sign, are events fraught with the most awful vicissitudes. Nor are the every-day details of Hindu life less influenced by the heavenly bodies. A man's destiny for time and eternity depends on his horoscope. A star regulates his sleeping and waking, his eating and drinking, his sowing and reaping, his journeying and sojourning, his marriage and giving in marriage, his life and death. By the lunar mansions, the physician is directed in administering medicine to his patient. If the fever begin on an inauspicious day he will die, even the waters of immortality cannot preserve his life. If on a favourable day, he will recover without medicine.

Thus the most sublime of all science has been degraded to a grovelling superstition by the self-constituted wise men of the East, and thus it must lie prostrate until Christianity come to its rescue.

Your affectionate father,

J. M. Jamieson.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. L. JANVIER: FEBRUARY 14, 1851.

An account of the Roshní Fair, at Lodiana.

There is a mela now in progress at this place, which is called the Roshní (Light) Mela; because at a certain time in the course of it, they light up a great number of little lamps. That ceremony is to come off this evening. The mela ground is the vacant space in the edge of cantonments, on the west of the city, being in the neighbourhood of the Khánqáh, or shrine erected to the pír, or saint, in honour of whom the mela is held. Here the people assemble, year by year, and make offerings. It is a Musalmán mela, but still Hindús and Sikhs to some extent attend also, and take part in the doings of the occasion. Though Musalmáns condemn Hindús as idol worshippers, yet in fact the spirit of idolatry has very much taken possession of the one as well as the other: and at this, and many other melas, both, as well as many sects besides, become companions in iniquity, and unite in giving that glory to the creature which is due only to the Creator. Their hope is, that through the influence of this departed pír, and in virtue of the offering which they make, or perhaps vow beforehand to make in his name, some blessing or advantage of which they are desirous, will be obtained. This they call their murád, literally, the object on which their minds are fixed: so they say they are going to the mela, "murád ke wáste:" i. e. for the sake of their murád. This murád is sometimes a pair of oxen, sometimes a son or daughter, sometimes the deliverance of themselves, or some member of their families, from sickness, &c.

Our practice generally has been, at the time of this mela, to have two tents pitched near the shrine, the one to be used as a place for the distribution of books, the other to receive those who may be disposed to engage in religious conversation; and ordinarily two of our number are present, one occupied in distributing books, the other in speaking with the people. Generally one of the two is a native assistant: sometimes both. On the present occasion we are trying how it will answer to dispense with our tents, and have the people meet us in the school and chapel building erected within a year past, and which stands not far from the shrine. The plan seems to work pretty well. The people came in today in great numbers, and the opportunity for speaking was better than it ordinarily is in a tent, as the walls of the building served in a good measure to relieve us from the noise and din of the mela.

The following is a brief outline, so far as I can now recall it, of the conversation I had with them. I commenced by telling them that the object for which they had come together was a vain and unsuitable one, while yet the fact of their being assembled together gave me an opportunity to speak to them in the name of God, concerning the things that belonged to their peace, of which I was glad. Allusion was then made to the folly and sin of looking to a creature, and one too who was long since dead and gone, for blessings which it was in the power of the Creator alone to bestow upon us.

Reasons for and against the worship of the Saint.

Presently a man spoke and said that the pír was not dead, but living, and that it was suitable to make use of his mediation, to obtain blessing from God. He was told in reply, that, in one sense, doubtless the individual was still living: because it was only the body that went to decay in death, and that, in God's view, not only this man, but all the dead, had still an existence; but that speaking after the manner of men, the man was certainly dead: and that in point of fact, he was entirely out of our reach, and not only unable to aid us, but ignorant of the fact that men were seeking his aid.

Another (a Kashmírí Musalmán) then spoke, and said that this pír had obtained special favour and dignity from God, and that he had been invested with healing powers which were to continue till the end of time. This seemed so absurd as hardly to require an answer: but there were many sitting and listening, and these by their silence virtually assented to what was said, and would probably have been glad to hear much more in praise of their saint, whether they really believed it to be true or not. So I said, "This is a very unreasonable and groundless assertion; and quite inconsistent with God's ordinary method of dealing with man, as well as with what we learn from his word. He has appointed means and instrumentalities and remedies, to be used with reference to the various necessities, and troubles, and sufferings of life. He has given us food for our hunger, water for our thirst, clothing to wear, medicines of different kinds to be used when we are sick, &c., and all we can do, or need to do, is to make use of these things, and look to him for a blessing." I further explained, that God was not unwilling to bless us, but, on the contrary, had a tender love and pity for us; and that as to resorting to the aid of those who not only were palpably dead and gone, but who, when living, had been no more than sinful men like ourselves, it was as foolish and sinful as it was unprofitable.

This, however, did not satisfy him, but he proceeded to reiterate what he had said, and to utter much more to the same purpose. I then replied, "This is very bad in you, not merely to come to the mela, but to defend the practice, and insist on that defence by considerations that are contrary both to reason and religion. Many come here in compliance with custom, and without having ever thought whether that custom is good or bad, who when told the truth admit it, and acknowledge that they ought to go directly to God for those favours which they seek from the pír. But your object seems to be to defend the idolatrous practice at all events: and that notwithstanding the fact, that it is contrary to the religion you "profess," (the Mohammadan.) I then mentioned to him that two or three years ago a Maulwí of great note among them, had happened to call on me at the time of the Roshní mela, and when I asked him whether he had come to attend the mela, he replied that he desired not to hear, or speak the name of the mela: nor so much as to think of it, except with disapprobation, as it was a thing contrary to their religion. To all this the Kashmírí replied that if I was displeased at what he was saying, he would go away—so off he went.

The plea of good works alleged and examined—"Every man for his own religion."

I was then about to set forth the plan of the gospel, with reference to the wants and woes of men, but as soon as the question, How man could be just with God? was stated, a Faqír spoke up, and said that this was to be accomplished by good works. This gave occasion to show the utter insufficiency of man's best works to secure salvation, and the necessity of such a righteousness as the Lord Jesus wrought, and such a sacrifice as he offered up: as well as the necessity of following that Saviour in a holy and upright life; seeing that without holiness no man can see the Lord. When this part of the subject came up, another Musalmán spoke and said that the Koran likewise required good works, and uprightness of life. "Yes," I replied, "doubtless there are things of that kind written, and so there are perhaps to some extent, in every system of religion. Man's natural conscience as well as the remnants of revelation that the different tribes of the earth may have among them by tradition or otherwise, can teach him so much as this, that he ought to keep God's commandments. This is no new thing. From the earliest ages, from the beginning of time, this has been testified to, in divers ways: but the question now before us, the great question upon which we differ, is, how shall man, who has not kept God's commandments, but broken them all, time after time, in thought, word, and act, how shall he obtain favour with God?" This gave opportunity to set forth still more fully and to urge with additional earnestness, upon their acceptance, the glorious gospel of Christ.

Presently, however, a man who was standing off toward one corner, and had perhaps but just come in, called out in a noisy manner, "hán sab koí ápo apne dín:" viz. "Yes, every man for his own religion:" and followed it up with such a tirade as one often has to endure upon such occasions. I said, "This is very bad for you to say, 'every man for his own religion:' which is as much as to acknowledge that you do not care whether you believe the truth or not, and that you are equally indifferent as to what your fellow men believe: whereas your desire and solicitude ought to be, to become acquainted with the truth, whatever it be, that God has declared: and to have your fellow men acquainted with it also." This point was opened and insisted on at some length, as it is one on which the benighted people of this land are fearfully in error: the value of the truth is a sentiment which they seem unable to appreciate.

The Koran to be believed; why not.

After a little the man went away, and left me to pursue my discourse, when another spoke, and said, that as for him he trusted in the Koran: that his prophet had told him what to believe, and what to do, and that was enough for him. "Yes, my friend," and "I suppose you do: and were there reason to think that the Koran was from God, I would do so too: but I must have a foundation for my faith: I must go back to the beginning, and find out what God has said by the mouth of prophets and holy men since the world began; and there I find that he has appointed the Lord Jesus to be our Saviour: that from the time that the woman's seed was promised, from generation to generation, until the Messiah appeared, all testimonies combine and centre in him: I find that he came likewise at the time, and place, and under the precise circumstances foretold: and that, blessed be God, when he did come, he proved just such a Saviour, as was foretold, and as perishing men needed: and finally, that the testimony of angels, apostles, and God himself speaking from heaven, agreed with, and confirmed that of the blessed Saviour himself, that he was the Hope of Israel, the only Saviour of men; the Intercessor with whom the Father is well pleased, and whose mediation is ever prevalent with him. And now can I, at the beck of every one who has subsequently presented himself, whether Mohammed, or any one besides, renounce this divine, Almighty Saviour, and forego the glorious hopes of which he is the author, and to the fruition of which he alone is able to bring me?"

While I said these things, and more to the same purpose, the people were very quiet and listened attentively.

I had now been speaking and conversing for a considerable length of time, and on reaching a convenient point, I ceased, and my place was taken by Brother Rudolph.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

A COMMUNICATION OF THE REV. W. A. P. MARTIN.

A Missionary Geography needed.

God, in his providence, has usually taken long periods of time for the accomplishment of great designs, and the world's conversion is a work of such magnitude that with all the energies of the Church wrought to the highest intensity of action, and with the efficacious power of the Spirit, bestowed as freely as in the apostolic age, a long period must still elapse before its final achievement. Though each generation is encouraged by seeing some fruits from their labours, many generations must sow and reap before the whole field is replenished with the good seed and white for the harvest.

In this work, the vigour and permanence of the exertions abroad depend very much on the fidelity with which the missionary spirit is cherished at home. This is done mainly, it is true, by cherishing grace in the hearts of Christ's people; but next to this, is the diffusion, among Christians, of full and accurate knowledge respecting the state of the world. Missionary societies have always found it necessary to employ periodical publications for this purpose; and no argument is wanted to show that this agency will always continue to be indispensable. But it is insufficient; for, however replete those periodicals may be with matter of every description suited to old and young, it is still in a confused state, and like the contents of periodicals, in general awakens an interest which can only be kept alive by constant succession.

To render the immense mass of information thus given to the public in the highest degree effectual, it requires to be thrown into such a shape as to constitute a part of the primary education of youth, that it may imbue in the fountain, the principles and practice of their maturer years.

What then is the form best suited to this purpose? A history of missions, not like some that bear the title, a chaotic compilation of missionary records, nor on the other hand, a meagre and unsatisfactory outline, but well digested, elegantly written, and pervaded with a religious spirit, might exert a great and lasting influence upon the popular mind, but no degree of excellence in such a work would secure its introduction into schools as a permanent text-book. This is a position into which such matter, however important in itself, can only be introduced by incorporation with branches of knowledge usually considered essential to a good education.

There are only two branches which are at all available for this purpose, namely, Geography and History.

The short period of study in common schools will not admit of an extensive series of historical works; and the compends in general use are on so reduced a scale, that the subject of missions, if introduced at all, must be treated in such a cursory manner as to be of little value. But the subject of Geography, on the contrary, is of such a nature, that it cannot be treated properly without communicating much information calculated to promote interest in the cause of missions. An acquaintance with the condition of mankind as existing in all parts of the world, tends to promote philanthropy, the highest form of which is exhibited in the missionary spirit. And though I am not aware that the subject has ever been treated in that way, there is certainly no branch of common school study so capable of a religious application. This will be readily admitted, if repudiating the vulgar notion, that exercises on the maps and tables of statistics are all that is wanted, we consider the geographer as undertaking to lead the youth of a nation through the tour of the globe, with the design of teaching them whatever may be learned from it of the character of God and the condition of man.

An author of piety and talent, proposing to himself this theme, the same which kindled the genius of Herodotus, but enlarged by the growing dimensions of the known world, and sanctified by viewing it through the light of religion, could be at no loss for room to exercise his powers, or for opportunities to make good impressions on his youthful readers. In describing the natural features of a country, mountains, rivers, lakes, and seas, would all be made to illustrate the wisdom and goodness of God. Animals, fruits and flowers might be introduced to swell the argument, exhibiting an infinite variety of adaptations as found in different soils and climates; and these objects, being studied, each in its own locality, in connexion with the whole group of remarkable things attached to that spot, could not fail to be more interesting than in the stiff classifications of their several sciences. The writer would next delineate the moral condition of its inhabitants as traced in their social habits, arts, commerce, and laws, and then proceed to develope the causes which have combined to produce the various aspects of society. The resources of the country, the employments of the people, and the form of government might here be noticed; but religion, which has always had a chief agency in moulding the laws, literature, and moral character of nations, would be the principal topic. If a people are enlightened, happy, and prosperous, it would be shown as resulting from the predominant influence of gospel truth. A brief survey of their history might also be taken, from which it would in most cases appear that the first impulse in civilization came from the introduction of the gospel, and that every stage of their future progress may be taken as an index of its influence. The unfriendliness of the Church of Rome to every form of human improvement would be demonstrated on a grand scale. It would be shown that "throughout Christendom, whatever advance has been made in knowledge, in freedom, in wealth, and in the arts of life, has been made in spite of her, and has everywhere been in inverse proportion to her power. The loveliest and most fertile provinces of Europe have, under her rule, been sunk in poverty, in political servitude, and in intellectual torpor; while Protestant countries, once proverbial for sterility and barbarism, have been turned by skill and industry into gardens, and can boast of a long list of heroes and statesmen, philosophers and poets. Whoever, knowing what Italy and Scotland naturally are, and what, four hundred years ago, they actually were, shall now compare the country round Rome and the country round Edinburgh, will be able to form some judgment as to the tendency of Papal domination. The descent of Spain, once the first among monarchies, to the lowest depths of degradation, the elevation of Holland, in spite of many natural disadvantages, to a position such as no commonwealth so small has ever reached, teach the same lesson. Whoever passes in Germany from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant principality, in Switzerland from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant canton, in Ireland from a Roman Catholic to a Protestant county, finds that he has passed from a lower to a higher grade of civilization. On the other side of the Atlantic the same law prevails. The Protestants of the United States have left far behind them the Roman Catholics of Mexico, Peru, and Brazil. The Roman Catholics of Lower Canada remain inert, while the whole continent round them is in a ferment with Protestant activity and enterprise. The French have doubtless shown an energy and an intelligence which, even when misdirected, have justly entitled them to be called a great people. But this apparent exception, when examined, will be found to confirm the rule; for in no country that is called Roman Catholic has the Roman Catholic Church, during several generations, possessed so little authority as in France."—(Macaulay's History of England, p. 31.) Nearly the same might be said of the Greek Church, and the degraded remnants of the Armenian, Nestorian, and Abyssinian churches, would complete the lesson respecting the influence of a corrupted faith. Turkey, among the first countries in Europe, in respect to natural advantages, but lowest on the scale of civilization; Asia Minor, Egypt, and the Barbary States, once luxuriant and populous, now covered with deserts and ruins, would combine to illustrate the tendency of the sensual religion of the Koran.

Under the best forms of paganism men would always be found more debased than under the worst phases of Christianity, and always less degraded where paganism embodies most of the principles of true religion. Nor would the author fail to notice in their proper places the efforts now making for the spread of the gospel in many parts of the world, regarding them, though apparently unimportant, as really the initial principles of great revolutions.

A new element of interest would thus be imparted to the study. Its moral influence would be made more healthy, by introducing, in occasional sketches of missionary history, a style of character very different from that which occupies the most prominent place in profane history.

A judicious summary of general history, would throw much light on the existing state of society, enforce the moral of the work, and form in the mind of the student a permanent association between geography and history, which would be of great value in the prosecution of the latter subject.

This outline agrees in its main features with the plan of one of the most important geographical works now extant, which is stated to be—"The description of different parts of the globe, with a view to delineate the various aspects of man, as an active and social being, and upon the principle that a survey of the history of man is necessary to enable us, accurately to understand, and duly to estimate his present condition."—(Murray's Cyclopedia Geography.) The chief additional feature is, that the supposed work shall be prepared in a religious spirit, so that all the varied matter contained in it shall be combined in a united influence on the heart and character. A work of this kind might indeed be larger than those in common use; but its value would be so enchanced that a longer period might well be allotted to its study. And whatever the precise shape it might assume under the hand of the author, if well executed, it could scarcely fail of becoming a text book in our own parochial schools, and the schools of other religious denominations; and perhaps might secure a place in private libraries generally.

The writer of this article drew his views on this subject from his experience as a teacher, and now from a heathen land, suggests the preparation of such a work, as a good method for turning the influence of common schools in favour of foreign missions.

Will not some of the friends of the cause give the subject a fuller discussion?

MISCELLANEOUS.

POPERY IN BELGIUM.

The Rev. E. Panchaud, of Brussels, is the writer of an admirable paper "On the spirit of Popery in Belgium; its operations and prospects," which is published in the December number of "Evangelical Christendom." Seldom have we seen a more complete view of a subject, and we regret that we cannot transfer the whole paper to our columns. It would, however, occupy some seven pages of the Record, and must therefore be excluded, to the regret of those who would like to see what Romanism is in our day, even in the country most confidently appealed to by her advocates, as showing that the papal religion is consistent with civil liberty.

A slight abstract of this paper may be given, chiefly to show the connection in which occur two extracts we shall make from it:

Mr. Panchaud shows, I. The Spirit of Popery in Belgium; II. The Operations of Popery in Belgium; and III. The Prospects of Popery in Belgium.

Under Part I. we have "The Romish doctrine in Belgium," showing by quotations from works of authority recently published in that country, that Romanism is indeed "another gospel"; then "The Romish worship" is treated of, which agrees well with the idolatrous, sensual creed; next "The discipline of the Roman Catholic Church in Belgium" comes before us, a discipline which tolerates almost every sin, provided a few external rites are observed, and which is so conducted as to bring the largest pecuniary gains, especially from the dying, into the coffers of the church and its priests; afterwards we meet with a section on the relations of the Roman clergy with the government. This we quote. It explains what has no doubt appeared singular to some of our readers, why and how Toleration exists in a Roman Catholic country:—

Popery in its relations with the Government.

It was by the alliance of the priesthood with the liberal party in 1830, that they succeeded in overthrowing a government, the only fault of which, in their eyes, was its being Protestant. They would not hesitate to repeat this revolution now; it is their work. Thus they have again sanctioned and consecrated revolt, when it advances the interests of Popery. A striking lesson this, to those Governments [and individual politicians,] who think they can strengthen their power by means of the Romish clergy; they may be assured that this alliance will be broken [under certain conditions, which Mr. P. mentions—virtually whenever the priests cannot have their own way.]

In Belgium the Roman Catholics amount to nearly five millions, and the dissenters from the communion to a few thousands only. The clergy flattered themselves that, after the revolution, they should rule unrestrained, and that the people would allow themselves to be brought entirely under their dominion; therefore they did not hesitate to subscribe to the articles of the constitution relative to religion, though they were extremely liberal; we will give a transcript of them.

"Freedom of religious worship, and the public exercise of it guaranteed. If any disturbance should be made in using this privilege, it will be repressed.

"No one shall be compelled, in any way whatever, to take part in any religious ceremonies, or to observe the days set apart for such purposes.

"The State has no right to interfere in the nomination or installation of ministers of religion, nor to prevent them corresponding with their superiors, and publishing their acts. In this last case they incur the ordinary responsibilities of the press and of publication.

"The salaries of the ministers of religion are at the charge of the State, and will form part of the annual budget.

"The Belgians have the right to form societies, and this privilege shall not be subject to any preventive measures."

That the clergy, who had given either a voluntary or a forced assent to these provisions, have been much disappointed in their expectations, none can doubt; for Protestanism, which they thought had died with the fall of the Dutch dynasty, took advantage of the liberty insured by the constitution to propagate its doctrines, to form various religious societies, and colport the Holy Scriptures; and succeeded, by the blessing of the Lord, in spreading abroad the vital doctrines of Christianity; and about twenty new churches have sprung up in Belgium, principally composed of pious proselytes from Popery. The liberal party, though Papists, became united in strenuous opposition to ultramontane principles. As long as the liberal and clerical parties were not defined, and neither had expressly stated their views, union was maintained, though with mutual suspicion. Various differences, however, quickly took place, conflicts ensued, and now the allies of 1830 are at open hostilities.

Trials had frequently been made in the Chambers, in order to ascertain to which of these parties power should belong; it ended by the liberals being conquerors. The clergy saw with grief and indignation that temporal power and influence had left them, and could not hide their discontent; but sooner than abandon the field of battle, they entered upon a struggle with the Government, of which no one could foresee the result, or calculate the consequences. It was on the ground of public instruction, the education given at the expense of the State, that the clergy exhibited a spirit of the most deplorable intolerance and exclusiveness. Some years before, under a mixed ministry, a law regarding elementary schools was voted, which was extremely favourable to clerical domination. Every school which was supported, either in whole or in part, by the State or the commune, was compelled to have the religious instructions given by a priest. It was entirely confided to him; but if he, from some motive known only to himself, refused to come to the school, and the bishop did not send another priest to replace him, the school immediately ceased to be communal, and became simply a private institution, and had no longer any claim to the subsidy allowed from the public purse; and the bishop had no account to render of his determination to any one. How little soever the ecclesiastic might be dissatisfied with the choice of books, or with the professors, or should he find he could not govern the school according to his own will absolutely, he could close the establishment, and there were no means of obtaining any redress. Having obtained such success, the clergy flattered themselves that they should obtain the same advantages in the law regulating the "Enseignment Moyen," or second stage of education. But strong clamour and numerous objections having been made against the intolerance of the law voted, the liberal ministry in power since 1847 were led to propose a measure, of a less objectionable character, on secondary education. They proceeded, nevertheless, very slowly, and during the discussion of the bill they admitted all the amendments consistent with the maintenance of religious liberty, and the independence of the State. But the blow was struck, the law was voted, against all the clamour of the clerical party, and the protestations of all the bishops and the court of Rome. It provided that the priests should still be called upon to give religious instruction, but their retirement should not in any way cause the suppression of the school. The ministry deferred putting the law in force for some time, in the hope that when the excitement of party feeling had passed away, the clergy would avail themselves of the advantage of being the official religious teachers in the schools. But this did not satisfy them, they refused it, and again protested; and in a correspondence between the Minister of the Interior and the Archbishop—the organ of the whole episcopate of Belgium—the objections of Popery against the new law are formally stated. We will mention the principal.

1. The clergy reject being called, as any favour; they claim the right to enter the schools. They are the spiritual authority, and, as such, command; they do not receive their mission from the State—this is to be clearly understood.

2. The introducing dissenting or Protestant ministers into the colleges, to teach the pupils of that faith, violates the principles of Romanism, and consequently is contrary to its liberty.

3. No guarantee is given as to the choice of books, or professors, so that the instruction may be homogeneous in all its branches.

4. They will not submit to the rule, that if the priest should retire, from some particular reason, known only to himself, the religious instruction should be given by a layman.

The clergy do not acknowledge themselves in possession of religious liberty, until they can interfere with the educational establishments by virtue of their own authority, expelling from them the dissenting ministers, and receiving guarantees that professors and books shall be chosen according to their views. If they fail in obtaining their demands, they exclaim against the violation of liberty of worship, and the intolerance of the Government. The clamours they have succeeded in raising have already produced a certain effect upon timid consciences, but their accusations have lately become doubly violent, on account of the approbation expressed by the Chamber of Representatives with the conduct of the Minister of the Interior, regarding the clergy, and his correspondence with the bishop.

To this intolerance in principle, and these tendencies towards the usurpation of power, Roman Catholicity in Belgium adds, as often as it is able to do so, persecution, open and cruel. We could fill pages in relating the repeated attacks instigated by the clergy, during the last fifteen years, against the colporteurs, the schoolmasters, and the evangelists; but, in the majority of instances, the civil power has interfered for the protection of the victims. These attacks are now becoming less frequent, and the principles of religious liberty are beginning to be understood, as well as the right of the dissenting ministers to exercise to the full their work of evangelization. Instead of recording these scenes of persecution, we prefer quoting the words of one of the clergy, who at present enjoys much consideration in the Romish church. M. Malou, bishop of Bruges, before his elevation to the episcopal dignity, spoke in the following terms of William Tyndal, in the work already quoted on the reading of the Bible in the vulgar tongue:—"Obliged to leave his country, in which the heretics (the Protestants of the sixteenth century) were most vigilantly pursued, he took refuge in Belgium, where the Spanish laws were not very indulgent to men suspected of heresy. He was burnt alive as a heretic at Vilvorde."—Page 178.

This punishment is termed a want of indulgence, and there is not one word from the pen of the bishop condemnatory of the murder. What does it, on the contrary, stigmatize as intolerance? It is the resolution of the British and Foreign Bible Society to withhold the apocryphal books from their editions of the Bible. Three pages after that in which Tyndal is mentioned, M. Malou terms the measures of the Bible Committee little tolerant, and adds, a little further on, "The rigour of the Bible Society cannot be softened."

He also manifests his persecuting spirit in recording the tragic end of Cyrille Lucar, patriarch of Constantinople. This dignitary had adopted some of the Reformed opinions, and committed what in the sight of Popery was the immense crime of translating the Bible into the vulgar tongue. "This publication was the cause of some troubles, and," coldly adds the new bishop of Bruges, "the Grand Turk had him strangled, in order to stifle his intrigues." Further on, M. Malou considers the Grand Turk as the instrument of Providence for the infliction of a just punishment, and commences a fresh paragraph with the cruelly emphatic words:—"But Cyrille, before suffering this just punishment of his apostacy," &c. Although the sympathy of Belgian priests towards the Greek church has not been very lively hitherto, it would doubtless be soon awakened were the clergy and the people of this communion brutally to oppose the dissemination of the Holy Scriptures by the evangelical missionaries. "The people of Syra," writes the same author, "attacked the house of Mr. Leeves, and the Protestant establishments of the island. The missionary was obliged to call in the assistance of the authorities, but so strong was public animosity, that the troops took part with the people, instead of repulsing them."—Page 270.

Not a word of sympathy is expreseed for the victims of so culpable a violence, and not a word of blame against the people, nor the military forces, which, instead of obeying their leaders, joined the rioters. All is well in the eyes of Rome, when a tumult is excited and outrages are committed for the purpose of destroying the Holy Scriptures, and maltreating the missionaries who translate and distribute them. "The end justifies the means," is Rome's old maxim. But we have not yet come to the end of the bishop's pages on this subject. "The same scenes," says he, "were repeated in most of the towns of Greece. A young Greek perished at Para for having brought a Protestant Bible there. More Bibles were burnt in the isle of Tina, perhaps, than at Syra," &c. "In a word, the biblical colportage in modern Greece meets with all the obstacles it has been accustomed to encounter in Catholic countries."—Page 270.

We confine ourselves to the record of this avowal. It is, indeed, excellent on the part of a bishop to reveal what the Romish clergy would do in Belgium, a Roman Catholic country, if the Government allowed them the power, and put the gendarmes at their disposal. We know, by the persecutions practised in Greece, what would be the obstacles raised in our way.

The work of M. Malou possesses an official character. It is approved by the archbishop of Malines, its author is one of the highest dignitaries of the church, and his colleagues in Belgium and France eagerly joined him last year at Bruges, for the purpose of celebrating with the greatest splendour the festival of the Precious Blood.

It is on account of this spirit of intolerant and cruel ursurpation that many men, while composing the Catholic party in Belgium, and outwardly professing Romanism, are leagued against the maxims and the influence of the clergy, being persuaded that, were the spirit of Popery to prevail, the civil and religious liberty of their country would perish at once. We meet, indeed, with the following words in one of the liberal papers, concerning a motion of the Chamber of Representatives:—"It signifies that there is in Belgium a compact, united majority, which has inscribed the principle of religious instruction among the laws of the State, but which is decided to repel every pretension tending to invest the clergy with unconstitutional power."

Politique, 23d July, 1851.

Under Part II. Mr. Panchaud treats of "The Religious Orders," "Schools," "The Festivals of Popery," "The Papal Press in Belgium," "Money obtained and employed by Rome in Belgium." It is stated that there are 650 convents, cloisters, &c., 450 for women and 200 for men, having 13,000 individuals estimated in connection with them, "the sworn militia" of Popery: and the number of secular priests is put down at 6000, making nearly 20,000 ecclesiastics, or persons devoted in virtue of their position or salary to the propagation and defence of this false religion in a kingdom of 4,500,000 inhabitants. In this enumeration several classes of persons, such as choristers, sextons, &c., and many associations among the laity, such as those of the Rosary, the Sacred Heart, the Good Death, &c. are not included. Here, as under the former division, we have to omit many interesting statements and details.

Under Part III. Mr. Panchaud gives a general view of the elements of power and durability in the Romanist religion in Belgium: and he closes with a brief statement of the other and brighter side of the case. The picture is drawn with evident discrimination and ability. It is indeed a terrible one, but its gloom is not unbroken. And we know that the pall of Roman death cannot always rest on that fair land. "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

As the Board is in correspondence with Christian friends in Belgium, having remitted funds to them, and hoping still to do so, though on a more liberal scale, to aid them in their missionary work, we insert this part of Mr. Panchaud's paper. Those of our readers who peruse it, we hope all, will be glad to see what are the prospects of Rome and of the Gospel in Belgium. We can lay before them no stronger plea than is here presented for their prayers and their gifts in aid of our brethren who are set for the defence and the spread of true religion in that country.

The Prospects of Popery in Belgium.

Our Lord has told us, "the world loves its own," and the spirit of Popery being that of the world, this spirit will maintain its influence so long as men shall love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.

Besides, the means employed by Popery being such as generally procure success in the world—namely, reputation, power, numbers, fortune, added to the influence of a position established by the support and pay of the State and of long standing, we must expect, humanly speaking, that the "mystery of iniquity" will yet display its power for a long time. And if cunning, superstition, pious frauds, flatteries adroitly directed, and threats judiciously fulminated, ought to give prosperity to a cause, that of Rome will see its successes multiply.

We shall find a new element of durability and power for Popery in the character and dispositions of the Belgian people.

The spirit of inquiry and research, in matters of religion is null in the population, and particularly in the Flemish part of it, which counts two-thirds of the whole. They can criticise the clergy, and turn into ridicule the doings and actions of their curé; they will laugh sometimes at certain ceremonies, and will perhaps so far emancipate themselves as to deny their belief in some absurd dogmas; but no one gives himself the trouble to discover the true road which conducts to heaven.

Amongst the men who are the least under the influence of Popery, their religion consists, as they express it, in being honest men; and as to forms, they submit to them, at long intervals, out of respect to public opinion and for the sake of their families. How, then, can a religious reformation extend itself amongst a people, one part of which is bigoted to excess, and the other indifferent and worldly, but held in the bosom of Romanism by the power of custom, and we must add, by that of fear? For, even in parts where the clergy are not loved, they are feared. Their rule has been long exclusive and without control, and they say it may return in full force. Its influence with the rich, the nobility, the magistracy, and the proprietors of landed property or of manufacturing establishments, is still great, because it flatters their tastes and their fancies. Accordingly, every one is afraid, if the priests are against him, of losing his work, or his custom, or his inheritance. As regards the poor, the greatest part of the help which they can hope to receive must reach them by the agency or with the consent of the clergy. In the towns, the overseer of the poor is almost always the friend of the curé, and his right hand; and, in the small towns and villages, the burgomaster must be a man of great energy if the "Bureau de Bienfaisance," of which the curé is a member, is not entirely under the domination of the latter. Also, in the distribution of the public charities, we see continually the poor and needy, who have left the Roman communion, deprived of that which, according to the law, they have a right to receive. It is indeed rarely that claims of this sort are even listened to.

The rich and the noble, from an idea of self-preservation, generally ally themselves with the clergy. They think that without them their influence, their titles, and their property would be wrested from them. One can scarcely count one in a thousand of those who belong to this class, who has dared to act in opposition to the priests' party, and who seeks the light of the gospel.

In the class of the bourgeois, the shop-keepers, the manufacturers, and the men of liberal professions, one finds, much more than elsewhere, a dislike to the doctrines of Rome and opposition to clericalism. It is also from this class that the party is recruited which offers the most vigorous resistance to the ultramontanes, and asserts strongly the independence of the State in relation to the church of Rome, as well as the rights of religious liberty. Nevertheless, this party gives us very little reason to hope for a genuine reformation. Liberal, it is true, in its policy, as regards the Popedom, and rejoicing in everything that puts an obstacle in the way of the clergy, it neither has, nor seeks to have, generally speaking, genuinely Christian convictions. Its delight is in pleasure, fêtes, the theatres, luxury, and all that development of a superficial civilization, which multiplies external enjoyments at the expense of domestic life, economy, and religious habits. To support its philanthropic designs independently of the clergy, it will be continually setting on foot new fêtes to be given on Sundays. So, every time that the disciples of the gospel address themselves to men known as liberals, and make known their own opinions, and thel anguage of the word of God, on what ought to be the life of a Christian, they find themselves repulsed with more animosity than if they had been priests or Jesuits; and they are forthwith accused of puritanism, of unreasonableness, and even of intolerance and a sectarian spirit.

Many, thinking that they would find amongst us a system of morals which would permit them to live in our religion in a more unrestrained manner, have very soon withdrawn themselves when they have known us better.

It appears, besides, that they hold, more than the poor, to their temporal position; and knowing well that Rome will pardon them, sooner or later, if they return to her bosom, and that public opinion will support them, so long as they have not changed their religion, and committed the crime, which in the eyes of all honest people is most grievous, of forsaking the religion of their fathers, they will not cease to be Roman Catholics. So long as this almost universal and deep-rooted prejudice against all change of religion shall continue, the future of Popery will not incur any serious danger.

It is true there are men, both in the republican party and amongst the liberals, who do their best to bring about the complete separation of the Church and State; and others, who think it possible, under the influence of democratic institutions, to reform Catholicism, and make it return to the point where it was in the seventh century, before Gregory I. assumed the tiara, and took the title of Universal Bishop. The Pope would then be nothing more than a president, "primus inter pares;" all abuses would in like manner disappear, and the superstitions which the middle ages gave birth to; and the clergy would be subjected to popular election, like the public functionaries. We have heard this system set forth by men of talent and study, but we cannot at all see that such views are becoming popular; and the thinkers who have adopted them have forgotten that Rome, which is easy to deal with on questions of morals and politics, will yield nothing as to the rights of the Pope. For an instant she will know how to bend her head, in order to let the storm pass over her; but it will be to lift it up more proudly than ever, as soon as the times are more favourable to her.

Further, politicians and members of the liberal press scarcely exhibit any marked favour to Protestantism. Its doctrines seem to them to belong to an age long past, to be mystical, and to tend to a morality little in accordance with the state and wants of society. They have learned, too, that men of influence and numerous ecclesiastics in England have passed over to Catholicism, which already fills them with distrust.

And, in a political point of view, they do not consider the Protestant church as being at all more liberal than the Catholic. They remark enormous abuses in certain Reformed churches, and accuse them of being equally intolerant with those that are under the dominion of the Pope. Ireland is the continual theme of their charges against the professed liberalism of the Protestants. Persons of high consideration in Belgian liberalism have told us very plainly that the Protestant ecclesiastics were not the friends and defenders of liberty of worship, except in the countries where they were in the minority, or only while they did not succeed in getting themselves acknowledged and paid by the State. The following article from a journal edited at Brussels, in the liberal interest, will give an idea of the exaggerated character of the complaints of this party, in its accusations of intolerance against the Protestants:—

"In England, the Protestants are acting towards the Catholics and the Jews, in the same manner as, with us, the episcopate would wish to see the Government act towards the Protestants and the Jews. In England, under the pretext of the supremacy of the Anglican religion, the Parliament is exerting itself in the making of Bills to hinder the Pope from conferring ecclesiastical titles on the bishops; in Belgium, under a similar pretext, the bishops demand that no State professor may be named without their approbation; that is to say, in fact, that all professors belonging to other than the Catholic religion may be excluded from the State instruction, and so on. In England, the Parliament shelters itself behind a law which it might easily modify, to shut its doors against Mr. Lionel Rothschild, and to drive from its bosom Mr. Solomons, because they are Jews: in Belgium, the bishops demand, against the formal will of the Constitution, the right to hinder pupils from receiving the religious instruction of the ministers of their own religion, in the Colleges of the State, because they are Jews or Protestants!

"The bishops, above all, considering the evils which the Catholics have to suffer in England, ought loudly to proclaim the principle of complete religious liberty, instead of giving themselves up to quibblings, in order to bring about a change in the carrying out of the wise provisions of our Constitution."—Le Politique, July 25, 1851.

If you join to this cause for the unpopularity of Protestantism, the fact that Belgium has shaken off the yoke of the Protestant Government of Holland, and has retained a feeling of resentment against everything belonging to its old masters, you will agree with us that the Popedom has not the least reason to fear that it will see the Belgian people soon turn, in a body, to the Protestant religion.

Lastly, will the Popish clergy see a reforming movement proceed from themselves? What we have said of the spirit in which they are educated, of the practices to which they are continually addicted—of the influence which they exercise—of the servitude and absolute dependence under which they are placed in relation to their rulers, and to the powerful hierarchy which directs the action of the forces of Rome, as it were, by one head and one arm—gives us reason to doubt whether a movement of any extent could declare itself amongst the ecclesiastics towards a return to the doctrines of the gospel.

Unquestionably, there is in the clerical body, and particularly amongst the young priests, as well as an ardent and fanatical party which is devoted to Rome and which favours Jesuitism, another class which submits impatiently to its servile position. It would willingly break its chains, but by little and little it is gained over and brought into subjection. The most refractory are driven away, or sent to convents to do penance. Very soon, by far the greatest number of those who have dreamed of changes, end by being calmed down and resigning themselves to their lot. They get accustomed to slavery, and come at last, from finding it pleasant themselves, to persuade their young brethren to follow their example, and bow the head under the gilded yoke of the Popedom. To have reason to hope for any reform of a useful and blessed character, we must have ecclesiastics rich in evangelical light and strong in Christian convictions. But where are the members of the Romish clergy to find these treasures? It is not in their "offices," which take up a great part of their time; it is not in each day's compulsory reading of the Breviary; and still less in their relations with laymen or ecclesiastics who are strangers to the word of God.

The absurdity of the dogmas and rites of Romanism will render them sceptical and indifferent, and will make them cold deists, who do the work of the priesthood as the only means of existence within their reach; but, without the work of the Spirit and a serious perusal of the Bible, it will never guide them to saving truth. Accordingly, to whichever side we turn, we see that, as far as man can judge, the partisans of Rome may feel the greatest security, and flatter themselves with the prospect of a long domination over the people of Belgium; and a few isolated defections of ecclesiastics and laymen do not hinder them at all from singing their triumph, and from continually recording in their journals that the confessional has never seen so many penitents, and that their fêtes and their processions have never been better attended.

Must one, then, absolutely despair of the future of Belgium, in a spiritual point of view? By no means.

Mr. Panchaud then presented "the other side" of the subject. This, though not very long, we must defer till our next number. It will then be seen that there is yet hope for the people of Belgium.

"NOT WORDS BUT DEEDS."

Words are well enough in their places. Words of comfort, kindness, and encouragement oftentimes go a great way. They are angel voices amidst the din and tumult, the darkness and dismay of contending passions, and depressing fears. But whilst words have their place, and that place a most important one, we have never yet seen the time when mere words would pay debts, or provide the silver and gold requisite for carrying on any extensive system of operations. Words will not pay colporteur's salaries, nor freight-bills, nor travelling expenses, nor for books and tracts given to the destitute. If mere words would fill a treasury, we should be very rich just now. We have had resolutions upon resolutions from the various Synodical meetings of the past autumn, all in the highest degree commendatory, but as yet these resolutions have brought but little money. We are somewhat in the condition of the nation's illustrious guest, the Hungarian hero, when he said, "You have made your speeches and they are very good, now please give us your money." We are certainly greatly in need of funds. We have not the heart to refuse the appointment of colporteurs in the new and needy portions of the country, when earnest applications are made to us. We have thus far made such appointments relying on the liberality of the churches to furnish the means for their support, but at present our receipts are inadequate to our wants. The quarterly salaries of all the colporteurs became due on the 1st ult., but at that date that department of our Treasury was entirely empty. In order that this Board may prosecute efficiently the great and glorious work in which it is engaged, it is well enough to say at once, that it will be indispensable that more liberal donations should be furnished it from the churches.

"DOES THE BOARD ESTABLISH DEPOSITORIES?"

This question has been so often asked us, that it may save time and trouble once more to revert to this matter and "define our position." A moment's reflection will show, that if the Depository system were once entered upon, it must be very extensively carried out. To establish a depository at one point, and not at another which the friends of the latter considered equally important, would be a prolific source of discontent. But to extend a system of Depositories all over the Church, would require a very large amount of capital—more indeed than the entire capital of the Board, and even a limited attempt could not be made without crippling seriously other and indispensable operations. We must have money to buy paper, pay printers, binders, &c. or we shall have no books and tracts; and we must have a very considerable amount of these books and tracts—which is just so much capital—in the hands of colporteurs, or we shall break up the colportage system, and thus wither the right arm of our strength. After providing for the publishing department and the colportage department, we have no other capital except what is in the shape of stereotype plates, and the buildings where our operations are carried on—so that in these circumstances, to establish depositories is simply a financial impossibility.

Upon the principle which led the king, to whom an officer had come with six reasons for not firing a salute on a certain occasion, to tell him he need not give any more of his reasons when he had stated that his first one was that he "had no powder," we presume we might now be excused from assigning any further reasons for not acceding to requests for local depositories when we have just said that over and above the necessities arising out of our present operations, we "have no money." We may add however, that so far as our knowledge extends, all religious publishing institutions which have ever extensively tried the Depository system have abandoned it. Neither the American Bible Society, the American Tract Society, nor the Methodist Book Concern now act to any extent on this principle. The carelessness of those to whom books were entrusted, the fact that the stock often became dust-soiled and worm-eaten by long lying on the shelves, and that many books were never heard from, occasioned such losses as showed the plan to be inexpedient. Where depositories are really needed, it would not be difficult for some active church member in a few days to raise the necessary capital; and at other less prominent points the wants of the people can be easily supplied by our colporteurs, who will cheerfully be sent to such fields as call for their labours.

To show that this Board is not acting less liberally than other institutions, it may be proper to say that some of the large voluntary societies having their head-quarters in another city, do not even keep depositories in Philadelphia, the second city in the Union. There are depositories here, it is true, but they are owned here, and, in some cases, those who own them are required to settle as often as monthly with the parent societies. We trust, therefore, that brethren will not expect the Board of Publication to do what under any circumstances and in many respects would be inexpedient, and in our present circumstances is impossible.

A NEW YEAR'S PRESENT FOR OUR COLPORTEURS.

The Messrs. Carters of New York, have very kindly presented the Board with one hundred copies of "Roger Miller, or Heroism in Humble Life," a very interesting little work they have lately published, of which they wish in this manner to bestow a copy as a New Year's gift on one hundred of our colporteurs. We have seldom seen a book better adapted to excite in the hearts of those who read it, a profound sense of the importance of earnest and persevering labours to carry the gospel in some form to the destitute and outcast in the midst of Christian lands,—under the very shadow of God's sanctuaries. If all colporteurs were pervaded with the spirit of Roger Miller, then blessed indeed would be the results of their labours, and blessed would be the privilege of directing and sustaining such men. What Roger Miller accomplished, might, under God, in some sense be done, by ten thousand other laymen, were they but imbued with the same spirit. We earnestly hope that the desire of the generous donors may be fulfilled, in the happy impression which this little volume may make upon the piety and the usefulness of the colporteurs of the Board of Publication. The work is very happily introduced by the Rev. James W. Alexander, D. D.

VOICES FROM NEW ENGLAND.

Our work goes on. Amongst the many indications of favour with which we are greeted, those which from time to time reach us from the land of the Pilgrims are by no means the least gratifying. A week or two since we wrote to several ministers in New England, asking them whether the labours of our colporteurs and the circulation of our books would be acceptable in their respective regions. The following expressions of favour are from the only two answers we have as yet received. The writers are both pastors of large Congregational churches.

"My Dear Sir—I was away from home when your letter came. I have known your valuable books for a long time, and have greatly rejoiced in their publication and circulation. They are strong cables by which to hold in this headlong generation.

With the exceptions you indicate, I shall be most happy to see the dwellings of New England, (we have houses here, and no mansions,) enlightened by them. We have, too, minds so educated that they will be appreciated. Anything I can do to facilitate the business, will be at your command. Should you want a line from me, and should the young men not reach here till the first of June, you had better let me know it, as I may be away by that time, recruiting my health. You are doing a great and good work; no human mind can measure its results. The works of the wicked, like their name, go under the waves of oblivion, while those of the righteous grow for ever. Yours most sincerely."

"Reverend and Dear Sir—Your esteemed favour of the 5th inst. is just received, and I hasten to reply by return mail. I am exceedingly desirous that the works of the Board of Publication should be extensively circulated throughout our bounds, and among the Congregational churches in this region. My opinion is, that one or two devoted colporteurs would find full employment in this field, and that great good would be done. It would afford me the sincerest pleasure to do all in my power for the promotion of this object."

FIELDS FOR COLPORTEURS.

As we expect to employ a number of students as colporteurs during their vacations in the ensuing spring and summer, it may be in our power to supply many fields where such labourers are wanted. To avoid as far as possible unnecessary travelling expenses, it would be better that those to whom we specially allude, should find employment within the States of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. If brethren in this portion of the Church who may wish their people supplied with the works of the Board, will be so kind as to inform us of their wishes, we shall be happy to do all in our power to meet such demands.

PROSPERITY OF THE SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

We have entered upon the second year of our Sabbath-school paper, with a subscription list of some thirty thousand. From various sources we have reason to know that this little periodical has given satisfaction and done a good work. As we heard a highly judicious and intelligent layman say with regard to it, "It contains good reading for young people and for older ones too." Its success thus far has equalled our most sanguine expectations. But why should there not be sixty thousand subscribers? With the hearty co-operation of pastors and Sabbath-school superintendents, the present list could easily be doubled.

MATERIALS FOR A CHURCH GATHERED

THROUGH A COLPORTEUR'S LABOURS.

A colporteur in a new and destitute portion of the West thus speaks of the encouragements he has met with, and of the permanently good results which promise to follow.

"There is much encouragement to prosecute the work of colportage with vigour. The books are in demand, and are nowhere to be had, especially our doctrinal works, Confession of Faith, &c. I have seen some good fruits of the work, particularly in a new settlement which I have regularly supplied a part of the time, and where I have gathered the materials of a church about to be organized."

A NEW YEAR'S GIFT FROM AN UNKNOWN FRIEND.

We very sincerely thank our unknown friend who sent us the following note, with five dollars enclosed, a few weeks since. We trust there may be many others, who, whether they have much or little to give, may imitate this good example. Alas! that there are so many who have so much to keep and so little to give.

"Dear Sir—Enclosed you will please find five dollars, to be applied to the uses and purposes of the Board of Publication—a New Year's gift. From a friend of the Board, who has but little to give."

A COLPORTEUR'S TROUBLES AMONG ROMANISTS.

A colporteur in the West, who has been endeavouring to scatter some rays of light amongst the Romish portion of the population, thus speaks of his reception.

"As a matter of course I have been opposed, to the utmost of his power, by the Roman priest who lives in this part of the country; and I have been subjected to almost all kinds of treatment, even to the necessity of sleeping out of doors. In the many discussions I have had with the Roman Catholics I have been threatened very hard, but notwithstanding all this, I have frequently met with persons, who, though nominally Romanists, are desirous to be enlightened in the truths of the gospel, and who bought books very liberally. The tracts were well received * * I suppose that to you, living as you do in the midst of an enlightened people, the detail of the encounters we colporteurs have in the West, with infidels, Deists, Romanists, and all kinds of errorists, would appear almost a romance. But still these things are true, and the greatness of the matter calls loudly for the untiring efforts of the Church to purify the land. To give a full detail of the wickedness I am daily witnessing, would be more than I could do."

BAD BOOKS.

Bad books are like ardent spirits; they furnish neither "aliment" nor "medicine:" they are "poison." Both intoxicate—one the mind, the other the body; the thirst for each increases by being fed, and is never satisfied; both ruin—one the intellect, the other the health, and together, the soul. The makers and venders of each are equally guilty, and equally corrupters of the community; and the safeguard against each is the same—total abstinence from all that intoxicates mind or body.

NOTICES OF BOOKS AND TRACTS.

SERMONS TO YOUNG CHILDREN. 32mo, 80 pages. Price 10 and 14 cents.

We have here a neat little volume of ten sermons, averaging less than eight small pages each. The style is sufficiently simple to suit the comprehension of young children, and at the same time is free from the wishy-washy "baby-talk" so often resorted to by those who attempt to make such books, and which is just as offensive to sensible children as to sensible older persons. The genuine talent for writing for children is a great gift. We think the author of these sermons has evinced no little of this talent, and trust the truth so well expressed will find its way deeper than the mere outward senses of the young auditors for whom they are designed.

UNIVERSALISM FALSE AND UNSCRIPTURAL. Price 8 cents.

A cheap edition, in paper covers, of this lucid and excellent treatise, is just out. Now that the venerated author is no more, it may add interest to this little volume, in the minds of its readers, to know that it is from the pen of the late Dr. Archibald Alexander.

CONFESSIONS OF A CONVERT FROM BAPTISM in WATER TO BAPTISM with WATER. Price 8 cents.

This work bids fair to be so popular that the Board have just issued a cheap edition of it in paper covers. In this shape it can be purchased by those who may wish to give it a wide circulation, at a very small cost.

BIBLE DICTIONARY. Second edition. Price 50 cents.

We are happy to state that the first edition of two thousand of this Dictionary was exhausted so soon that it was impossible to have another ready in time to keep up the supply. As a large edition is now ready, the various orders can be filled. The favour with which this work has been met, is a very satisfactory indication as to how much it was needed. The present edition has been corrected and improved.

NEW TRACTS.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY STATED AND DEFENDED. By the Rev. David McConoughy, D. D., 24 pages.

Socinianism and Arianism have been apparently of such easy indigenous growth in the visible Church, and come forth at the present day in such new and insidious guises, that we cannot too well guard the old scriptural doctrine, so fundamental to all evangelical religion, of a Trinity in Unity in the Godhead. Dr. McConoughy has given a succinct and lucid exhibition of what the word of God teaches on this most important subject.

ON FAMILY GOVERNMENT. By the Rev. H. W. Bulkeley. 24 pages.

This is the second tract on the subject of Family Government recently issued by the Board. We judge there may be need for both of these and several more beside. A proper degree of subordination in the younger members of the household is a consummation greatly to be desired. The want of timely restraint and correction at home has laid the foundation in not a few families for lasting sorrow both for parents and children. This tract contains very excellent hints, and such as are not unnecessary.

SINS OF THE TONGUE, with Rules and Reasons for avoiding them. By the Rev. William S. Plumer, D. D. 32 pages.

This tract contains some very plain talking on a very practical subject. Dr. Plumer's strong common sense, and remarkable knowledge of human nature, have enabled him to make this about the best tract on the sins of the "unruly member" which has ever fallen under our notice. Were the wholesome truths here told universally read, remembered, and acted upon, there would be much less trouble in the world and in the Church than there is now, or ever has been.

DEATH.

On the 18th of December, the Rev. Oliver Alden Taylor departed this life, aged fifty years. He was a member of the Presbytery of Londonderry, and pastor of the church of Manchester, Massachusetts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Rev. Charles Huntington having resigned the pastoral charge of the church at Wysox, has entered on his engagements as Professor of Mathematics and English Literature in the Collegiate Institute of the Presbytery of Susquehanna at Wyalusing, Pennsylvania.

Varieties.

Persecution in Madagascar.—The Queen of Madagascar is bent on exterminating Christianity in her dominions, and has long mercilessly persecuted those who prefer the "new religion." In the last outburst of this protracted persecution, four persons were burnt alive; fourteen precipitated from a high rock and crushed to death; a hundred and seventeen persons condemned to work in chains as long as they live; twenty persons cruelly flogged with rods, besides 1748 other persons mulcted in heavy penalties, reduced into slavery and compelled to buy themselves back, or deprived of their wives and families. Persons of rank have been degraded, and sent as forced labourers to carry stone for twelve months together to build houses; and in an endless variety of other ways have the maddened passions of one wicked woman been permitted now for years past to plunge a large, populous and beautiful country into misery and ruin.

A Transformation.—The Wesleyan Methodists in Mansfield, England, now occupy as a chapel the mansion which was for many years the residence of the celebrated Lord Chesterfield, whose dining-room now forms the vestry, and the wings are occupied as the residence of the Wesleyan ministers. Its interior has recently undergone a through remodeling and renovation.

Baptist Periodicals.—The Baptists publish forty-two periodicals in the United States—weekly, twenty-five; monthly, fifteen; quarterly, two.

The Baptist Mariners' Church in New York employs regularly ten missionaries, is composed of members from sixteen different nations, and received last month into its fellowship seven persons belonging to as many different nations.

Domestic Happiness.—"Six things," says Hamilton, are requisite to create a "happy home." Integrity must be the architect, and tidiness the upholsterer. It must be warmed by affection, and lighted up with cheerfulness; and industry must be the ventilator, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting canopy and glory, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God.

Pews in Bad Repute.—The last Ohio Methodist Conference arraigned one of its members for advocating the policy of having pewed seats in churches.

Costly Romish Cathedral.—It is stated that the Catholics of Buffalo, N. Y. contemplate the erection of a Cathedral in that city, to cost one million of dollars.

Mrs. Judson's Grave.—The grave of the second Mrs. Judson, at St. Helena, is said to be in a neglected condition. The Rev. Mr. Bertram, a Baptist missionary from St. Helena now in this country, is endeavouring to procure the means for protecting it by an iron fence. The piety and usefulness of this honoured missionary deserves at least such a tribute.

The Chinese Opium Trade.—Rev. Mr. Bridgeman, writing from China, says that the number of chests of opium, each containing 133 lbs. taken to China the present year, will exceed 70,000, and that in exchange for these 70,000 chests the Chinese will pay to foreigners more than $36,000,000, and most of this in silver.

The Lane Seminary has been defeated in its attempt to purchase Neander's Library. The required fund had been raised. But the administrator was offered a greater price for it, by an American gentlemen, as it is supposed, and sold it for the greater price.

Science on the Sea.—The advantages of science in nautical affairs have rarely been more strikingly illustrated than in the fact stated in the report of the Navy Department, that, by means of the wind and current charts, projected and prepared by Lieut. Maury, the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory, the passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific ports of our country has been shortened by about forty days.

Steam Carriages on Common Roads.—Mr. J. K. Fisher of Boston has made important improvements in the construction of steam carriages for common roads, and an effort is on foot to get up a Company with a capital of $100,000, for the manufacture and sale of such carriages in this country.

Life Preserving.—The Legislature of Vermont, at its recent session, enacted a law forbidding the employment of conductors, engineers, brakemen, or switchmen, "who shall make use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage." The employment of such a person, with the knowledge of the President, Superintendent, or any of the Directors, exposes the company to prosecution and a fine of $300 to $3,000, besides being liable for all damages that may result.

Work of the Needle.—More than thirty thousand persons are supported in the city of New-York by the manufacture of ready-made clothing; while the number living by it who reside in villages in Connecticut, New-Jersey and New-York, within a few hours' ride or sail from the city, is much larger. About eight-tenths of the goods manufactured are sent out of the city for sale. A single firm employs in the various departments three thousand five hundred operatives, and the sales of the house annually exceed a million of dollars. One hundred persons are employed in receiving and returning work only. Many of the operatives receive a compensation which barely keeps them from starvation.

Princeton Theological Seminary.—According to the Catalogue just published, there are, Resident Licentiates 3; First Class 48; Second Class 48; Third Class 38; total 137. Of these, 33 are from New York, 27 from Pennsylvania, 14 from New Jersey, 12 from Virginia, 6 from Tennessee, and from 1 to 4 from other States respectively; from Ireland 4, Nova Scotia 1.

Ponies Instead of Children.—The Marquis of Londonderry has purchased fifty or sixty Shetland ponies, to be employed in coal mines as substitutes for children, who have hitherto moved the coal trucks along the confined corridors under ground.

Reading and Writing in the United States.—In 22,000,000 of the United States population there are more persons who habitually read and write, than can be found in any 150,000,000 in Europe in one area, choose where you please.

Missionaries in China—There are now 75 Protestant missionaries in China, connected with fifteen different missionary societies; being an increase of 55 in nine years. Of these 48 are Americans, 25 English, 3 Germans, 2 Swiss, 1 Swedish, and 1 unconnected.

Disasters on the Lakes in 1851.—The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser gives its annual statement of marine disasters on the Lakes, together with the loss of life and property attendant upon them, from which it appears that during the year 1851, property to the value of $730,537 was lost, and 79 lives. Five steamers, three propellers, and thirty-seven sail vessels were totally lost. The disasters of the last four years have involved the loss of $2,087,146 worth of property, and 563 lives.

A New Isthmus Scheme.—A company is forming in New York to undertake in earnest the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic with the Pacific, by a new and more southern route. The company is styled the Atrato Interoceanic Canal Company. The route possesses advantages which Baron Humboldt long since proclaimed to the world, and which are in part recorded in Congressional documents.

Hereditary Defects.—In a late report of a Deaf and Dumb Institution in England, it is stated, that there were 72 couples of married mutes, who had 102 children—98 of these children hearing and speaking perfectly well, and only four born deaf and dumb, like their parents.

HANDSOME BEQUESTS TO THE BOARDS.

We are gratified to see that from time to time the Boards are remembered by members of our churches when making their wills. It is well that Christians should learn to use their substance for religious and charitable purposes while living, but of that which they must retain to live upon and do good with as long as they are here below, it is well, too, that they should cast a portion into the Lord's treasury, when making arrangements for the time when they shall need it no more. The late Michael Allen, Esq., of Pittsburgh, whose membership, we believe, was in the Rev. Mr. Paxton's, late Dr. Herron's church, has left to the Board of Foreign Missions $10,000—$5000 of which is to be used for the evangelization of the Jews; to the Board of Domestic Missions for general purposes, $5000, and for Church Extension $4000; and to the Boards of Education and Publication each $3000. The testator further states that he had reason to believe, that after paying all the specific legacies, there would still be a considerable residuum of his estate, which he also bequeaths to the four Boards.

FILLED WITH THE SPIRIT.

To be filled with the Spirit, Eph. v. 18, is to be under his influence and guidance—to be spiritual in our affections, our exercises, our conversation, and our deportment, as well as in our devotions; and we should remember that the mind of the Spirit is expressed in the Bible, and hence that his drawings, and leadings, and teachings are always in accordance with the Scriptures. Hence if we feel ever so strongly inclined to do any thing which is not agreeable to the Bible, we may know that it is not the Spirit which inclines us to do it. We cannot justify any irregularity by saying, "We were led to it by the Spirit of God; we must follow where the Spirit leads; we are filled with the Spirit, and therefore we could not help it." For "God is a God of order, and not of confusion;" and the Spirit is a Spirit of order, and not of confusion. The Spirit has spoken in the word, and that is our rule, and not impressions or impulses. "Let all things be done decently, and in order." See 1 Cor. xiv. 34—40.

It is plain, then, that being filled with the Spirit, so far from leading to disorder and confusion, will be promotive of order, of love, and of every good word and work; for it will lead to the strictest observance of the infallible rule and standard, the word of God, which is the very mind of the Spirit, and in accordance with which are all operations. Nothing which is unscriptural can be the fruit of the Spirit of God. The apostle specifies three things as resulting from the full indwelling of the Spirit:—

1. The first is a happy, joyful frame of mind, Eph. v. 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord. Observe, it is, speaking to yourselves, and making melody in your heart; there is no boisterous noise and confusion about it; no interfering with the devotions of others; but all is orderly and comely; and yet the heart is joyful, and there is melody within, as sweet as that which angels make around the eternal throne.

2. Another result of the indwelling Spirit is thanksgivings to God through Jesus Christ, Eph. v. 20. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. This is both a duty and a privilege. And as it is a duty and a privilege to give thanks to God at all times for all things, in the name of Jesus Christ, so we should render special thanksgiving on special occasions—special occasions demand special thanksgivings.

3. A third result of the indwelling Spirit is a faithful discharge of all relative duties, Eph. v. 21—33. Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God. Relative duties are to be done from a regard to God. There is a two-fold obligation to their performance, one resulting from the command of God and our relations to him, the other from the relations we sustain to our fellow-creatures. Hence, to neglect these duties is not only to sin against men, but against God. Hence we should submit ourselves to one another in the fear of God; perform our duties to each other as to the Lord; and this we shall do if filled with the Spirit. The neglect of relative duties is no evidence of superior piety; nor will any one who is led by the Spirit of God claim to be too holy to render obedience to the laws of the land, provided those laws require nothing which is not clearly opposed to the revealed will of God, as contained in the Scriptures; for civil government is a divine institution, and obedience to it is required by our relations to both God and man. "Submit yourself to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." 1 Pet. ii. 13. Discharge faithfully all relative duties.

REPENTING ACCORDING TO THE CATECHISM.

Not long since, said a pastor, an incident occurred in my congregation, which illustrates the value of teaching the Catechism to our children. A native of Scotland presented himself for admission to the church. He was examined as to his knowledge and piety. In regard to repentance, he repeated from the Catechism, as he had learned it in his native land—"Repentance unto life is a saving grace, whereby a sinner, out of a true sense of his sin, and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, doth, with grief and hatred of his sin, turn from it unto God, with full purpose of, and endeavour after, new obedience.' And if," said he, "I have ever repented, it has been according to this definition of the Catechism: 'out of a true sense of my sin, and apprehension of the mercy of God in Christ, I have, with grief and hatred of my sin, turned from it unto God, with full purpose of, and endeavour after, new obedience.'" In a word, he had repented according to the Catechism. Would that all professors of religion had repented thus! Happy for the church when all her children are taught the Catechism; and when they all repent according to the Catechism! To teach our children the Catechism is the true way to prevent their self-deception; the true way to make them intelligent, consistent Christians. For to repent according to the Catechism is to repent according to the Bible. 2 Cor. vii. 9—11.

W. J. M.

CONTENTMENT—ITS ADVANTAGES.

It fills with comfort.—He never wants comfort that lives contented. A contented spirit is ever a cheerful spirit. It is a heaven upon earth, as the opposite to it is a hell upon earth. It is the mind at rest in every condition. A contented man hath not only the comfort of what he hath, but also of what he hath not. What he wants in outward possession is made up to him in inward submission.

It fits for duty.—Lord! when the heart is repining and mutinying against God, how unfit is a man for duty! but when the spirit is still and quiet, all is done well. Passion unfits us for converse with men, much more for converse with God in holy duties. It is sad praying, when discontent prevails.

It always procures that very mercy which we desire, or some other that is better for us.—Discontent makes us to lose what we have; contentment gets us what we want. Fretting never removed a cross, nor procured a comfort: quiet submission doth both. The father continues to correct the froward child; but when once it yields and is quiet, he gives it anything.

It sweetens every bitter cup.—This ingredient takes off the bitterness of every state, as the wood cast by Moses did the bitterness of the waters. Nothing can come amiss to him that hath learned to be content.

FRAGMENTS.

There are certain great principles clearly laid down in Scripture, in relation to giving, and the use of property generally, which, by almost all men, are sceptically disregarded—as, for example, 1. That what we have, we hold as stewards that must give account. 2. That the way to increase is to distribute. Some are rich because liberal. 3. That what is given to the poor, is loaned to the Lord. 4. That God has designated a tenth himself: and Pagans give that proportion to their gods. 5. That what is done to Christians, is done to Christ.

The low and scurrilous writers against revelation carry their own condemnation with them. They are like an ill-looking fellow, who comes into a court of justice to give evidence, but carries the aspect, on the first glance, of a town-bully, ready to swear whatever shall be suggested to him.

When the ship that carried Jonah sailed from Joppa, there was only one good man aboard, and the storm was for his sake.

Religion should be not a rapture, but a habit.

The greatest honour some men could do the Christian name, would be to disclaim it.

NOTICE.

Treasuries—Special Reports—Thanks.

It will be recollected that by a resolution of the Board of Missions of April 28th, 1851, "the annual Reports of the Board shall be made up to the first day of April in each year." The design of this arrangement is to secure sufficient time before the meeting of the Assembly in May, for the reception of the Special Reports of the year's services, of all ministers, missionaries, and agents: and also of the reports of the state of the different treasuries connected with the Board; in order that the entire work of the year might be introduced into the Annual Report to the Assembly, and be made as ample and satisfactory in its character as possible.

The Special Reports for the current ecclesiastical year were mailed to all ministers and missionaries in February, and will reach their destination in sufficient time for the brethren to return them answered by the first of April: and we earnestly request the brethren to be prompt and punctual in doing so. When the Annual Report for the last year went to press, there were one hundred and forty-five ministers and missionaries who had not reported: a fraction over one-fourth of the whole number! The General Assembly, consequently, received no information from one-fourth its number of appointed and sustained missionaries in the great field of its Missions! We trust that there may be a universal return the present year of the Special Reports; and should they, in any cases, miscarry, that there may be no failure, we publish the whole form of the Report, to which the brethren may refer, in the present number of the Record. The Reports are made up to the first of March, and we would be glad to receive them by the first of April.

We would respectfully and kindly request the Treasurers to send their Reports complete up to the first of April, immediately after that date. The Treasuries to report are those of Louisville, Pittsburgh; of Lexington, East Hanover, West Hanover, Flint River, and Concord Presbyteries; and Synod of Ohio.

Churches desirous of having their contributions acknowledged in the Report of the year will forward them before the first of April.

We shall endeavour to furnish, for the information of the Assembly, a statement of the condition of the funds of the Board, up to the first of May, if it be possible to do so.

And now, brethren, we are much behind hand still, and hope that our receipts before the first of April may put us into deep water once more. Give this good cause your substantial aid.

We embrace this opportunity of returning the hearty thanks of the Board to various churches, and generous individuals, old and young, male and female, East, South, North, and West, who have come forward and granted us special aid in answer to our appeals. The Board feels encouraged, and has every reason to know that the work of Domestic Missions is dear to the heart of the Church, and as the work of God, he will sustain it. His people shall be made willing for this work in the day of his power. The aged have sent their contributions. Young ladies have turned collectors; one sends "a widow's mite," another signs "A Young Friend," and another touches the heart, and signs, "a debtor to grace!"

The following is from a minister in the South: "Enclosed, I send you $40 for the Board of Missions. I did not expect to send any thing to your Board at this time, being occupied with Foreign Missions; but the public statement of the embarrassment of your Board, determined me at once to forward now what I could. Do, dear Brother, trust longer— pray longer, and make another longer and louder appeal to the people of God in our churches, before you withdraw the commission of one worthy brother, or refuse an application from a promising field. I do trust that the Lord in mercy will forbid that the Board shall be trammelled in its labour, or contracted in the sphere of its operations, or of its usefulness."

FORM OF SPECIAL REPORT.

Office of the Board of Missions.
No. 265 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, February, 1852.

Rev. and Dear Brother:—The period is again approaching when we shall be called upon to render to the General Assembly a report of the operations of the Board of Missions throughout the year, and as the results of the labours of our brethren in the Missionary field must, necessarily, occupy a prominent place in that report, we forward to you the annexed form of a Special Report which contains the various items on which the General Assembly desires information. Will you be so good therefore, as not only to give us some information on each item introduced, but also make that information as full and as accurate as may be in your power. We would ask it as a special favour, that you pay particular regard to statistical information, and should you be in possession of any interesting facts connected with your missionary work, that you would insert them under the head of "General Remarks." Your report will, of course, include the amount of labour performed under the appointment of the Board, from the first of April, 1851, or if appointed since that time, from the date of your commission.

As it will require some time to reduce into one, the numerous reports furnished by our Missionaries, we earnestly request you, after filling up the blanks and completing your annexed Special Report up to the first of March 1852, or to the end of your commission if it should close sooner, to return it immediately after date, in an envelope to the Secretary of the Board at Philadelphia. Your punctuality in this matter will greatly oblige us.

Grace, Mercy and Peace be multiplied unto you in our LORD.

Sincerely and affectionately yours, in him,
C. C. JONES,
Corresponding Secretary.

☞ You will please not introduce into your Special Report any other business than that which properly belongs to it. Otherwise in the press of engagements in the office, it may be overlooked. And should your quarter's salary be due at the time that you are forwarding your Special Report, do not expect payment on that report; but make a separate report for the quarter, and you will not be omitted in the regular payments of the office.

GENERAL REMARKS.

RELATIVE POSITION OF THE ROMAN CATHOLICS AND PROTESTANTS, IN THE UNITED STATES IN 1851.

There are in the United States 6 archbishops, 26 bishops, 1385 priests; 1411 churches, and 681 other stations; distributed among 34 dioceses and 2 apostolic vicariates; subtracting deaths, it appears that during the year there was an accession of 1 archbishop, 1 bishop, and 114 priests. The Catholic population of the United States, obtained from official and consequently the most reliable sources, (with the exception of the dioceses of St. Louis, Boston, Galveston, St. Paul's, and Indian Territory, which are estimated, there being no official returns from these,) is set down in round numbers at 1,980,000.

Of the entire body of the clergy, amounting to 1417, 1242 are returned as in the ministry: and 179 as in other employment (a discrepancy of 4 from the returns of the whole number above.) That is to say, within a fraction of one-eighth of the clergy are in other employment than the ministry; occupying we suppose the posts of Professors, Teachers, &c. If we take the 1242 in the ministry as a supply for the 1,980,000 Catholics, then we have a priest to every 1594 persons. And seating the people in the 1411 churches and 681 stations—2092—we have 1 church for every 946 persons. The number of clerical students is 421.

"The Association for the Propagation of the Faith" (whose affairs are administered by two committees, one in Paris and the other in Lyons), in 1850 received from the United States $765, and expended in missions in the United States $89,703, exceeding by nearly $500 what was expended in all the Missions in Europe: the missions in Europe amounting to $89,277. By this large expenditure, it will appear in what estimation the Association holds these United States! The number of Catholic Periodicals is 11 weekly, (2 of which are in German and 1 in French.) 1 Quarterly, and 2 annual, total 14.

We may indulge in a few comparisons without offence, we hope, to any one.

The Old-School Presbyterian Church in the United States, has 2027 ministers, 2675 churches, 210,000 communicants (the returns being imperfect, say 220,000,) and a total of population attending on our ministry and connected with our congregations of 950,000 or 1,000,000 persons. It will be recollected that all persons are reckoned Roman Catholics who have been baptized, and profess that faith, and are counted with their congregations. They do not in their returns make the distinction, so just and common with Protestant churches, between "communicants" i. e. those who give credible evidence of a change of heart—really spiritual persons, and the mere members of the congregation. Hence in estimating Protestant denominations this fact should not be overlooked, and in comparing them with the Roman Catholics, we must take the total of persons attending on our ministry, and connected with our congregations. It is losing sight of this fact, that makes the disparity between Protestant denominations in the United States and the Roman Catholics appear so greatly in favour of the latter, while the disparity should be the very contrary, against them.

We will throw off 253 or one-eighth of our ministers as in other employments, (Professors, Teachers, Editors, &c.,) and we have left 1774, which will give us 1 minister to every 563 persons. And seating our 1,000,000 people in our 2300 churches, throwing off 375 organized churches, not having their own or adequate houses of worship—a large deduction! we have 1 church building for every 434 persons.

In a Protestant denomination which considers the preaching of the gospel the great end of the ministry, and ample sittings for the hearers of indispensable necessity, it is not to be wondered at that our supplies in these respects are so far ahead of the Roman Catholics. Our number of clerical students (candidates 381, licentiates 237,) is 618. The number of Presbyterian (Old-school) periodicals is 9 weekly; 1 semi-monthly; 4 monthly, and 2 quarterly:—total 16.

Thus we have 610 more ministers; 208 more houses of public worship (and if we make no deductions then 583); 197 more clerical students; and 2 more periodicals. The comparison of Literary and Theological Institutions, and Ecclesiastical Academies and High Schools for youth of both sexes, we believe, would be equally in our favour.

There are two facts worthy of special notice. First: the mass of the strict Roman Catholics in the United States are foreigners, and their immediate descendants. When they have been in our land of civil and religious liberty, of Sabbaths, and Bibles, of education and of newspapers and books, for two or three generations, they begin to fall off from "mother church," and become Protestants. The Protestants gain far greater numbers from the ranks of the Roman Catholics than they do from the Protestants.

Second: the mass of the Roman Catholic priesthood in the United States is made up of foreigners! not more than one-seventh are native born Americans, the other six-sevenths are Frenchmen, Belgians, Germans, Spaniards, Portuguese, Italians, Swiss, Poles, Canadians, and Irishmen. And with the one-seventh native born Americans it is probable that not one in one hundred is descended from Protestant parents.

We have no means of ascertaining how much money is contributed by the Roman Catholic Church in the United States for the propagation of their faith in the United States. The United States is considered missionary ground, and receives from the Propaganda, but contributes nothing, or next to nothing. If we are rightly informed, the Roman Catholics in the United States depend for the support of their missions upon money donated by the Propaganda. We have seen that in 1850, $89,703 were sent over to them. Of the regular contributions taken up in their churches, one-third goes to the education of ministers, one-third to the support of the priesthood, and one-third to the repairs of the church, if they need it. The support of the poor, and all extra calls, are met by voluntary contributions, taken up in the churches or by personal application; but as far as we have any information, there are no general and regular systematic contributions in their churches for missionary purposes in our country.

We would be willing to enter into a comparison of our contributions also, had we the means of doing so. But we have not. The amount contributed for congregational purposes in 1851, was $1,056,023, and for other religious objects, (Home and Foreign Missions, education of young men for the gospel ministry and publication of books &c.) $406,692—making a total $1,462,715. A portion of the funds of our Foreign Board—about one-fifth or one-sixth—is furnished by our Government for the christianization of the American Indians.

It will be seen that our returns are imperfect and fall short of the true amount. The comparison now instituted is with but a single denomination of Protestants, the Old-school Presbyterians. Suppose now we connect once more our brethren of the New-school Presbyterian Church with us, and how will our account stand with the Roman Catholics?

Our New-school brethren have 1490 ministers, 1579 churches, 140,076 members, and between 500,000 and 600,000 members of their congregations; and 204 clerical candidates.

Now for the result. The Roman Catholics report 1,980,000 Roman Catholic population. The Old-school and New-school Presbyterian churches have a Presbyterian population connected with them, of 1,600,000, giving the Catholics the advantage of us of 380,000.

But here the scale turns:—we have 2,145 more ministers; 401 more clerical candidates, and 2,162 more churches.

The true position and relative influence of the Roman Catholic Church can be easily apprehended from this comparison. Bring in all the other branches of the great Presbyterian family—the Reformed Dutch, the Associate Reformed, the German Lutheran, the Cumberland, &c.—bring in the Baptist, the Methodist, the Episcopal churches, all the Protestants, and what an array of Protestant population, of ministers, clerical candidates, churches, periodicals, literary and theological institutions, &c. Connect the immense multitude, who although committed, some to no form of faith, and others to an erroneous faith, yet all "antagonistical" to the Roman Catholic Church, as such and how much stronger is the array. It is discovered at a glance. Throw off the coloured population altogether and we have some 20,000,000 of inhabitants; deduct 1,980,000 and the balance of 18,020,000 may be set down as Protestants. We may throw off a considerable number still for deists, unbelievers and indifferentists, and yet we are a Protestant Nation OVERWHELMINGLY.

The Roman Catholics have sense enough to know what country they should emigrate to. If they must leave Europe, why do they not go to Brazil, to Chili, to Peru, to South America somewhere, or to Mexico? No! these Roman Catholic settlements in this western hemisphere do not suit them! They must emigrate to the United States. Protestantism has made our land what it is, and it now offers to the poor, ignorant, miserable, and oppressed of mankind the happiest home in the world.

Let the friends of Zion then rejoice, and hope in the Lord. These Roman Catholics are sent to this country we trust for their own and our good; and that in view of their being made by the Spirit and Word of God his true children by faith in Jesus Christ; and so brought to renounce the errors and idolatries and soul-destroying dogmas of their church. We must therefore look upon them as a part of the great field open to the labours of all who love the souls of men and the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth. And if we do our duty in reliance upon God, we shall be a blessing to our Roman Catholic population and they in the end no ruin to us. Fear not, we are of God, and must by his blessing prevail.

REVIEW OF THE PAST MONTH.

The number of letters received at the office has been large, and the information conveyed in them gives us ground of sorrow as well as joy in respect to the spiritual state of our Zion. The reports of some of the brethren are exceedingly depressed, while the reports of others breathe a longing after the presence and power of God's Spirit, and exhibit renewed efforts to advance the Redeemer's kingdom, strong in faith and hope—and others still record the tender and refreshing mercies of the Lord. It is one comforting evidence of returning life to our Churches that very many are becoming alarmed at their lukewarmness and deadness, at the long dearth of divine influences, and are seeking to return unto the Lord. What is this, but the returning of our covenant-keeping God to His people? We would lay before our readers some items of information to cheer their hearts and awaken their gratitude and draw them to the Mercy-seat; and by God's blessing, quicken them with new zeal and love, had we the room; but our space in the Record is out.

EFFORTS OF MAUMEE PRESBYTERY, OHIO, FOR A REVIVAL OF RELIGION.

We commend the plan of visitation adopted, and the great end which the brethren proposed to themselves and the churches, to be secured by it, to the consideration of other Presbyteries.

"Our little Presbytery, feeling the great need of a higher state of piety among our people, undertook the work of visiting all the members of all our churches—sending two ministers to spend a week in each and every church, visiting from house to house in a pastoral way, preaching every evening, and closing this visitation in each church with a communion season. So far as we have carried out our plan, we are encouraged to hope that it has not been altogether in vain. In addition to visiting and conversing with all, we have preaching every evening through the week and on Saturday and Sabbath. Some of these meetings have been most solemn and in some respects interesting. Christians have been excited to more earnest prayer; to a deeper sense of their own need of the grace of Christ, and many appear to feel as one pious mother expressed herself to me, 'I have never before been made to feel so deeply my own nothingness; I know that the Lord will bless these means which you employ.' Some also have appeared to be deeply impressed with a sense of sin, and to feel their need of an interest in Christ. O! that we could all be more consecrated to the work of our blessed Redeemer. Pray for us, that the Lord would graciously interpose for our help and cause his people to rejoice."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. C. VAN RENSSELAER, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of money may be made to JOSEPH B. MITCHELL, Esq., Treasurer, Mechanics Bank, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

CANDIDATES FOR THE MINISTRY.

The impression extensively prevails that the number of candidates in the Presbyterian Church is not increasing. This impression is unquestionably correct.

The following table shows the number of new students in the different Theological Seminaries in the Presbyterian Church for the last ten years.

Date.	New Students Annually.	Do. for 5 years.
1842	83
1843	92
1844	108
1845	101
1846	120	504
1847	103
1848	95
1849	115
1850	109
1851	88	510

These statistics show that, whilst the number of our theological students has varied somewhat from year to year, the number at the end of the ten years is very much the same as at the beginning. The total number for the first five years is 504, whilst for the second five it is only 510.

The following table shows the number of candidates under the care of the Board of Education for the last five years.

	Whole number in all stages of education.	New in all stages of education.
1847	403	96
1848	377	60
1849	373	72

The same result of no increase of candidates appears; and the Board apprehend this year a still farther diminution; grounded on the fact that, thus far, the number of new students is considerably less than last year, there being only 50 new candidates against 70 during the corresponding period of the year.

These statistics establish the fact that the number of our theological students has been stationary for five years and upwards. It does not follow that the number of our ministers is stationary; there is, on the contrary, a steady increase, as is well known; the number of our ordinations being yet considerably more than the deaths. But the rate of increase cannot advance, whilst the number of students remains the same, but must, after a time, diminish on account of the natural increase of the deaths.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

As a matter of some interest, we subjoin the statistics of the Congregational churches on the same subject. The table, though formed on a somewhat different basis, indicates the same thing, or rather shows a still worse condition. The numbers opposite each year are the graduates in the New England Theological Seminaries at Andover, Bangor, and New Haven.

Date.	Graduating Students annually.	Do. for 5 years.
1843	82
1844	54
1845	71
1846	70	345
1847	64
1848	57
1849	57
1850	62
1851	49	289

It thus appears that in the Congregational churches there has been a decrease of 56 during the last five years, as compared with the previous five; and that the last of the ten years, as compared with the first of the series, shows a falling off of no less than 19.

We have no means of ascertaining the condition of things in the New School Presbyterian Church, as no separate statistics have been published within our knowledge: but we observe a statement in the New York Observer as follows:—"By recent statistics it has been ascertained that in all the Theological Seminaries attached to the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations in our land, there were 70 students less in 1850 than in 1840." Our impression is, that the number of their students has diminished of late years in the New-school branch.

We publish these facts, as indicated in the above tables, in the hope that they will awaken inquiry, urge to prayer, and stimulate the use of those means which properly belong to this department of Christian exertion.

A SOLEMN AND A FUNDAMENTAL QUESTION.

One of our ministerial brethren proposes the following important question.

"Let me ask you a question. Do you think a young man, twenty-one years of age, industrious, prudent, always strictly moral, and for some time a humble Christian, of average talents and having a good English education—in short, just such a person (leaving age out of view) as is likely to make a hard-working, useful country minister—do you think such a one too old to begin a course of study preparatory to preaching the gospel?"

The chief difficulty here is age, which cannot be left out of view in propounding the question. If the individual, in the judgment of his pastor, is likely—all things, including age, considered—to make a "hard-working, useful, country minister," then such a person may be encouraged to go forward in his studies. Age, however, is a very important point; and it is here precisely where the great danger exists in the present efforts of the Church to educate young men for the ministry. There are undoubtedly some of our most useful ministers who have commenced their classical studies late in life; but these are the exceptions to the general rule. The general rule unquestionably requires the early discipline of the faculties and their harmonious and thorough development in the Academy and College, in the usual course, and at the usual time. When a young man postpones his education until he becomes of age, he diminishes the prospects of his adequate preparation for the ministry, and more especially, if he has only "average talents." Under such circumstances, he ought to have very clear evidences that God has called him to abandon his present occupation.

We shall have more to say upon this interesting point hereafter. In the meantime we publish the following extract from an article in "Home, the School and the Church," having a general bearing upon the question.

There is a class of cases of somewhat frequent occurrence, on which we proposed to make a few remarks. We mean those in which men have this question pressed upon their minds late in life; after the judgment is matured, habits are formed and arrangements of business have been made. These are often more difficult to decide than any others. But some of them are the most easy; and we have often wondered at the difficulties which press upon minds cultivated and disciplined by education, study, and professional engagements. We now allude to such as have received an early education with other views, and have been employed in the professions of law or medicine, or in the instruction of youth. Sometimes men of this description are called to engage in the ministry, and yet have great difficulty in deciding the practical question. Perhaps it is sufficient to refer their case to another class; and let them try their qualifications, the character of their feelings and desires, and their circumstances, according to the suggestions which we have already made.

But there are some, who have had less advantages in early life, whose minds are tried on this subject. From the nature and circumstances of their case, there must be more difficulty in solving the question. Perhaps there would be no difficulty in deciding on such cases, if there were not great want of ministers in actual service. Then, it is fair to conclude, the evidence of the call would be so extraordinary and distinct, that there would be no room for doubt. This conclusion is in accordance with the common procedure of God's government, in which he adapts his directions to the exigency of the times. We could not exclude all such from the sacred office, nor would we encourage them on slight grounds to seek it.

There are now situations in the Church, which are destitute of pastors, and are likely to remain destitute, in which a man of sound discretion, vigorous enterprise, ardent piety, and moderate acquirements in literature and science, might be very useful in the ministry. It is commonly easy to ascertain the character of a man's judgment, common sense, piety, and energy, at the age now supposed. But if there should be a doubt of the character after the maturity of twenty-five or thirty years, we should consider it an excluding fact. Of all these qualifications, it should be said in such a case, they must be much above mediocrity. No man should consider himself called away from the common occupations of life, at so late a period, whether from agricultural, mechanical, or mercantile pursuits, or from the instruction of youth, unless he is acknowledged to possess some qualifications of high order, which give him influence in society, and the confidence of the Church. There is one difficulty, however, which such men should confidently examine. It is the breaking up of established habits, and engaging in a new employment, amidst entirely new associations. This is never easily done. Its practicability at every age depends on the mental discipline and facility of acquiring knowledge. If, at the age now contemplated, a man's mind be not disciplined to accurate thought, and ready expression, he will find it next to impossible for him to be either comfortable or useful in the ministry. With a prospect so extremely doubtful, no one should consider himself called to undertake the duties of the sacred office.

It is sometimes said that men of cultivated minds and taste cannot live and be useful among rough, uncultivated, and poor people; we must, therefore, have some men of moderate acquirements, who will be satisfied with coarse fare, uncouth manners, and the privations incident to such places. But the force of this argument, in its principal intention, we deny: it is used as an apology for introducing ignorance into the pulpit. It is, indeed, true, that habits formed in cultivated society, and in the acquisition of a thorough education, may lead a man to desire a place congenial to his taste, especially as such places afford a more dense population, and a larger sphere of usefulness: but it is not true, that he cannot live and labour wherever his Master calls him to go. If his heart be thoroughly imbued with the love of Christ, and a desire to be instrumental in saving precious souls, he will be ready to sacrifice any worldly pleasure, and to practise any self-denial involved in a plain course of duty. The truth is, such comparisons are out of place, when used to justify the introduction of unqualified men to the ministry. There can be no apology for introducing ignorance and boorish habits into the sacred office. Piety and poverty cannot consecrate such to be instructors and examples in the Church of God.

Still we would not infer that no man, without a thorough classical education, or the time and means of attaining it, is ever called to the gospel ministry. Men possessing a high order of native talent, sound discriminating judgment, ardent piety, and persevering industry, may be very useful in this office, with a limited stock of learning. Some of our most useful men, in active pastoral duties, are of this description. And more of them might be employed to great advantage in the Church. But in such cases, the evidences of the call should be clear and decisive, leaving no doubt in the mind of the individual himself; and, we think, in this case, the public estimation of his character should be well considered. It is a good rule for such a man to adopt, that unless the path of duty is made very plain before him, he should remain in the employment where Providence has placed him. When once a man has arranged his plan, entered upon his course of business, formed and adjusted his habits to his employment for several years, he should have very substantial reasons for leaving a lawful employment, and undertaking so entire a change. Examples of most disastrous character are not wanting in the ministry, where the experiment has been made, with complete failure.

ENCOURAGEMENTS AND DISCOURAGEMENTS IN THE MINISTRY.

Every profession has its trials—its peculiar trials—and also its rewards. No situation in life is exempt from the common conditions of encouragement and discouragement. The ministry has many things to cheer, and many to depress the soul. But whoever is called of God to engage in this sacred service, will be supported under all its trials, and, what is more, under all its joys.

We have been much interested in reading a modest little volume, by one of our own ministers, entitled "An Essay on the Encouragements and Discouragements of the Christian Ministry," by John M. Lowrie, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Lancaster, Ohio." It owes its origin to an appointment made by the Columbus Ministerial Association—a society of ministers, chiefly members of the Presbytery of Columbus, organized for mutual spiritual and literary advantage.

In noticing some of the discouragements felt by a minister of the gospel, the following are mentioned 1. That class of discouragements which arise from the work itself in which he is engaged. 2. The discouragements connected with his fellow-labourers in the same cause. 3. Those which arise from personal considerations.

In enumerating the encouragements, the writer refers, 1. To those granted by our loving Lord to his ministers, while engaged in present efforts to serve him; and, 2. The encouragements which refer to the future.

The various subjects are discussed in a discreet, evangelical, and edifying manner. We subjoin two extracts.

There is a luxury in the work of the ministry—a luxury of thought, and motive, and feeling, which makes every pastor love his office. What, though we mourn over our own coldness and remissness, and fear for our own conversion! It is not always so. We have many rejoicings in the love of Christ; many comforts in his service; many rich feasts upon his word; many earnests of his Spirit, in grace to restrain, to support, to teach, to guide; and, in some seasons, perhaps if they abounded more, we would wish to make our heaven upon earth; we have communion with the Father of our spirits, in which one hour of holy devotion more than makes amends for days and months of trial and discouragement. Sometimes we think if we could take such views of truth, such ideas of Christ, such hopes of glory, as we gain in the closet, and find words suited to express them to our people, they must surely feel like us, sweetly won to the service of our Jesus. Even the discouragement we feel through ill-success is lightened when we know that God's purposes are not thwarted, and that we are a sweet savour to him, even in them that perish. * * *

It has frequently been said by Christian ministers, and it is perhaps the feeling at some time or other, of almost every one, that if, before entering upon the office, they had known the trials, and difficulties, and discouragements of the ministry, no inducements could have led them to become ministers. But, perhaps every preacher of the gospel may as truly say, that before actual experience, he had no just conception of the supports, and comforts, and satisfaction which our Lord grants to his ministers in the midst of trials. And there is one other thought belonging to this subject, which we feel safe in affirming, even before experience. There is no risk in saying that when the faithful, laborious minister of God is permitted to reach heaven, there to see his blessed Lord; there to taste the joys at God's right hand; there to shine as a star in the firmament, as having turned many to righteousness; and thence to look back over the trials and privations of the wilderness journey he trod to reach that heavenly Canaan, he will have no regrets that he was a minister of the gospel on earth, and knew the trials and difficulties of ministerial life. Perhaps it is not too much to say, that ten-fold our present sorrows and disheartening trials would be easy to bear, if we kept heaven more in view, and laboured more to reach that blessed abode, and to go there accompanied by larger fruits of our ministry.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS, ACADEMIES, AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

WAVELAND SCHOOL, ILLINOIS.

The Rev. T. W. Hynes presents the following report of a parochial school of the Waveland church, located about six miles from Hillsboro, Montgomery county, Illinois.

In the letter accompanying the report, Mr. Hynes states that "seven of those whose names are herewith reported as the pupils of the Waveland school, together with several others of their young associates and neighbours, united themselves with the people of God by a public profession of their faith in Christ. Thus God set his seal to that commandment with promise, contained in Proverbs xxii. 6." He also states, "I believe the people would not be satisfied now, with any other than a Christian school."

REPORT.

TO THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The undersigned is requested, by the Session and Trustees of the Waveland Presbyterian Church, to whom is committed the control of the Waveland Parochial School, to submit to you their report for the quarter.

Their school has continued through this quarter with evidences of the Divine favour, that have been gratifying and encouraging to us. The regular exercises of the school have progressed without interruption.

The regular attendance, diligence in study, and progress of the pupils, have been altogether commendable.

The school remained through the quarter under the instruction and direction of Miss Elvira M. Powers.

The religious interest and Christian instruction in the school have continued, not merely without abatement as compared with former terms, but with manifest increase. As heretofore the school has been opened and closed with the reading of the Scriptures, singing and prayer. The Shorter Catechism has been regularly recited, on Friday afternoons, by the whole school as one class, and at other times during the week, in smaller classes. It will be seen by the accompanying statistical table, that twenty-four of the twenty-nine scholars attending the school this quarter, have recited all the Catechism. This number includes every scholar of whom, from age or advancement, it could have been expected. During three quarters of the school (this being the third quarter), twenty-nine pupils have recited the whole Catechism.

The Scriptures read in school this quarter, have been from Acts xii. to Colossians iii.

Scriptures committed to memory are, Matt. vii. 1—23; Mark iv. 1—9; and John i. 1—17; making forty nine verses.

For a general view of the state and progress of the school, we refer you to the accompanying statistical report which will be found to contain the number, names, daily attendance, studies, and ages of the pupils. All which is respectfully submitted.

By order of the session and Trustees of Waveland church. THOMAS W. HYNES, Moderator.

Montgomery county, Ill., September, 1851.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

1. In the second column the number of days attendance is approximately given. Those who were absent from school but a day or two, are marked "60"—and those who attended a day or two more or less than 30 days are marked "30"—&c.

Sixty school days make one quarter.

2. In the column headed "Number of questions committed to memory in the Catechism," the number "107" denotes that the pupil has committed to memory the whole Catechism; the figures "80" that the pupil has committed eighty of the answers. Three of those marked 107, had recited all the Catechism, but had not reviewed it all, and are therefore not considered as having it thoroughly committed to memory.

Those marked 4, 7, 10, 12, &c., are, as will be seen from last column, quite young, and had lately commenced reading; several of them began to read during this quarter. They were still encouraged to commit some of the Catechism, though it should be but a question or two.

We trust that this school will continue to bear much fruit. Its history constitutes a strong plea for the union of religion and learning.

A NEW GOVERNMENT SCHEME.

This is the age of progress and inventions. The following is the latest idea that has been proposed on the subject of governmental education.

At a recent Agricultural Convention held at Granville, Putnam county, Ill., Prof. Turner, of Jacksonville, proposed an educational enterprise on a large plan, which was adopted by the Convention with the view of bringing the same before the next session of the legislature of that State. Prof. Turner alleges that the system of education in this country is adapted only to a professional class of men, and that it overlooks the very much larger industrial class. His plan proposes the establishment of a great Central National University, with a Minor University in each State and a subordinate college or school for each county, and a still more subordinate school in each township.

When the people learn to depend upon the Government for every thing in the matter of education, the voluntary principle will become dishonoured, and the separation of religion and general instruction well established.

OAKLAND COLLEGE, MISSISSIPPI.

This important institution, more endeared than ever to its friends by the violent death of its honoured President, has been placed under the superintendence of the Rev. Robert L. Stanton—a gentleman of eminent talents. The ceremonies of his inauguration were mingled with appropriate testimonials of regard to his predecessor. The Rev. Joseph B. Stratton, of Natchez, was appointed to preach a discourse commemorating the character and services of the late Dr. Chamberlain. Solemnly, affectionately and ably did he perform his task. We have room only for a brief extract.

In the spring of 1829, he was led to reflect upon the importance and practicability of establishing a College, which should be under the care and supervision of the Presbyterian Church. The primary motive that directed him to the framing of this project, was the hope, that could the opportunity of obtaining an adequate education be furnished upon their own soil, many pious youth in the South-West would be induced to avail themselves of it, and thus a native ministry be provided for this destitute and neglected field. At that time, no College commencement had ever been held, nor had a single scholar ever been graduated South-West of Tennessee; nor had a single educated native of Mississippi ever entered the ministry. Dr. Chamberlain submitted his plan to the consideration of the Presbytery of Mississippi, first, at a meeting held in the town of Baton Rouge, La., in April, 1829. It was at once approved of, and having been subsequently matured, was adopted by the Presbytery, in April, 1830, when a Board of Trustees was appointed, and the originator of the plan invited to assume the Presidency of the projected College.

He entered upon the work assigned him, with an energy and hopefulness which gave confidence, at once, to all enlisted with him, and seemed to indicate, what the event has proved, that, thenceforth, his life was to have no interest apart from the success of the institution, which for Christ's and His Church's sake, he had undertaken to build up.

The Rev. Dr. Zebulon Butler delivered the charge to the new President. The charge was brief but full, almost every sentence containing weighty thought. The following is a part, which shows the spirit of the founders of the College, and magnifies the true relations of a Christian president.

In you our confidence is fully reposed; and of failure, we are not even sensible of an embryo fear. Yet, my brother, bear with me, while, as a co-Presbyter and fellow-labourer in the gospel of Christ, I exhort you to engage in your appropriate work in this Seminary, with the same sense of responsibility to God, and the Great Head of the Church, as if you had this day been installed as pastor, and not President. Cherish and exhibit, I beseech you, the same sincere, pure, and self-denying zeal, as if the sphere of your labours were Ceylon, or Siam, or Africa. Let the Presidents in other Colleges strive for literary distinction, and be held to duty by the charm of wealth, or the world's coveted otium cum dignitate; be it ever your aim, to please your Master, and glorify his name. In comparison with some other institutions, you are not surrounded with equally imposing and massive edifices—the structures of wealth or regal munificence; you have not, as some others, access to a library of numberless worm-eaten volumes; there is not a costly apparatus, or well furnished museums and cabinets, to compare with some ancient universities;—but the ground on which you tread is consecrated; you are on foundations laid with tears and prayers; and on this hill "the Lord hath commanded his blessing, even life for evermore."

This College is the child of Religion; and over its interest the Omnipotent Redeemer will ever keep a sleepless watch. To its members, you must exhibit, in doctrine, an unalloyed evangelism, without the mingling of sectarianism; and, in practice, all the loveliness of Christian character, undimmed by worldliness, selfishness, intolerance, or ostentation.

The Rev. R. L. Stanton, President of Oakland College then delivered an able and interesting Inaugural address on Collegiate education. The principal topics were, 1. That collegiate education is not an experiment of doubtful utility. 2. It tends to develope the whole mental and moral man. 3. It is one of the impelling forces of modern civilization. 4. It should be provided in every section of our country—and its especial friends should be none less than the people at large. Under the 2d head Mr. Stanton thus expresses himself in reference to mental education:

The first object, we repeat, in a sound education should and must be, to discipline the mind. And for this, we affirm, without fear of successful contradiction, the collegiate course to be the best system yet devised. The wisdom of ages has, in vain, sought for any thing better, or indeed, equal, for developing the reasoning faculties, and subduing them to perfect control. In the study of the languages and the mathematics, for example, the powers of attention, comparison, abstraction, association, analysis, and the methods of reasoning by induction and analogy, are brought into constant requisition; and, indeed, it is impossible for these studies to be pursued thoroughly, and to any great length, without subjecting all one's mental faculties to his complete control. If it be said that the study of the Natural sciences, history and philosophy, will accomplish the same result, we reply, that most parts of them are not of a nature to do so—that those which are, require this previous discipline, of which we are speaking, in order that they may be studied with profit—and, that some of the natural sciences absolutely demand a knowledge of the principles of the higher mathematics, in order that they may be studied at all. These points, we think, must be admitted. If it be said, that logic, metaphysics, intellectual philosophy, will serve to discipline the mind, we reply as before—that the faculties must be under good control before these studies can be pursued. In the languages and the mathematics, the student has the book and the blackboard to enable the eye to help the mind; and these aids are essential in early discipline. But in metaphysics, all is pure abstraction. The mind, therefore, must be previously well trained, or all will be mist and fog—and even then, there will be quite enough to encounter.

The order of nature is, that which is first necessary, should be attended to first. In a system of education, the first thing necessary is, to subdue and fit for use the untutored faculties. For this, the experience of the world has settled down upon the study of the languages and the mathematics, as of primary necessity; and a thorough examination of the subject shows that this judgment is the result of well applied common sense. Some few persons have, from time to time, attempted radical changes in the collegiate system, by diminishing the time spent upon the classics, or ejecting them altogether; but they have never been able to commend their plans, extensively, to the confidence of the public.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, February 12, 1852.

Indian Missions.—We learn by letters from the Otoe and Omahaw Mission of January 16th, and from the Choctaw Mission to January 9th, that the Mission families had recovered from the sickness reported in our last issue. Mr. McKinney, after mentioning two attacks made on the Omahas during their recent hunt, by the Puncas and Sioux, in which several lives were lost, says, "Both tribes, Otoes and Omahas, are very poor, having made very poor hunts. Their need of the gospel is hourly more apparent. Evidently, nothing else will save them from destruction. My impressions of their misery are daily deepening: and I feel constantly pressed in spirit to preach more fully to them the unsearchable riches of Christ. O! for the outpouring of the Spirit, that their blind eyes might be opened, and their hearts melted!"—Letters from the Creek Mission to the 5th of January, mention the admission of a coloured man and his wife to the communion of the church. Five of the boys in the school applied for admission, but were kept on longer trial. Others, both boys and girls, were under serious impressions.

The Rev. Andrew M. Watson and wife, and Messrs. John M. Carter and Leander W. Davis, have been appointed to the Chickasaw Mission, and are now on their way to the station at Wah-pa-nucka. See a notice of their appointment in another column. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have been the only persons yet engaged in this interesting and important Mission, and through Mr. Allen's unwearied efforts, carried on with much self-denial, the buildings are now nearly completed for the proposed school. The Chickasaws themselves have taken a lively and generous interest in the school; and we trust that this Mission will prove a great blessing to them. We commend these Indians and their missionaries to the prayers of the churches.

Mission to the Jews.—The Rev. Matthew R. Miller has resigned his appointment in this Mission. In whatever part of the vineyard he may hereafter labour, he will have the best wishes of the Committee and of his late associates, for his success in the ministry.

Africa: Liberia Mission.—A letter from the Rev. D. A. Wilson, of December 12th, mentions the recovery of Mrs. Wilson from an attack of the acclimating fever. He was expecting to open the school in January, having, as advised by the Committee, delayed engaging in active labours, until he should feel himself somewhat accustomed to the climate.

India Missions.—Letters have been received from Lodiana, November 28th; Agra, December 10th; Futtehgurh, December 8th: Allahabad, December 3d; the Rev. J. F. Ullman, November 22d; and the Rev. J. E. Freeman, December 8th. Messrs. Ullman and Freeman and their wives had safely arrived at Calcutta, and would make the journey to their stations by budgerows, or native vessels, on the Ganges. They were enjoying excellent health. Mr. Warren had reached Agra, and entered upon the duties of that station. Mr. Scott had set out on his journey, crossing over to Bombay, instead of taking the usual route by Calcutta. The brethren at the different stations were prosecuting their various labours, but we do not note any thing of special interest.

Siam Mission.—A letter of the Rev. S. Mattoon, of October 25th, mentions the admission of a Chinese as a member of the Church, on the first Sabbath in September. He has learned the Siamese language. Mr. Mattoon, being now the oldest missionary at Bangkok who is acquainted with the Greek and Hebrew languages, was spending part of the time in the work of revision and translation. The Gospel of Mark had been completed.—The ladies of the different missions were still teaching English at the palace, "where by conversation and books they could sow some seeds of Christian truth."—There is a call for more missionaries. Mr. Mattoon says, "We need more labourers here, and other fields are opening around us. If we had the men, we should urge the attempt to establish one or two new stations. I think we could get permission from the authorities here to do so, but we are too weak to attempt it at present."—The promise of a most eligible site for buildings has been made; and the brethren hoped to put up their houses during the dry season, which was then beginning

China Missions.—Our letters are dated at Canton, November 27th; Shanghai, November 19th; and Ningpo, November 5th. We notice the marriage of the Rev. John B. French to Mary L. H., daughter of the Rev. Dr. Ball of the American Board of Missions at Canton, and sister of Mrs. Happer.—At Ningpo, Ajing, one of the most advanced scholars, was admitted to the church by baptism, on the first Sabbath in October. Her marriage, soon afterwards, to a young man who is not a Christian, in fulfilment of an early betrothal, was an event causing no little solicitude to her Christian friends. The performance or omission of the usual heathen ceremonies was a marked test of the decision with which she would maintain her new profession. The result was every way happy.—Three of the oldest boys in the school, and the oldest pupil in the girls' school, have applied for admission to the church. Two or three others seem interested in the subject of religion. The missionaries of the Board and of the Church Missionary Society have united in the work of preparing a colloquial translation of the Scriptures in the Ningpo dialect—a work of much interest, but of some difficulty.

MISSIONARY TO THE CHICKASAWS.

A correspondent from upper South Carolina, informs us that Rev. Andrew M. Watson, late of Bethel in that State, has been appointed by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, as a missionary to the Chickasaw Indians; also to superintend a Female Academy at a new station, called Wah-pa-nucka.

We rejoice at this appointment. The Board has done well in making it. It is an interesting field, and one in which this young brother will doubtless be eminently useful.

The great anxiety manifested by the Chickasaw Indians to have missionaries and instructors among them, gives great encouragement to the Board and their missionaries, to labour for and among them. They have manifested greater anxiety, and a much more liberal spirit in preparing this station, than any heathen to whom the Board have sent missionaries. Surely if the Lord has put it into their hearts to do what they have done for his cause, he will bless his cause among them. Bethel Presbytery sends out three missionaries in company—one a mechanic, one a farmer, and the third a minister—all from the same church, Bethel. May the Lord bless the church whence they go, and also abundantly reward those missionaries in the "winning of souls" for their self-denying labours.—Southern Presbyterian.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

A LETTER FROM THE REV. JOHN NEWTON.

Notices of Sabathu and the Hill people—Interesting missionary station to be re-occupied—Was Sunday instead of Saturday the original Sabbath?

Sabathu, Sept. 19, 1851.

My Dear Mr. Editor—Having had occasion a short time ago, to go up to Simla for a few days, I presume you will not take it amiss if I note for the perusal of your readers some of the things which have come under my notice during the trip; especially things connected with our old mission station at Sabathu; which, you know, is about eighteen miles in the interior of the Himalayas, and twenty-five miles below Simla.

When I left Lahor on the 19th of August, the heat was very great, and sickness was beginning to abound. How delightful then, after the lapse of a week, to find myself clothed in woollens, and sitting with comfort before a Simla fire. At Sabathu, whither I had returned by the end of another week, the temperature was about ten degrees lower. In praise of the climate of this place too much can scarcely be said. True, indeed, in the early part of the summer, it is uncomfortably warm, and the direct rays of the sun are powerful during the whole summer season; but the winters are mild, and while the rains last, in what would otherwise be the hottest part of the year, the air of Sabathu is most pleasant. Add to this the charming scenery presented by the surrounding hills gently sloping and undulating, and rising higher and higher in the distance, clothed with a rich crop of grass with intervals of cultivation, exhibiting every shade of green—and the place is lovely in the extreme. Such is the appearance of things from the mission house. It is situated on a ridge fronting towards a mountain river called the Ghambar, with valleys and higher hills beyond them on the right and left, and an elevation concealing the town in the rear.

As this station had been unoccupied for nearly two years, for want of a missionary who could be spared for this purpose, I was glad of an opportunity to renew, though only for a short season, the labours in which I had once been here engaged. And this pleasure was enhanced by my having Mr. Janvier, who had come over for a short time from Kosauli, [where he was on a visit with his wife, who is ill,] to share these labours with me. It was sad to see the little mission church standing "like a cottage in a garden of cucumbers," neglected and forsaken. But it was again opened for the worship of Jehovah; and again the gospel of the Son of God was preached to the heathen in the bazár. When shall a missionary be found to resume the regular duties of this station? It is painful to think of abandoning such a field. The hill stations, I know, are generally thought to be less important than those on the plains, because the population of mountainous districts is comparatively sparse. But admitting this, it must still be remembered that these stations have peculiar advantages. It is not my object to speak of these at present, but I wish to say that the population about Sabathu is by no means so small as it might be supposed to be. Standing on the verandah of the mission house, I am able to count over the hills and in the valleys no less than seventy-five clusters of houses; averaging, I should suppose, half a dozen dwellings. On two sides my vision extends to the distance, in a direct line, of ten or fifteen miles; on another side to a distance of two miles; while on the fourth side it is entirely obstructed by the hill. Besides these, there are doubtless many others that can be seen only by winding about through the valleys. These clusters are not so many different villages, for in the hills it is not uncommon for houses, a quarter or a half a mile apart, to be counted in the same village. From what I know of the population in other places in the vicinity of Sabathu, not visible from the mission house, I should estimate the number of souls within twenty miles of this station, (not direct, but as the roads run,) at 10,000. This, you will agree with me, is no contemptible charge for a missionary.

These hill people, you are aware, though Hindus, differ in some things from the Hindus of the plains. They are of a different race; their language is somewhat different; and they have different objects of worship. The hills are covered with small temples, consecrated to different local deities, such as the Hindu Shasters have no knowledge of. The worship of these probably constituted the whole religion of the mountaineers prior to their conversion to Hinduism; and such is the principal part of their religion still. One of the most powerful of these deities, (dewtas, as they call them,) is denominated Dewt Sid. In speaking about him, the other day, one of his admirers told me, that to prove his divinity an Englishman, named Váran, had removed a goat previously offered to him, and so rendered sacred, saying that if any harm befell him in consequence, he would acknowledge Dewt Sid to be a true god; otherwise he must be considered false. No sooner had the goat been removed than Mr. Váran's eyes burst. He immediately restored it, and lo! his eyes were instantly healed. This fact, the man said, he had not himself witnessed, but it was known all over the hills where he lived. The story, no doubt, was invented and propagated by the priests of the dewta, to save his endangered if not declining cause.

There is one curious fact worth mentioning. I asked some people one day about their seasons of worship. They said that the great dewtas were worshipped every day, but the little ones only on Sunday. It is singular that the sacred day of the Hindus, so far as any day with them is sacred, is the same as that of Christians. If the same thing were found to be true of other heathen nations, it might be supposed that they had learned it by tradition from the patriarchs; and that Sunday was the original day of rest, Saturday being substituted, as some have imagined, when the Israelites came out of Egypt, to answer a local and a temporary purpose, viz., the commemoration of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, as intimated in Deut. v. 15.

Since I came to Sabathu some Gurkhá soldiers have come repeatedly to converse about religion, and seemed much interested in the gospel scheme of salvation. Yours truly, JOHN NEWTON.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. C. W. FORMAN.

Leave Lahor on a preaching tour—A thief at night disappointed—Talk with a distiller—Apathetic Musalmans.

Oct. 3d.—Yesterday at 4 P. M., I started from Lahor upon a preaching tour, and came out seventeen miles. For two years I had not been out of sight of Lahor and its ruins. In seeing the open country with its trees and fields of corn once more, I felt all the delight of a school-boy in starting upon his vacation tour. When the sun was near the horizon I got out of my gig at Shalimar, the famous garden made by one of the Mogul kings of Upper Hindustan, and walked for several miles, passing by several other long gardens probably the property of Lahor Surdars (chiefs). I was struck with the coolness of the atmosphere in the neighbourhood of every garden, showing the influence of trees and vegetation upon the temperature. When Kentucky is deprived of its trees it will in all probability be as hot as the same latitudes in Europe, if not Asia. Arrived at camping ground at 8 o'clock P. M.; did not have my tent pitched but went into a garden house, formerly the property of Runjit Singh; after getting a cup of tea went to bed, very tired and sleepy—a Musalmán faqir and one or two others sleeping in the verandah. These natives often sleep the greater part of the day, and lie and smoke and talk at night. By entreaties I prevailed upon them to be silent, and so got asleep. At 2 o'clock I was aroused by a noise at my table: I looked up and saw a man busily gathering up the things that were on it. I shouted "Koun ho," (who are you?) He dropped the tea box which he was just taking up, and ran—and I after him, crying, Chore, chore, chore, (thief, thief, thief,) Chokidar, chokidar, (watchman, watchman;) but no watchman came, and the pebbles hurt my naked feet so that I soon gave up the chase. But the thief was so frightened that he dropped nearly all that he had taken. Only getting off with an old cravat, an old pair of suspenders, one stocking, and a piece of cloth which I wore folded around a large summer hat to protect my head from the sun. He was certainly a very foolish thief, for he had carefully taken the hat (which was made by sewing soft thin woollen cloth and then cotton cloth around a straw hat) all to pieces, which must have taken some time; he also took a saucer from under a cup and left the cup and spoon. When I called up the two watchmen in the morning, to inquire what they were doing at the time, the one who should have been awake said he was near the gate with the camels, tents and men; he heard me call, but was afraid to leave that place (where all the servants were) lest the thief should run there and steal something. This was a sufficiently lame excuse, but when asked why he did not answer when he heard me calling, he had nothing to say, and so was dismissed without any wages for his night's work.

Went out early in the morning to preach; saw several men sitting by a still, under the shade of a large tree; attempted to convince them of sin from the fact, that contrary to the commands of their sacred books they made and drank ardent spirits. They assented to all that I said, and I went on to show that in many things we all offend, and the way of salvation from sin. As I returned, saw three Musalmán faqirs sitting before their hut. I asked if they were Musalmáns—one replied as Musalmáns almost always do "Shakar Mohammed Ali." Which may mean either "Thanks to Mohammed and God," or "thanks to the great God." I tried to show them it was no cause of thankfulness. They assented to all I said even when I told them Mohammed was a lascivious, bad man. Indeed the subject seemed to be one utterly devoid of interest in their eyes. One seemed much more occupied with his breakfast, which consisted of unleavened cakes and boiled pulse—and another at feeding a little goat.

Notices of the second day's incidents—Need of watchfulness unto prayer—The Sabbath at Amritsar—No man needs grace more than the Missionary.

In the evening, made a march of ten miles, preaching and giving away books on the way as occasion offered. At one place, preached for a half hour with great freedom. People seemed much pleased, and asked me to remain all night; but my camels had gone on before. On the road to-day, saw a deep well with steps leading down to the water; the well, steps and walls were well made of bricks cemented together—a faqir living by it ran down to get me some water, and seemed much pleased with my admiration, and inquiries into its history. Put up to-night in a portico on the side of a large well-made tank, using the sides of my tent for walls. Prescribed for six fever cases during the day. Had applications from two other sick men, whose cases were beyond my skill; spent much of this day (Oct. 4th) in preaching, giving away books and medicines; assisted more, I think, than ever before in preaching to the heathen. The day passed rapidly and pleasantly away, but towards evening, after I had set forth the gospel plan of salvation to a crowd of people, a Musalmán said aloud, "You don't obey your own prophet, you eat pork." This put me out of patience, and I spoke to him very harshly. Thus God continually permits me to fall, when I become a little puffed up by my performances.

Oct. 5th.—Sunday, at Amritsar. Felt little disposed to preach this morning—cast down; yet went to the city, and standing in one of the head-streets, soon collected a crowd chiefly of Musalmáns; disputed with them for an hour, on the Divinity of Christ. Their chief speaker was a shrewd man, of weak judgment; no ability to distinguish between sound and unsound arguments—the most disagreeable of all opponents. One thing I remarked was, that in their own Koran Christ was called "The Spirit of God," and I continued, "My spirit and I am one, my body is nothing but earth, the house in which my spirit dwells, which will be destroyed when I go to another world—so the Spirit of God is God—therefore your book teaches that Christ is God." He replied, we must not judge of things by their names. No, I said, not when man gives them, for men are flatterers, but we may judge things by the names God gives them, for he always speaks in accordance with truth. I said that the Law and Prophets and Gospel in a thousand places taught that Christ was God—that he was equal with God, and the Son of God. "That was all abrogated." I told him what I had said a hundred times before, that a truth could never be abrogated, only a command could be, and that I said nothing about a command. "But," said he, "if there is no command, it matters not whether it is, or is not." This was a mere play upon the word command, which they use in the sense of word or speech when applied to a superior—so his words also meant. If God has not spoken, what matters it whether the thing is true or not. This was such egregious folly, that I told him that it was not worth while talking, if I could not get a more sensible man to talk with. As he had shown a good deal of cunning, this offended him and his party very much—so I suppose I did more harm by my anger than good by my instructions. Returned to my tent quite disheartened.

A Hindu faqir came with several others to my tent; all that I could make out of what he said was, that there is no difference between Hindús, Musalmáns and Christians; when we look down at our stomachs and inhale sin, that is Moses; when we exhale it, that is Jesus! Surely no men need so much grace as Missionaries. We need always the grace the pastor requires when he enters the pulpit, yea, more. Went into the city in the afternoon, taking a servant with books with me. There was great demand for them, particularly for those written in Hindí (the language of the Hindus) and Gurmukhí, (the language or rather alphabet of the Sikhs,—the language being called Panjábi. Saw three very genteel-looking men sitting in a shop and stopped to speak to them. They said they were Moghuls, i. e. Persian Musalmáns. The Persian worshippers of fire call themselves Phársi, and their country, Erán. The youngest said he was going to Erán, after twenty days and would come to my tent for some Gospels, (Persian) to take with him; we will see whether he comes. I never think of a man keeping his word unless he is from the West. These Eastern people all lie, and the Persians are said to be the greatest liars among them. Henry Martyn speaks of his delight at meeting with a Russian in Persia, because he spoke the truth. As I came out of the city I addressed a large crowd on a bridge near the city gate. They seemed much interested, and to approve of all I said. I always find the people quiet, attentive and apparently pleased when I shut them up by the law to the Gospel, and then open it to them. Coming to my tent I sat upon a box, and soon a man came up and I commenced to talk with him, another and another came till I had twenty or thirty around me. I preached for some time, till a Musalmán interrupted me. I conversed with him for some time in a good spirit, till he asked me why I did not obey the Koran; and I undertook to prove by quotations that it was not God's word. He denied that what I said was written, and a number joined in the flat contradiction. It was now dark, I called for a light, but my servant was away and so I could not confirm what I had said. All I could do was to assure them of its truth and ask them to come back in the morning, when I would read the verses to them, and give them the chapter and verse, that they might ask their Moulwies whether it was correct, what I had said. But they most obstinately and absurdly persisted in saying that what I said was false, till I became impatient. I don't know how much I said, but I know I was not as prudent as I should have been.

Idolatry among the Sikhs—Discussion with a Mohammedan; an objection not rightly answered—Native pride—Native vanity and lies—Animal food lawful.

Oct. 6th—Went to the far-famed Holy Place of the Sikhs—a gilded temple in the middle of a large tank or reservoir of water—approached by a marble walk. It was affecting to see the throng of people walking barefoot to the temple, prostrating themselves before it, and then going in to worship, what? not our common Creator and Lord; but a book. This is as singular an evidence of the natural disposition of men to idolatry as anything in the history of the Jews. The Sikh book forbids idolatry; so they cannot make idols, but bow down and worship the book they fancy contains God's word. Returning, I saw a Moulwí sitting in his school; offered him a book, which he politely advised me to give to those who needed instruction. I sat down and we were soon in the midst of a discussion of the claims of the Gospel and the Koran. Of course the question with these men must always be, has the Gospel been repealed? He was very unreasonable, and disposed to overwhelm me with words. One thing he said gave me great advantage; it was, that God, who generally commands all not to worship anything but himself, upon one occasion commanded Satan to worship Adam. The story, as told in the Koran, is, that when God had made Adam in Paradise (i. e. Heaven), from earth brought by an angel from this world, he commanded all the angels to worship him. Satan only refused; and for his pride and disobedience he was cast out of Heaven. They answer the argument drawn from this passage against the Koran, by saying that "worship" is an indefinite term, and may only mean to salute; just like the Romanists. But the Moulwí in using the term when applied to the command to worship Adam, in the same sense that it is used with reference to God, cut himself off from his only retreat and I did not spare him. What sort of a god must he be, said I, who denounces idolatry as the greatest sin, and says every idolator shall go to hell, and yet who commands his own creatures to commit this sin? But I fear I did harm by my eagerness—I put my foot rather too unmercifully on a fallen opponent, and too triumphantly. No people would feel the force of this argument more than the Musalmáns, because none are more averse to idolatry. They are taught from their infancy to loathe all forms of it. This is especially true with regard to those who best understand their religion. The more ignorant have adopted many of the errors of Hinduism.

This is a great Musalmán holiday—a feast called the "Goat feast." My servants asked me to give them a goat. I was a little doubtful about the lawfulness of it, at first, as a Persian in the city called it a sacrifice. But they seemed only to want it to eat, so I gave it. After preaching at my tent again in the afternoon, I went into the city. Had a long dispute with a vain Musalmán. One objection he urged I fully understood, but before I had time to answer, I forgot its point, and so did not answer it properly. I felt dissatisfied with what I had said, and he was evidently so; but I could not see where I had failed, till after I had left the city and was on my march; then the whole subject flashed into my mind, and I was amazed at my own stupidity. The objection was an absurd one, but would have weight with Musalmáns, and could have been easily met. I felt half disposed to go back, but I knew it was vain to hunt for the man in such a city.

I saw a man to-day whom I had known in Lahor. He had been very mad in conversation with me once at Lahor, and when he came the second time, I refused to have anything to say to him, and assigned as my reasons, his former impoliteness. To-day he rode by me in tremendous style. O how his silks glittered in the sun! In the afternoon he passed me again. He rode up to within 20 or 30 yards and then stopped, that I might have a fair opportunity of seeing him in all his splendor, and then rode slowly past.

A Cashmírí came to my tent, a very respectable-looking man, and spoke to me in English. I had heard that a Cashmírí Pundit was the chief English teacher in the Government school in this place. This was very improbable, as few Cashmírís have learnt English, and the best English scholars are Bengalis. However, the thing was not impossible, and so I thought this must be the man. Ah, said I in English, you are the head-teacher, in Government school? Yes, he said. How many English scholars have you? "Yes," he replied. I saw all his English was "Good evening," and "Yes." So I said to him in Hindustaní. Do you teach in the Government school? O yes, I am a teacher of Gurmukhí. These two instances are fair specimens of native vanity and lying. The teacher having addressed me in English, was ashamed to confess before the people his ignorance of the language, and then went on to act such an absurd part. Here was a man belonging to the learned portion of the Brahmans, and selected by the English for an important post, and one more worthy than the rest of his class. Surely "vanity and lies" might with truth be written upon the foreheads of these people.

A Hindu at Amritsar objected to our religion on the ground that we allowed the killing of animals. I told him that all cruelty to animals was expressly forbidden, but that man was evidently the lord of this world. Then I went on to show that God had made one kind of animals to eat vegetables and another to eat flesh, and that they must each eat their own proper food, or death would be the consequence: both their teeth and stomachs were adapted to their proper food. A camel could not eat meat, and if he could get it into his stomach, that could not digest it; and so with the lion in reference to grass. Here we learn the will of God. Men have teeth and stomachs for both vegetable and animal food, and don't we equally plainly learn God's will with reference to his food from this? Then, I argued, that it was still more clearly lawful to kill a snake or a scorpion to save life. The speaker and audience expressed great satisfaction, which I suppose they felt for a moment, as the thing was new to them.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

LETTERS OF THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS:—NO. III.

Religions of China: Taouism—Painful observances —Charms—Cruelty towards the dying.

The Taouist priests, to preserve their influence over the people, call them to witness how their gods can exempt them from injury and pain. On the anniversary on the birth of one of their gods, as related in substance by Medhurst, they run barefoot through a large fire prepared for the purpose in front of the temple, and they pretend that if they possess a sincere mind they will escape injury. They must prepare themselves for this hazardous act by chanting prayers before the god, and with bells, holy water, blowing of horns, and with swords which they strike into the fire, for the purpose it is said of subduing the demon. They cut and pierce themselves also with knives and sharp instruments.

Once when passing along the East Gate Street in the city of Ningpo on my way to the Chapel, I observed the people crowding to the doors and windows of their shops, and listening to certain strange sounds far down the street, and growing louder as they approached nearer. Presently a sedan chair appeared in view, borne by two men, coming on as fast as they could walk, bearing a man, not seated within, but standing erect, his feet resting each on a pole of the sedan. It was a rainy and cold day in winter, but he was naked, except about the loins and thighs; blood was on his body, in each hand he held a huge sword, with which he was thrusting and cutting the air; with a face twisted about in frightful grimaces, and uttering shrieks, yells, and groans.

The priests write charms, which the people buy to preserve them from evil influences; they are pasted up in the house or boat, or sewed up in a little bag and suspended on the breast by a string around the neck, and some are burned and the ashes swallowed in a cup of water or tea. It is said that these charms must be renewed every year.

These Taouists teach that death is unclean; that it brings evil influences into a house, which can be expelled only by their arts; and the fear that this creates in the minds of the people overcomes the feelings of humanity which they might otherwise obey; for rather than that their dwellings should be contaminated by the presence of a dead body, many will turn a sick person into the streets to die; even relatives are often refused the privilege of closing their eyes in death in the presence of kindred, and left in the streets or open country, or carried into some of the unoccupied rooms of a temple, or a deserted house, and left on the cold stones or the ground, with only a ragged mat, or a bit of straw for a bed. O when shall they receive that religion which teaches to be merciful, to do justice to the afflicted and needy! Who will act the part of the good Samaritan to the many in China, who in poverty and sickness see their countrymen and acquaintances passing by without offering them aid, and refusing when asked? All the missionaries do what they can themselves, and endeavour to teach the people their duty to the poor and sick. But the missionaries are few in number, and have not funds to expend in private charities, except what can be saved from their own expenses. There are many whose duty it is to go over to inquire into the condition of their neighbours in China and bind up their wounds; and such as cannot personally do this, may send aid by the hand of those who do go.

Taouist Priests—Idols worshipped by them—Temples.

The priests of the Taou sect, like the Buddhists, for the most part, live in communities. A given number are attached to each monastery, and are supported from the proceeds of the lands with which it is endowed, and by their numerous fees and perquisites. The superior carries the purse, or is the treasurer, and all the fraternity are governed by him. They do not marry; but they adopt boys as apprentices, who study the proper books, and are employed as servants about the temple until they are of a suitable age to be received to full orders. The priests shave each side of the head, allowing what remains to grow long, and this is twisted and done up in a knot on the top of the head, and fastened with a pin. The fashion of their robes is similar to those of the Buddhist priests, but the colour is different; the Taouists wearing slate colour, but the Buddhists yellow or a dirty white. The lay assistants do not adopt the dress or tonsure of the priests, nor do they receive any of their support from the revenue of the temples; but like the common people they marry and live with their own families, and depend for support upon their fees and perquisites. The Taouist priests are by no means so numerous as the Buddhist. Their monasteries are expensively built, and occupy extensive grounds, which are tastefully arranged, and shaded with venerable trees. Their principal god is Shangte. His titles are, Haou teen yuh wang ta te, luminous heaven's precious king, great sovereign; yuen teen shang te, pure heaven's highest ruler; wan she woo shang, in all worlds none is greater; and teen kung, heavenly ruler. In their temples are many idols, some of which belong properly to the Buddhist sect, this results from a spirit of accommodation; also in Buddhist temples are often to be found some of the gods of the Taou sect. They have the god of the North pole; of fire, called Hwa Kwang. They worship also genii, and innumerable inferior divinities.

I cannot describe their temples minutely. In style of architecture and internal arrangement they do not differ materially from those of the Buddhist sect. The "Yew Shing Kwan," near the north gate of Ningpo, is the best specimen we have in that city. In the principal entrance is an image about the ordinary size and proportions of a man, standing in his shrine, like a sentry in his box, to guard the gate; he has three eyes, the third one situated in the middle of the forehead. On one of the posts that support the roof of his little pavilion, are inscribed these words, "Evil and good, how can they escape the three eyes?" In one part of the establishment is a department appropriated to the gods that preside over the seasons. It occupies an oblong piece of ground, at one end of which is a small temple where the god of spring presides; at his left is the god who presides over the current year; at his right the god of cow-drivers, or plough-boys, with a very youthful appearance. In front of these and reaching far down on either side are sheds, open in front, and in these are the gods which preside over each year of the cycle respectively; and as the Chinese cycle has sixty years, so the number of images to represent these must be sixty. In front of each image is a tablet giving the name of the god, and the number of the year over which he presides. Also before each is a small stand, on which may be placed incense, sticks and candles, and they all bear evidence of frequent use. Every person who worships here must know in which year of the cycle he was born, and the god of that year is his patron, and this must receive his offerings. The images in these sheds then, are sixty, lacking one, that one for the passing year is holding his station at the left hand of the god of spring. In the same house with the god of spring are also the god of the month, the god of the day, and the god of the hour. At the present time, 1851, the Chinese, I think, are in the forty-eighth year of the seventy-sixth cycle.

At this temple is celebrated the annual ceremonies of Leih chun, the beginning of spring, and others, of which I cannot now speak. The anniversary of the birth of their principal god, Shang-te, is a high day for the great body of the people. Vast multitudes on this day flock to the Taouist temple, to present their congratulatory offerings, and supplicate the benedictions of this reputed sovereign of all the gods. On such occasions all the rooms of the temple and all the adjacent grounds are filled with the smoke of fragrant wood. The candles which each worshipper lights and places on the stand before the idol, burn but a few seconds and are removed to make room for others. All these candles and other offerings go to make up the revenue of the temple.

I cannot be more particular in this letter, though I wish I might, in order that the reader could know how constantly the Chinese are going to the temples, what pains they take to please their gods, and what sums of money they expend upon them; he would then see what a pittance Christians give for religious purposes, compared with what the heathen waste in idolatry, "wearying themselves for very vanity."

AFRICA: CORISCO MISSION.

A LETTER OF THE REV. J. L. MACKEY: SEPTEMBER 1, 1851.

Another journey on the Muni—The Pangwe people.

In the Record of March, 1851, we inserted a very interesting journal of the lamented missionary, the Rev. G. W. Simpson. It described a missionary tour up the river Muni. We now insert an account of a second journey on the same river, but on a different branch of it. Mr. Mackey expected to have set out on this journey in company with the Rev. Mr. Bushnell, of the American Board Mission at Gaboon, early in the season for travelling, but some delay occurred, and Mr. Bushnell was unable then to proceed. Mr. Mackey continues:

While Mr. Bushnell was at Corisco, some Boha men from a distance up the river made a visit to Corisco. I learned from them that individuals from their tribe frequently crossed the mountains to trade with the people beyond. I had learned before, that the Pangwe tribe could be reached by traversing the mountains. One of the men who was down at Corisco, told me that his father had married a Pangwe woman, that they were frequently going over into their country, and that they could conduct me by a passage of two days' journey through the mountains to the first Pangwe towns. The Pangwes are a very interesting people. They are beginning to come down on the head waters of Gaboon, and the brethren of that mission have once or twice reached their nearest towns. They seem to be a very numerous people. Besides those on the head waters of Gaboon they are heard of up the branches of the Muni, and as high up as Batanja. They are the manufacturers of the native iron instruments, and of almost all the manufactured curiosities taken from this part of the coast. Some of their workmanship which I have seen is exceedingly neat and ingenious. The sea-coast tribes have a great fear of them, as well as a high respect for them; they tell us they make things just as white men do. Many of the stories told of them are marvellous and incredible, and I forbear to repeat any of them.

I did not think it advisable at all, in the present condition of our mission, to undertake any very distant exploration, but I was desirous to explore to its source the south branch of the Muni, (Utembâni,) which Brother Simpson and I did not ascend, and to confirm by personal observation, the statement made to me by the man from there, in regard to the practicability of crossing the mountains.

Dr. Ford came up from Gaboon after Mr. Bushnell's return, and he consented at once to accompany me. Before we started, we had concluded not to attempt crossing the mountains. The rains were beginning to prevail, and I felt that it would not be prudent for me, in the present condition of our mission, to be many days absent, or, in any way unnecessarily to expose myself.

South branch of the Muni—A night at Evolingo—The devil worshipped—The Gospel preached.

I will give you some notes of this tour to the source of the Utembâni, south branch of the Muni.

This river empties into the Muni about twenty miles from its mouth, and is much longer than the Muni above their junction. For the first ten miles, it is a fine, deep river, more than a mile in width, but densely bordered on both sides with mangroves. We entered it in our small craft about four o'clock, P. M. We arrived at Evolingo, a town about five miles above the junction, before sunset. As our boat ran into the landing, the main street appeared to be perfectly crowded with people. Some were beating drums, some singing and dancing, and others making different kinds of indescribable noises. Many people came down to meet us. Our white faces seemed very attractive to them. There had never been but one white man in the town before, and none had ever ascended the river higher than this. Among the crowd who came down to meet us, were several Corisco men, who had come up to trade. I asked one of them what all this noise and commotion in the town meant. His reply was, "They are making the devil here." They were engaged in a kind of superstitious worship, or homage rendered to an evil spirit, which they call Ukuk. The performers were too much engaged, to take any notice of us. They were men and women, almost naked, with bundles of dry nut shells, which make a loud rattling noise when shaken, tied to their knees, singing and dancing, with some beating sticks and drums around them. All were working as if their lives depended on the labour they were undergoing. We were taken into the house of the head-man of the town, which was soon crowded almost to suffocation. A fine, straight-looking man, venerable and dignified, soon made his appearance, who we were told was Diâkâ, the head man of the town, and King of the Boha tribe. I was very favourably impressed with his appearance at the first sight. I told him we had come to visit his town, but were very sorry to hear so much noise; that we were missionaries, and wanted to talk to the people about God, but that we could not stay while such noise and confusion continued; if he would stop all the drumming and dancing, and have his people keep quiet, we would stay over night and preach to them. He sent out and required all the performance to cease, and we heard no more of it during our stay. Two hours afterwards, when we had taken some refreshment, the same persons who were so recently worshipping the devil, were standing round us hearing the way of salvation through Jesus Christ. The house was full, and the street near it was also crowded. My interpreter sat in the door, and a large number heard, for the first time, the way to eternal life. They listened with respectful attention.

A sick man not relieved—Journey continued—One or two towns visited.

We learned in the evening that there was a man lying very sick in the house next to the one where we were staying. Dr. Ford was desirous to see him, and to give him some medical aid. We started to see him, but when we were in the house the people would not let us go into his room to see him. They were making fetish for him, and they would not even let us look at him.

In the morning, we prepared to start at daylight. We had made friends with King Diâkâ, and as he was acquainted with the people up the whole length of the river, we requested him to accompany us; he consented with great readiness. His brother, next in authority to him, insisted on going with us, also. About seven o'clock, A. M., we were under weigh. The morning was cloudy and unpromising; we had no breeze to fill our sails, but with six strong oarsmen, and the tide in our favour, we made a progress of five or six miles an hour. About six miles above Evolingo the river divides into two nearly equal branches. One runs nearly due east, the other keeps on its southern course. We were told by the men who accompanied us, that the southern branch had almost a common source with the main branch of the Gaboon. The eastern branch, which retains the name of the river, leads directly towards the interior; of course, it was the one we took.

About ten o'clock, the ebb tide was setting so strongly against us, that we determined to run our boat in to a town which was near by, and let our men rest until the tide had expended its force. The town was situated on high ground, back of the mangrove border, which was here but two or three hundred yards in width. We were unable, however, to land. Our boat would not run in through the narrow pass in the mangrove. The people in the town hailed us, but there happened just at that time to be no canoe to carry us out on shore, and we concluded to pass round to the next town, a few hundred yards further up. At this town we found a small canoe, but the people were very timid about allowing us to go on shore. After some little talk, the men whom we had brought with us prevailed on some of them to bring us the canoe. This town, like the former, was behind the mangrove border of the river; through the mangrove, a narrow passage led to the town. We got on shore with difficulty, but we were obliged to make our stay very short, as the tide was ebbing rapidly, and as the water left the passage through the mangrove, it left exposed an almost unfathomable depth of mud. The people were of the same tribe, and were subjects of the king who was with us, but they seemed to show him little regard. Their town was filthy and wretched, indicating the same want of industry and energy in the inhabitants which are seen on all this coast. We made our retreat as fast as possible, to prevent being mud-bound; and anchored our boat out in the river. When the people found there was no danger to be apprehended, nearly all belonging to the town came down, climbing over the high projecting mangrove roots, offering to sell us various articles.

The different appearance of the country—A rainy night and a hospitable tree.

We were soon under weigh again. The country began now to assume a different aspect. The mangroves ceased; a magnificent view of mountain scenery appeared directly ahead of us, apparently at but a few miles' distance. The water in the river was fresh and cool, but we saw no towns—no people. Our men told us there was but one more town on the river. Several sites where towns had formerly stood, were pointed out to us, but all the people had moved down the river for the sake of trade. We were soon at this last town. It was about four o'clock, P. M., and we debated whether we had better put up for the night, or proceed as far as we could, and sleep in our boat. We concluded, as the town did not seem to promise much better shelter or accommodation for the night than we could find in our boat, that we would proceed and not lose the remainder of the day. We engaged a canoe and men here to accompany us. The course of the river was still nearly due east, and we seemed to be coming up directly against the mountains, but our men told us it was still a long distance to the place where the "water comes down," that is, to the fall or rapids in the mountain. Two or three miles above the last town, when we had come up almost to the base of the mountain, the river makes a sudden turn nearly at a right angle, and the remainder of its course is almost directly north. At this turn in the river we were shown the road, which we had been told would lead us into the Pangwe country.

As night was coming on, it began to rain heavily, and as we had no prospect of any shelter better than what we could make with the sails of our boat, we were beginning to repent our passing the town which we left but two hours before. The canoe which accompanied us was a little distance ahead; the men in it went on shore at a place which they seemed to know, and our boat was hauled in at the same place and anchored. It was growing dark, and rain was falling heavily. There appeared but a dreary prospect for a pleasant night's rest. The Doctor went on shore to oversee some cooking, while I undertook to have our wet sails spread in a kind of tent form over the stern of the boat, so that we should have some shelter from the rain during the night. The Doctor soon called to me, as it was so wet in the boat, to come on shore and see the prospect there. "Here is a perfect house!" he exclaimed as he took me to a mammoth tree which offered us a complete shelter. Our guides had already a large fire kindled under it. Weary travellers in a more civilized land never, perhaps, welcomed the sight of an inn with more joy than we did that hospitable tree. It served as a complete shelter for nine of us to sleep under. We had temporary bedsteads erected, of bamboo, which grew in abundance near by, and we did not pass, during our whole trip, a night more comfortably. We were in a country of wild beasts. An elephant path passed under the same tree. We appointed watches and kept up fires during the night, but our God kept us in perfect peace and safety, and suffered no harm to come near us. In the morning, starting as the day began to dawn, we took an earlier leave of our tree than we would have done, had we not expected to re-visit it on our return, when we would have daylight to take a view of its dimensions.

Country near the mountains—End of the journey upwards—Notice of the tree—Another night at Evolingo.

The course of the river led us to-day, until we reached the rapids, through a very beautiful country, very different in appearance from the immediate seacoast. There is none of the impenetrable jungle which is there everywhere met. There is some fine, straight timber, but the land is not covered along the river with dense forest as the mountains are. Every thing seems to indicate a soil well suited for agricultural purposes. We saw, as we passed along to-day, numerous fords where elephants appeared (from the numberless tracks in either bank) to have frequently crossed. We started some wild ducks, and we saw, also, many birds of strange and unknown species to us. We reached the rapids about nine or ten o'clock, A. M. The smooth water of the river ends here in a beautiful basin, surrounded by high hills, except at the outlet. We found no perpendicular fall here, as we found on our previous trip up the Muni, at the head of the river. The water, which most probably collects at no great distance among the mountains, is here poured down through a deep ravine with precipitous mountains on each side, with amazing rapidity. We followed the stream, which is here but a few yards wide, up this ravine for about half a mile, but the travelling was so laborious over the huge rocks, that we abandoned it, and returned to our boat. This was the extent of our journey, and we immediately prepared for our return.

In the course of the day, we arrived at our last night's camp, where we stopped to take a daylight view of our hospitable tree.

Its stature was not so gigantic as I had supposed, but it is certainly singular enough in its form to merit some notice. It would seem to have sprung from a seed which germinated in the air, and which threw out branches upwards and downwards at the same time. The shaft of the tree commenced at least twenty feet from the ground; from its bottom, five large branches lead off to the earth, which are inserted at such a distance from each other as to enclose an area of about two hundred and fifty square feet. The main shaft of the tree would have measured, perhaps, fifteen or twenty feet in girth. We felt truly grateful to a kind Providence who had prepared for us this shelter in the wilderness.

We spent a night, on our return, at Evolingo. The man whom we left sick on our passage up had died during our absence. The mourners were chanting their lamentations during the whole night. A large part of the women of the town seemed to be gathered in and about the house, all joined in the noisy demonstration, but their mourning was, as is usual among all the African tribes, more a matter of form or custom, than of sorrow for the dead.

Mr. Mackey expresses his disappointment at finding the country on the upper waters of the Muni destitute of inhabitants. It is the finest country he has seen in Africa, but the people have left it and "crowded down towards the sea-coast for the sake of trade. Undoubtedly there is a large population beyond the mountains. The amount of trade which comes down indicates this." The region beyond the mountains, he is anxious to explore, and thinks the journey could be made with safety, and without great difficulty; but with only a single labourer on Corisco, he wisely judges that this exploring tour must be postponed. He will probably undertake it as soon as the Mission is re-inforced.

CREEK MISSION.

LETTER OF MR. J. B. JUNKIN; TALLAHASSEE, OCTOBER 13, 1851.

Boarding Scholars out of School—Farming at the station—Need of lay-Missionaries—Pleasing intelligence.

The attention of our readers is particularly directed to the following remarks. They have the greater weight as coming from a practical experienced lay-man. The minuteness of the details needs no apology. They show that the lay-members of our churches have much to do and can do much on missionary ground among the Indians.

Perhaps some of the friends of missions (and especially the boys and girls who are friends to this great cause) would like to know what our Indian boys and girls work at, and how they work. I shall speak especially of the boys, as they are under my care out of school. They are just like any other forty boys you could collect, promiscuously, any where in the States, from the ages of 8 to 16, with every variety of disposition and character; most of them will work pretty well when I am with them, and some will when I am not; but some are very lazy, and they are all as full of fun and mischief as any forty boys would be, who were together night and day.

The above will answer as a description of the girls with a few exceptions. Well, now as to what they do, last year we raised between 900 and 1000 bushels of Indian corn. The boys with my direction and assistance did all the planting, hoeing and pulling. We had also two large gardens to attend. Besides this, they chop all the wood, which is no little labour, as there are fourteen stoves in winter; they draw and carry the water; last winter we grubbed, picked, took off all the timber and prepared for the plough, three acres of land. This year we raised near 700 bushels of corn, 100 of wheat, and 190 of oats; also 120 of Irish and 200 of sweet potatoes—the boys and I doing all the work, except for the wheat and oats and the ploughing and hauling. We had also a good garden, raising 500 cabbages, an abundance of beets, lettuce, radishes, tomatoes, melons, &c. Besides all this they do a great many things that cannot be told. Their ages average about eleven years. So you see they are small boys.

The girls are employed, as they should be, in doing the domestic work of the Institution, such as washing, ironing, scrubbing, setting the tables, sweeping, sewing, &c. They are generally very smart and active at their work. An instance of this strikes my mind; during vacation, while five of the girls were staying with us, I was sitting in the dining-hall when the bell rung for setting the table. For some cause no one came but Mary Rose, a little girl of eleven years, named for a good lady in Kentucky who supports her. I think in ten minutes she had a table set, all the dishes in their proper place and order, for twenty-five persons. I just thought there were many little white girls older than Mary Rose who could not do so.

I want to say a word to those, for I believe there are many such, who think there is no necessity for sending any but ministers and teachers out as missionaries. Now, friends, I think, I know, you are mistaken. I have always thought assistant missionaries necessary: and now I know it by experience. If I had three bodies, yes, and minds too, I could employ them all in the duties of a farmer and steward at this station, and then all would not be done that is needed to be done. In the first place, those forty boys out of school, are enough for one man to manage; and while they are in school, he should be providing work for them, and repairing tools. Then I have the supervision of the farm, and all other out-door business, besides providing provisions for a family of one hundred. I think I have often had a dozen such calls in the morning, especially on Monday, as the following. "We want water at the wash-place." "Aunt Celia has no wood." "We are all using the last bag of meal." "We must have some beef to-day." "Could you have those cows brought up?" &c., with three or four workmen wanting to know what to do, and how to do it, while I am wanting to go with my boys to work at the same time. Now, this is no exaggeration.

This will give some idea of the labour to be performed, and also show the necessity of such help at a station like this. Look at the other station of this Mission—Kowetah: there you see two ministers, one teaching, the other attending to such business as the above, while souls are going down in heathenish darkness, all around them for want of that gospel which they are authorized and prepared to preach. Will none come and take their places? There are some, surely, in the Church who are willing to take an active part in this great and trying work; for, as has been said, it is the only way of doing any permanent good for the poor Indians. Yes, these boarding-schools are doing a great work for the Creeks.

Tuesday, Oct. 21st.—Since writing the above, we have had a solemn and interesting communion season; one which, I trust, will be long remembered by all who were present. Three of our dear girls professed their love to and belief in Jesus Christ, by coming out from their companions and the world, and uniting with the Church: one had been baptized in infancy, the other two were baptized on Sabbath morning after sermon, before a large congregation. It was a solemn, and yet pleasant sight, to witness in "these western wilds," to see those two young and modest retiring girls profess their love to Christ, surrounded by so many thoughtless and giddy companions. It shows the power of the gospel of Christ to bring sinners to repentance and obedience. O! pray for these "lambs of the flock," that they may be kept from the grasp of Satan, and be made instrumental in bringing others to Jesus. May it be but the beginning of good things here. Pray for us. Yours truly, J. B. J.

MISCELLANEOUS.

POPERY IN BELGIUM.

Prospect of its overthrow.

After stating various grounds on which Romanism seems firmly planted in Belgium, (See Record of February,) Mr. Panchaud gives a more pleasing view of the future state of his country. The Gospel shall yet triumph, where Popery now wields its despotic and debasing power.

Popery, being a worldly religion in its spirit and its practice, bears within itself an unceasing cause of dissolution—like everything else which is of the flesh and of Satan. The lie which is at its foundation, and which reproduces itself in its different ramifications, is the ever-gnawing worm which, sooner or later, according to the word of God, will bring on its ruin.

Truth must eventually triumph over fraud and cunning; we have on our side Jesus Christ, the Truth: and the gates of death shall not prevail against the church of his people. Now, such a church exists in Belgium; the Lord has a people and flocks there. The lamp has been set up, by Him who is the light of the world, upon the table of many houses. Messengers of good news are repeating, from hill to hill, the tidings of salvation; and the church of Christ is erected amongst us, like a city set on a lofty mountain, whither all those who, like Lot, have their souls afflicted on account of the sins of their generation, go to find a refuge.

Besides the ten Protestant churches, with their schools, which are supported by the Government, there are twenty independent churches, of which the greater part, with their schools, are in connexion with the Christian Missionary Church of Belgium. Although spiritual light and piety are not to be found, in the same degree, in each of the congregations spoken of, one may truly affirm that most of them possess faithful leaders, and count amongst them pious members, more or less numerous.

Nearly 170,000 copies of the Bible or New Testament have been distributed and sold, as well as some hundreds of thousands of tracts and of printed writings, containing sound doctrines of faith. Various institutions, such as regular meetings for prayer, Sunday-schools, societies for aiding the cause of missions, and that of the Evangelical Alliance, exist in Belgium, and hold their ground with a manifest blessing. But the most important is the Christian Missionary Church of Belgium, or Evangelical Society. By its past labours, which date from fourteen years back, as well as by its present efforts, it contributes powerfully to the propagation of the truth.

If the pecuniary resources of the different associations which devote themselves to the work of Christian proselytism were stronger, and more commensurate to the wants of the population, one would see a much greater number of men shake off the chains of Popery and break them asunder; for generally in in every place where one has been able to open chapels and schools, and to provide regular instruction, great numbers of adults and children have come to profit by them, in spite of the opposition of the Romish clergy. Without exaggeration, one may put down at more than 2000, if we add together the different congregations, the number of Romanists who at present attend the worship of the evangelical churches; and these churches have prospered, in spite of the difficulties of all sorts which have been raised up against them, and the extreme poverty and distress which they have had, and still have, to suffer.

The Protestant press publishes, not only numerous edifying writings or tracts, which are distributed at a very low price, but, moreover, three religious monthly journals have been successively established, and reckon, each of them, a thousand to fifteen hundred subscribers. Two of these publications are of a character decidedly orthodox and edifying.

If we sum up these different means of action, one will easily be convinced that if Popery as a whole does not incur serious danger from the Evangelical Church, it has been, nevertheless, vanquished by it in several places, which have seen some hundred of inhabitants join together to form congregations, presided over by ministers of the gospel. Brussels, Liège, Nessonvaux, Paturages, La Bouverie, Charleroi, Jumet, &c., have been witnesses of such facts.

To what degree will the Lord, by the life-giving breath of his Spirit, continue to breathe on Belgium, and to bless the efforts of the friends of his reign? He alone knows. But this we can affirm, that to the gospel alone in Belgium, belongs the glory of having burst for thousands the chains of Popery, and of having led very many souls to the glorious liberty of the children of God.

By prayer, by the dissemination of the Scriptures and of godly tracts, by the faithful preaching of the truth, by the establishment of numerous evangelical schools, and by the Christian zeal of the members of the churches, there is no doubt that the Popedom has sustained shocks much more fatal to its empire than the blows have proved which have been given to it by liberalism. . . . .

Nevertheless, on this latter side, also, it may have to suffer grievous trials. Popery always stays itself upon the world; but the world is inconstant, and often perfidious. It is an ancient, and it is also a modern proverb, that the multitude may crush to-morrow what it crowns to-day; and Popery being at its mercy, is exposed to all the variations of popular caprice.

Besides the avarice, the ambition, and the despotism of the Romish clergy weigh heavily upon many, who only wait for a favourable opportunity to get rid of the burden. Although in a minority, they will avail themselves of every means which political disturbances may put at their disposal, to humble the clergy, and to overthrow, wholly or in part, the whole system of the Papacy. Even the monarchists and the conservatives may at last come to the conclusion that the Popedom has always betrayed them, and that it is a perfidious ally which turns its back in the day of battle. Accordingly, Popery stands upon the shifting ground of human opinion in Belgium, as well as in all other countries where the social soil is in movement, owing to political passions and the exaltation of human reason. In short, the Belgian episcopate, by its intolerance and ultramontane pretensions, may bring on a crisis which will be fatal to it. The liberal party does not demand the overthrow of Popery; on the contrary, it professes great regard for the religion of the country. But when one knows the men who are at its head, one may well have doubts as to the sincerity of its professions. Now, the headstrong and obstinate conduct of the episcopate, encouraged by the court of Rome, may occasion a decided schism. The Papacy is running the risk of destroying itself in Belgium by its own fault.

We have omitted all considerations drawn from Scripture which militate in favour of the gospel against Popery, and the numerous predictions of the ruin of this wicked system. Powerful as they are, we leave them to the appreciation of each reader of the sacred volume. We should teach them nothing which they do not know already; or which, if they are ignorant of it, they may not learn in innumerable writings on the subject. Besides, our reflections on this head would have no more particular relation to Popery in Belgium than to the whole of Roman Catholicism established in the ten kingdoms of the empire of the west. We believe, with all our brethren, that ere long, perhaps very soon, the colossus, with his feet of clay and iron, will be smitten by the stone cut out and hurled without hands, and that the cry shall be heard over all the earth, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication."

In conclusion Mr. Panchaud makes several remarks, of which we quote the last three:—

4. The Christians whom the Lord has brought together, in Belgium, in his purposes of mercy towards this kingdom, on account of their weakness and their small number, as well as in consideration of the multiplied obstacles which they meet with on their road, have a claim upon the sympathy and support of their brethren who are placed in more favourable circumstances, in order to have it in their power to struggle courageously and successfully against the influence and strength which numbers, riches, dignities, and temporal power give to Popery.

5. The religious liberty with which God at this time favours Belgium, furnishes the most favourable opportunity to the friends of the reign of Jesus Christ, for applying the resources which the Lord has confided to them to the propagation of the gospel by supporting evangelical chapels and schools, and the colportage of Bibles and tracts.

6. Lastly, the influence which the kingdom of Belgium exercises over the neighbouring States, by its two languages, by its constitutional and liberal institutions, by its industry, by its situation and facilities of communication, and by the residence which it offers to numerous strangers, renders it of the highest importance that the Popedom, which reigns there up to this day, almost without control, as in one of its strongholds, should be energetically and unceasingly combated on the spot, by means of the sword of the Spirit, the word of God, by all the disciples of Christ who have at heart the temporal and spiritual welfare, not of Belgium only, but of all Europe.

BOXES OF CLOTHING, intended for the Missions of the Board, may be sent to the Mission House, or to any of the Agents of the Board; and should be preceded, or accompanied, by a written statement of the source whence they came, and of the value of their contents in detail.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY is published monthly for the Board of Foreign Missions, at fifty cents a year for five copies of the newspaper edition to the address of one person, postage included; and at twenty-five cents a year for a copy of the pamphlet edition. Copies of the pamphlet edition, when desired, are sent free to donors of five dollars and upwards, and to ministers whose churches contribute to the funds of the Board. Address, "The Foreign Missionary," Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

Postage on the Newspaper Foreign Missionary.—This paper is under 300 square inches in size. The postage, payable quarterly in advance, is—for 10 copies, per quarter, under 50 miles, 3½ cents; under 300 miles, 6¼; under 1000 miles, 9⅜; under 2000 miles, 12½.

☞ As the postage cannot be prepaid at New York, let it be deducted according to the above rates, when remittances are made to pay for the paper. Thus the price is—fifty cents for five copies, postage paid.

OVERLAND LETTERS.—Letters for the Overland Mail, to India, Siam, and China, should reach the Mission House in time for the steamer nearest the first of each month. Postage: assessed according to weight, at the rate from New York of forty-five cents for half an ounce. This may be paid by sending post-office stamps to the Mission House.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—The Board is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. The corporate name to be used is—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF ALEXANDER SYMINGTON, Esq.,

LATE VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

But a few months since we were called upon to notice the decease of the venerable President of the Board of Publication, the Rev. Archibald Alexander, D. D. How little did we then imagine that in so short a time we should also announce the death of our beloved and efficient Vice-president, Alexander Symington, Esq. But it is even so. Our friend, Christian brother, and fellow-labourer, has been called away from the toils and trials of his earthly pilgrimage, to the rest of his eternal home—he has finished the battle of this life, and gone up to the victory of the life to come.

In our opinion, the Presbyterian Church has seldom lost a more valuable layman, than was this brother, who has just been carried to his long resting-place in the grave. Long before our own removal to this city, we had heard of him as a successful Philadelphia merchant, and been familiar with his name as a member of the church courts and of the Boards. On our arrival here, to enter upon our duties in connection with the Board, he was one of the first to meet us with a welcome, and with a cordiality and efficiency of co-operation in carrying out the plans of the institution with which he had been so long connected, which he was too modest then to promise, but which his constant, cheerful, and often difficult labours for successive years have made abundantly manifest. Week after week we had been accustomed to meet with him around the table of our Executive Committee. Often in the intervals between these meetings, would he come into our office, and with his smiling countenance, wise counsels and kind words, cheer us amidst the onerous labours connected with the affairs of this branch of the Church's benevolent operations. He was present at the meeting of the Executive Committee the Tuesday before his death, looking as well as ever in his life. We saw him on his way to church on Sabbath morning, walking slowly, on account of some suspected disease of the heart, and on Monday morning the tidings came that he was no more. He died almost instantly, whilst engaged in conversation with a relative in his own house. He had met with his children at breakfast and around the family altar that morning as usual. His departure was sudden, but it was unquestionably safe.

Born of Scotch parentage, he was early instructed in the principles of the gospel, and that system of truth held by the Presbyterian Church. He had been for many years an invaluable elder in the Scots church, of which the Rev. Mr. Macklin is pastor. The late Solomon Allen, Dr. A. W. Mitchell, and himself, were the three laymen most efficient in organizing the Board of Publication, and who, indeed, in connection with their clerical co-labourers, gave it being. The amount of time and labour they expended, in laying the foundations, and in afterwards helping on the superstructure of a great institution such as this, no one can fully estimate who has not known from experience something of the numerous, complicated, and often perplexing details of such an organization. But what he did is known on high. His memorial is with the God and Saviour in whose presence he now is. He has rested from his labours and his works will long follow him; and in the remembrance of such a life, he has left to the Church an eloquent exemplification of what a Christian layman, content with successful accumulations, and ready to retire from business and devote himself to the interests of his Master's kingdom can do; and in such remembrances, too, he has left an incomparably richer legacy for his bereaved orphan children, than all the wealth the world could give. May we be made wiser and better by such examples as speak to us from his life, and by such Providences as appeal to us from his sudden and affecting death.

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

The fiscal year of the Board of Publication closes with the last day of the present month. From present indications, our report to the General Assembly will show that through the favour of a kind Providence we have enjoyed another year of prosperity. But in order to come out clear of debt in our colportage department we greatly need additional funds. Will not individuals and churches, where contributions have not already been made during the current year, send us their generous donations in time to reach our Treasury before the first of April?

A MUSICAL EXPLANATION.

To our respected brother who understands us to have made an assault upon certain systems of musical notation, in the brief paragraph which announced the anticipated speedy completion of the Assembly's Book of Church Music, we beg leave to say, that he has entirely misapprehended us. Indeed, so far from intending to enter the arena for a musical controversy, we did not even know to what he alluded, until we referred to the article again. Our simple object was to describe the book, and in so doing it seems that our opinion was inadvertently expressed as to the merits of the "round notes." We very frankly confess that our musical knowledge is very rusty, and that what was said was probably the result of a vague impression made in our singing-school days. Our very limited musical education was commenced with notes of several mathematical shapes. Learning to sing with that system was very easy and comfortable. Having a tolerable ear, we "caught" the tunes, and as the shape of the notes told their names, our mind was free from any distraction, and we were left to the unmolested enjoyment of the music. Afterwards, however, we were introduced to the round notes, and told that the other sort were "block-head notes," and with much toil set ourselves to trying to learn why precisely the same sort of note should be called fa on one line and la on the next; or why the same note on the identical line or space, should be called fa in one line, la in another, and sol in the third,—all which was very confusing, not at all conducive to enjoying the singing at the time, and, as we generally caught the tune by ear, with us entirely a work of supererogation. We have thus given our brother frankly, our own experience with both sorts of notes, and are quite sure he will see that we could not consistently with our musical reminiscences, accept his challenge to a discussion which would require us to make war on the family of notes which constituted our first and most pleasant helps in acquiring the mysteries of singing according to science. We very much regret what was so inadvertently said in our previous article.

Mr. Hastings is an elder in one of the Dutch Reformed churches in the city of New York.

SUPERINTENDENT OF COLPORTAGE.

For a year or two past, brethren in the Synod of Georgia have been urging us to appoint a Superintendent of Colportage for their bounds, whose duty it would be to seek out colporteurs and fields for them, to collect funds for their support, and use all proper means for promoting the Board's interests in the district assigned him. We have now the pleasure of announcing that the Rev. J. Y. Alexander, of Newnan, Georgia, has been appointed Superintendent of Colportage for Georgia, Florida, and such portions of South Carolina as brethren in that State may wish him to occupy. Mr. Alexander enters immediately on his work. His address for the present will be Newnan, Georgia. We shall hope for greatly enlarged results from this arrangement.

A PASTOR'S OPINION OF THE "SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR."

We mentioned last month, in speaking of the success of the Visitor, that thirty thousand copies were then printed. The tide of prosperity on which this little paper has been riding, seems to be still rising. We are now printing thirty-one thousand copies; may the increase continue to be at least a thousand a month. The following extract from the letter of a highly esteemed pastor, may serve as a sample of the testimonies we receive as to the value of the Visitor.

You will allow me to add that I anticipate much good among the youth of my congregation from the circulation of the Visitor. It is the only paper of the kind that I can cordially approve. Only maintain its character for sound doctrine and pious sentiment and I am sure it will win its way into all our churches. It is in truth a Sabbath paper, and one does not have to stop and question the propriety of reading article after article to his children, on this sacred day, as I have often done with other papers of a kindred character.

THE HIGHLAND KITCHEN MAID.

We are sure our readers will thank us for giving them the following extract from one of the sketches from "Ears of the Spiritual Harvest"—a book recently issued by the Board of Publication. The cut on the opposite page represents the good pastor, Mr. M'Phail, breasting a storm, on one of his missions of mercy.

Our story, however, dates far on in the month of May, a few days before the meeting of the General Assembly of the Scottish Establishment, to which Mr. M'Phail was proceeding, as a commissioner from the presbytery of Chanonry. Travelling at the rate of from thirty to forty miles a-day, his journey would occupy a full week, and would frequently oblige him to pass the night in the then by no means comfortable inns upon the Highland road. It will not surprise any of my readers to be told that it was Mr. M'Phail's invariable practice to hold family-worship in these houses, and to insist upon the attendance of every individual inmate. Resting one night at a little inn amid the wild hills of Inverness-shire, he summoned, as usual, the family together for devotional purposes. When all had been seated, the Bibles produced, and the group were waiting the commencement of the devotions, Mr. M'Phail looked around him and asked whether every inmate of the house were present. The landlord replied in the affirmative.

"All?" again inquired the minister.

"Yes," answered the host, "we are all here; there is a little lassie in the kitchen, but we never think of asking her in, for she is so dirty that she is not fit to be seen."

"Then call in the lassie," said Mr. M'Phail, laying down the Bible which he had opened; "we will wait till she comes."

The landlord apologized. The minister was peremptory. "The scullery maid had a soul, and a very precious one," he said; "if she was not in the habit of being summoned to family-worship, all the greater was her need of joining them now." Not one word would he utter until she came. Let her, then, be called in.

The host at length consented; the kitchen girl was taken in to join the circle, and the evening worship proceeded.

After the devotions were concluded, Mr. M'Phail called the little girl aside, and began to question her about her soul and its eternal interests. He found her in a state of the most deplorable ignorance.

"Who made you?" asked the minister, putting the usual introductory question to a child.

The girl did not know.

"Do you know that you have a soul?"

"No; I never heard that I had one. What is a soul?"

"Do you ever pray?"

"I don't know what you mean."

"Well, I am going to Edinburgh, and I will bring you a little neck-kerchief if you promise to say a prayer that I will teach you; it is very short—there are only four words in it—'Lord, show me myself;' and if you repeat this night and morning I will not forget to bring you what I have promised."

The little kitchen-maid was delighted; a new piece of dress was a phenomenon she had rarely witnessed. The idea was enchanting: the condition was easy; the promise was given with all the energy of young expectancy; and Mr. M'Phail, after explaining, no doubt, the meaning and force of the prayer, retired to rest, and next morning resumed his journey.

My object is not to write a life, either in whole or in part, of Mr. M'Phail, otherwise it might be interesting to ascertain the precise date of his journey, so as to discover the character and proceedings of the Assembly in which he sat. Every one, however, must be aware that the visit of a Ross-shire minister to the metropolis is a sort of triennial era, even in these days of easy transport. This call, and that commission, have to be executed; and, if one be known to possess the least degree of the obliging in his character—satagit rerum—he has his hands full. Nevertheless Mr. M'Phail did not forget the Highland inn and its little menial; but, relying upon the fulfilment of her promise, purchased the trifling present that was to make her happy.

Again, then, we accompany the devoted minister to the wild mountains of Badenoch, and at the close of a mild June evening reach the lonely Highland inn. The white pony, now sleek and shining with metropolitan fare and a whole fortnight's idleness, is safely housed, and the minister, ere he permits supper to touch his lips, summons the household to the worship of God. Again, however, the little kitchen-maid is absent, and again he inquires the cause. But it is now a different reason that withholds her.

"Indeed, sir," replied the hostess to Mr. M'Phail's inquiry, "she has been of little use since you were here; she has done nothing but sit and cry night and day, and now she is so weak and exhausted that she cannot rise from her bed."

"O my good woman, let me see the girl immediately," exclaimed the minister, instantly divining the reason of her grief.

He was conducted to a hole beneath the stairs, where the little creature lay upon a straw bed, a picture of mental agony and spiritual distress.

"Well, my child," said the amiable man, affectionately addressing her, "here is the neck-kerchief I have brought you from Edinburgh; I hope you have done what you promised, and said the prayer that I taught you."

"O no, sir, no, I can never take your present; a dear gift it has been to me: you taught me a prayer that God has answered in an awful way; he has shown me myself, and O what a sight that is! Minister, minister, what shall I do?"

Of course, the conversation is to be understood as having been carried on in Gaelic. This will account for the correctness of the language used by the little girl, for in Gaelic not even a child commits a grammatical error.

I need not say how rejoiced the faithful man of God was to see that the Spirit of Jehovah had been dealing with this young soul, and that, although still operating as a "spirit of bondage" in the production of a true, though partial and imperfect faith, there were yet such hopeful signs that, ere long, he would exhibit himself as "the Spirit of adoption," generating in her heart a full and perfect trust, and leading her to cry, "Abba, Father." But how reconcile such an experience with the strange opinion which denies to the Holy Ghost any special agency in conversion, giving to each of the human race a certain modicum of influence, to be communicated only through the medium of the word? Whence had this child derived in the course of little more than a fortnight, and through the use of such a prayer, this experimental acquaintance with her own heart, far deeper and more correct than the author of "Know thyself" ever attained? Read the word she could not; sympathy of feeling in the careless household was out of the question; whence, then, that mysterious ray which all at once illumed the darkened chamber of the soul, and as it shot its clear strong light through the once benighted understanding, exposed in all its barrenness the deformity of self? It was the Spirit of God that wrought independently of the word, coming into "warm contact" with her living soul in a manner altogether special, and hitherto unknown by herself or a carnal world. It was "the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but she knew him, for he dwelt with her and was in her." On no other principle can we account for the fact, that one, but a few weeks ago so totally ignorant that she had asked "What is a soul?" should now have been able to pursue that most difficult and severe of all subjective mental processes—the reflex inspection of self. Now, this is no fictitious case got up for the occasion; "I tell but what was told to me;" but who that reads it can deny the absolute necessity of a special agency and a personal and immediate indwelling of the blessed Spirit, sent forth into the soul in answer to the prayer—"Lord, show me myself?"

After some further conversation, Mr. M'Phail opened up to the distressed girl the great gospel method of salvation, and closed the interview by recommending the use of another, and equally short and comprehensive prayer: "Lord, show me thyself." Next morning the minister was once again on his way to his still distant home. But he had "cast his bread upon the waters;" did he ever "find it again after many days?"

Many years had passed since this memorable journey, and the vigorous and wiry minister who could ride forty miles a day for a week without intermission was now become an old and feeble man, worn out in his Master's service, scarcely any longer "spending," because already "spent," for Christ. One day his servant intimated that a stranger was desirous to speak with him. Permission being given, a respectable matronly woman was ushered into the study, carrying a large parcel in her hand.

"You will scarcely know me, Mr. M'Phail," said the person, with a modest and deferential air.

The minister replied that he certainly did not recognize her.

"Do you remember a little scullery maid at —— inn, in whose soul you once took a deep interest upon your journey to Edinburgh?"

Mr. M'Phail had a perfect recollection of the events.

"I was that little girl; you taught me two short but most expressive prayers. By the first I was brought to feel my need of a Saviour; by the second I was led to behold that Saviour himself, and to view Jehovah in the character of a reconciled God and Father in Christ. I am now respectably married, and comfortably settled in life; and although the mother of a numerous family, have travelled far to see your face, and to cheer you, by telling with my own lips the glorious things which, by your means, the Lord has been pleased to do for my soul."

Before parting with Mr. M'Phail she entreated his acceptance of the parcel she carried, which contained a large web of linen of her own spinning, made long before, for the purpose of being presented to the blessed and beloved old man, should she ever be permitted to see his face in the flesh once more.

She lived for many years, not only a consistent character, but an eminently holy Christian.

Varieties.

New Bible House.—The American Bible Society is about erecting new and more spacious buildings, rendered necessary by their increasing operations. A large plot of ground near Astor Place, equal to eleven lots, has been secured, which borders 230 feet on Ninth street, 200 on Fourth Avenue, and 76 on Third Avenue. It is proposed to commence the new building as soon as possible, and have it ready for occupancy by the fall. It will be of brick, five stories high, and cover nearly all of the ground.

The French Protestants have missionaries in Algiers, which are not without success, especially among the Spanish Romanists there. The French Government now forbids every kind of colportage, even that of the Bible. One of the missionaries wrote to the Government official, requesting permission to sell Bibles, which was decidedly refused. But, in spite of the interdict, a colporteur at his own risk, sold, in ten days, one hundred and seventy-five francs worth of Bibles and Testaments, and he had met with no resistance. The Spanish population are hungry for the word of Life.

Methodist Episcopal Book Concern, South.—It is proposed in some of the Louisiana papers, that the funds, which will come into the possession of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by the recent favourable decision of the suit of the Southern division of the Church vs. the Church North, be used in the erection of an extensive book concern at Jackson, Louisiana, in the immediate vicinity of Centenary College.

Darkness in Constantinople.—Constantinople has a population of about five hundred thousand souls. There is not a lamp in that great city, nor a name to any of the streets; neither is there a post-office, or a mail route throughout all Turkey. They have thousands of useless dogs, but no bells—the Moslems abominating the sound of a bell.

The Christian Religion is professed by about one-third of the human race. Of the 260,000,000 of the population of Europe, all but about 10,000,000 are nominal Christians.

Steamboats and Railroads.—From a report lately made to the United States Senate, it appears that 955,100 passengers were carried on the steamboats which navigate the Hudson, during the past year. In the last half of the year, 517,418 passengers were carried on the Hudson River Railroad, while in an unfinished state, and not opened through till October. This result is equal to an average of 3276 passengers per day, or more than a million per annum. It thus exceeds the number said to be carried on all the steamboats.

Newspapers.—It costs the people of the United States $15,000,000 a year for newspapers and other periodicals, and these newspapers and periodicals are as essential to their safety and happiness as the roofs over their heads, and more so than the army and navy, which costs twice as much.

Sunday Work Discontinued.—The editors and proprietors of the Richmond (Virginia) Whig, Inquirer, Times, and Republican, have resolved to discontinue work in their respective offices on the Sabbath. The Typographical Society thereupon passed a resolution determining not to work on the Sabbath, day or night, under any circumstances, for any employer in Richmond. All credit is due to the Richmond press for having taken this decided stand for the Sabbath.

What one Man has done.—From the Temperance press in Albany, while sustained by E. C. Delavan, Esq. 13,626,260 temperance documents were distributed in this and other countries, at a cost of $123,334.75. During the last twenty-two years, the number of documents sent out under his direction is believed to be about 20,000,000, nearly half of which were distributed gratuitously.

Indians in the United States.—The last census shows that the entire number of Indians inhabiting all parts of our country, is 418,000. Of this number, 40,000 is the estimated number of those inhabiting the unexplored territories; 24,100 are the Indians of Texas; 92,130, belong to the tribes living in New Mexico; 32,231 are in California; 22,733 are in Oregon; 11,600 in Utah. Many of the New Mexican Indians are civilized, and have fixed habitations and towns.

German Literature.—It is astonishing to witness the prolific issues of the German press. We see it stated in foreign papers, that nearly five thousand new works have been issued in Germany in one half year! Of these 106 treat of Protestant Theology; 62 of Roman Catholic Theology; 36 of Philosophy; 205 of history and bibliography; 102 of languages; 64 of the theory of music and the arts of design; 168 of the fine arts in general; 48 of popular writings; 28 of mixed sciences; and 18 of biography.

Gutta Percha Pens.—Among the most recent inventions are gutta percha pens, which are stated to be far more durable than goose quills, and more available than the metallic materials.

Poison of the Rattle Snake.—It is a curious fact, recently demonstrated, that if a tree be inoculated with the poison of a rattlesnake, the leaves will wither.

Queen Victoria not a Queen.—The London Times remarks that fourteen noblemen and gentlemen compose in reality the government of the great kingdom of Great Britain. This excludes Queen Victoria.

Upas Tree on the Isthmus.—The Panama Star states that a man named James Linn, while hunting on the Gorgona road, grew tired and lay down to sleep under a tree. On waking he found his limbs and body swelling, and death soon ensued. The Star says that a tree grows on the Isthmus, under which cattle avoid eating or ruminating.

Intoning the Liturgy.—It is said that the Archbishop of Canterbury is determined not to license any curate in his diocese without a pledge that he will forbear to "intone" the prayers.

Poisonous Tallow.—A young man lately came to his death in Hull, (England), through putting tallow from a candle on a pimple that was upon his face—mortification ensued, which ended in his death, although the affected part was cut away. The use of tallow, for such purposes, is mostly dangerous, as arsenic is much used by the tallow chandlers for the purpose of improving the appearance of the candles.

STATISTICS AND POSTAGE FOR THE MINUTES OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

As the time for the spring Presbyterial meetings is approaching, we would call the attention of Stated Clerks, Pastors, and Church Sessions, to the great importance of full and accurate statistical reports. The tables appended to the Minutes of the Assembly have been barely an approximation to the truth, owing to the unaccountable carelessness and neglect of those whose business it is to furnish reports. Will not Presbyteries take this important matter in hand?

We would also call attention to the necessity of larger contributions to the Contingent Fund of the Assembly. Every Presbytery ought to pay in a considerably larger amount than will purchase their quota of the Minutes, in order to defray the current expenses of the Assembly, and also to provide the means for prepaying the postage. On this latter point it is indispensable that something be done.

TO-MORROW! TO-MORROW!

FROM AN UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPT BY THE REV. DANIEL BAKER, D. D.

One day the minister heard that his neighbour was sick, very sick! What if he dies in his present state? thought the minister. He is an amiable man, a generous man; in many points of character a most excellent man; but, by his own confession, he is no Christian—has never felt the power of God's converting grace upon his soul. Suppose he should die in his present condition! I must go and see him. Accordingly, taking his hat and cane, he called to see him. He knocked at the door; a servant opened it. "How is Mr. K?" "Very sick, sir, please to walk in." The minister, led by the servant, entered the chamber. The curtains were down, and the room was darkened; and, on the bed, there lay his neighbour, scorched by a raging fever. Taking him kindly by the hand, "How do you find yourself this morning?" said the minister. "Very sick, sir," replied the neighbour. After a while the minister, in a subdued tone of voice, said, "Do you think, my dear sir, that you have made your peace with God? Should God see proper now to take you away, are you ready to go?" "Oh, sir," said the sick man, interrupting him, "I am in agony! Please to excuse me. Oh, my head! my head! I cannot talk to you now. Please to call again." "When shall I call?" "To-morrow," said the sick man. The faithful man of God burst into tears, and retired. The next day he called again. The knocker was muffled, a bad sign; knocking gently at the door, the servant opened it. "How is Mr. K.?" "No better, sir, please to walk in." The minister entered the chamber, and there was his neighbour, still upon a bed of sickness. "My dear neighbour," said the minister, "how do you do this morning?" There was no response! The man was delirious now, and spoke in broken sentences, incoherently. The minister, leaning upon the top of his cane, looked at his neighbour, and the silent tear trickled down his cheek. He was about to rise up and go away, but the wife of the sick man exclaimed, "Oh, my dear pastor, won't you pray for my husband?" The prayer was offered, and the minister, taking the hand of his neighbour, said, "My dear friend, good-bye." Still there was no response. Alas! the sick man knew not that his wife was weeping at his bedside, and that his pastor had been praying for him. As the man of God was retiring, the affectionate wife followed him to the door; and, in parting, said, "My dear pastor, I am in great affliction; will you not be so kind as to call again?" "Madam," said he, "when do you think I had better call?" And she said, "To-morrow!" Oh, that to-morrow, that to-morrow! The associations were more than he could bear, and the man of God went weeping all the way returning to his home. The next morning he called again. The knocker was still muffled. He tapped gently at the door. The servant opened. "How is Mr. K.?" "He is said to be worse, sir." "I would like to see him." "You can't, sir! The doctor has just left, and he has given the strictest orders that nobody should enter the room but those who are waiting upon him. But here is Mrs. K." "Madam, how is your husband?" "Oh, my dear pastor," replied she, bursting into tears, "he is worse; I fear much worse!" "I would like to see your husband, madam, a few moments." "I would be glad to have you see him, too," replied the afflicted woman, "but our physician says that the crisis is come, and that the slightest excitement may prove fatal: but the doctor said that if his patient revived, he might be able to see you to-morrow!" Having received a message about the going down of the sun, that his neighbour was still in a critical state, and too weak to be seen, the minister could scarcely sleep that night, so anxious was he about the salvation of his neighbour. The next morning, gathering his hat and cane, he went early, to make at least some inquiry. Tapping again gently at the door, the servant opened. "How is Mr. K.?" was the anxious inquiry. "Oh, sir," replied the servant, "he is dead!" "DEAD!" exclaimed the minister, "DEAD?" "Yes, sir, he died this morning at four o'clock." "God have mercy!" the minister was about to say, but it flashed upon him—it is too late now!

Dear procrastinating sinner! It is enough—I beseech you, don't say to-morrow any more! To-morrow! It may be too late for ever! To-morrow's sun may shine upon your grave! Once lost, you are lost for ever! "Be wise to day! 'Tis madness to defer."

For the Home and Foreign Record.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

To Christ, his saints and angels, the day of judgment will be a day of triumph. The Lord will then make a show of his enemies openly. They that would not kiss the Son shall be dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. In his triumph all his saints and angels shall share and glory. The most timid of his people shall "have boldness in the day of judgment." I never could have believed that, if the Bible had not said so.

To the wicked, the same day will be full of despair. They will cry to the rocks and to the mountains, "Fall on us, and cover us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Was more dreadful despair ever portrayed?

The day of judgment will be the last day. So Christ calls it. So inspired writers often teach. After it, "time shall be no longer." No more shall duration be measured by the alternations of day and night, or of the seasons; and there shall be no succession of seconds, minutes, hours, days, months, or years, as now. All beyond the judgment day is boundless, fathomless eternity. This last day will leave an ineffaceable impression on all minds. None will ever forget what they shall have seen and heard and felt on that day. The great days of earth may fade from the memories of saints and sinners, but this last great day shall never, never, never perish from the recollection of any.

It may well be doubted whether any man thinks as much as he should, of the judgment day. Justin Martyr said, "I seem always to be hearing these words: Awake, ye dead, and come to judgment." A modern writer, speaking of the same day, says: "It would seem as if Christ was always thinking of it. How frequently he speaks of it, and never but with the deepest solemnity." The apostles seem to have had every thing associated with it. One expresses gratitude for kindness and hospitality, by praying that his host may "receive mercy of the Lord in that day."

"Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."

Reader, are you prepared for your last account? Have you made peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ? Is all your hope in the precious blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ? Nothing of your own can save you in that day. It will burn as an oven. It will try your works and your hopes as by fire. If you have built on Christ and on him alone, then hold fast your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward.

But if you are yet in your sins, then be persuaded to "flee for refuge to the hope set before you in the gospel." "He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." Nor can you be in too much haste, or too much in earnest in this weighty matter. It is your life. "Behold, the Judge standeth before the door." And he says, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according to his work."

PACIFIC MISSIONS.—KIND OF MINISTERS NEEDED.

Interesting and encouraging letters have been received from California and Oregon of very late date. The importance of supplying these Pacific States with an able, an energetic, and evangelic ministry, we are happy to know, is becoming daily more impressed upon our Church. The attention of the students in our Theological Seminaries is in certain instances earnestly turned to this distant field, and not a few of our settled ministers are pondering the question of a removal there. But what kind of ministers do we need? An important question and one frequently asked. We proceed to answer it upon information gathered from conversation with ministers and others who have been in those States, and from correspondence and the various sources opened through the channels of commerce, government agencies, reports, and so on.

Negatively—ministers are not needed of impaired constitutions, or of decidedly feeble health. The reasons are too obvious to require any statement of them. Ministers are not needed who cannot succeed in the older States—Ministers settled over small congregations, or having no settlements at all, who hope by going to California or Oregon to do better, and be more acceptable and useful. As a general rule, they who cannot succeed in one section of the country, will not in another; they who cannot succeed in the older settled States, with all the peculiar advantages of such a location, will not in real missionary fields. The fault is not in places, but in the men who occupy them. They themselves require the change. Removing, they carry their entire characters and habits; their want of industry, energy, perseverance, devotion, resolution, self-denial, and want also of a faculty of adaptation to times, and circumstances, and society; and how can they succeed? It is in the ministry as it is in farming. One man grows rich on a farm where another man has been starved out! The starving man moves for richer lands and finds them, but alas! he brings all his laziness, his carelessness, his procrastination—in a word, all his bad habits and bad management, and is no better off than when he occupied the old homestead! Such kind of ministers cannot succeed.

Ministers are not needed who are moved to seek these distant lands—perhaps unconsciously to themselves—yet truly and in great measure for the purpose of bettering their temporal affairs. Ministers are but men; they are but partially sanctified men, and may be led away by the allurements of ease, and of competency, and of wealth, for themselves and their families. Going to California and Oregon, they court, they enter into temptation. The secret idolatry of the heart is fostered, opportunity is given for its development, and presently the men of God decline in spiritual zeal, in spiritual labours; their distinctive character is lost, and they become of the world! This is, we have been assured, no imagination, but in some cases sober truth!

Nor do we need ministers of a dry, stiff, phlegmatic, impracticable deportment; expecting all things and all men to be just such things and just such men as they have been accustomed to. Ministers who cannot preach without pulpit and paper; of poor extemporary powers, and unable to converse and argue with men except in a magisterial, bookish way. Who cannot get their feet wet; nor sleep in an open house; nor eat whatever is set before them; nor be at their ease with all classes and characters of men: who cannot deny themselves, and are easily discouraged and always complaining.

But positively, ministers are needed who would be good ministers anywhere. Men of ordinary scholarship and ability; with an aptness and willingness to teach and to preach in season and out of season, with or without paper; having the power of adaptation to times, places, persons, and circumstances. Who know how to work, and are willing to work; full of love to the Redeemer and the souls of men, and devoted to the upbuilding of his kingdom, and determined, as much as in them lies, by the good hand of the Lord upon them, so to do. The more eminent they are in these qualifications, of course the better. The inhabitants of California and Oregon are men—neither less nor more; and such as we are accustomed to meet with all over our country, though under fewer restraints, and forming a society more mixed and evil than we commonly find in the older States, with honourable exceptions, however, in places, here and there. Now the character and qualifications that would give a minister success east of the Allegheny mountains, will almost to a certainty give him success west of the Rocky mountains.

The Board has been faithfully warned and desired by the brethren in the Pacific field—who well know the trials, and labours, and dangers, and the work to be performed there—to send only such ministers as promise usefulness; they say they would be glad to welcome brethren of character, religious and intellectual, reliable: and if of some age (not too old) and experience, so much the better.

The following extracts of letters will be read with peculiar interest, and stimulate the churches to pray for our infant Zion in that far-off land, and to contribute the means for sending and sustaining more missionaries there.

Rev. Mr. Williams writes from San Francisco under date of January 31st.

"We are expecting the arrival of the Rev. Mr. McCoy of Tennessee, some time in March next. We shall then have in California six ordained ministers of our branch of the Presbyterian Church. Thus, with the Presbytery of Oregon, we may be constituted into a Synod!

"The object of my present writing is, however, not to invite attention to the want of a Synodical organization, but rather of more ministers, according to our former earnest entreaties.

"I mentioned in a former letter that it was my wish to make a beginning in the creation of a missionary fund for California. That beginning was made on the evening of the first Sunday of the present year. The collection was fifty dollars. Tomorrow evening a second collection will be made for the same object. It is hoped this attempt may grow to something, and at least encourage and stimulate our friends abroad to give us of their personal service."

Rev. Mr. Robe writes from Oregon under date of January 15th.

"Immediately after my arrival in this territory, I addressed you by letter, and have since been expecting a reply, but have yet received none. I arrived here in very destitute circumstances, on account of losses on the plains, and was compelled to engage a school. Having selected the field I deemed most promising for ministerial labours, I itinerated as much as possible, and taught in the meantime during the week. My school having now closed, I am at a little more leisure for those duties in which I would much prefer spending my whole time.

"The field which I am attempting to occupy is the upper or northern part of the Willamette valley. I am forty miles above Salem, the present seat of government, and about the same distance from the Calapoora mountains, which separate this valley from the Umpqua. The climate and soil of this region are peculiarly inviting. Whilst I write, it is as warm as April in the States, and the earth is clothed with abundant herbage.

"Our Presbyterial report, transmitted to you by Mr. Geary, will give you the general ecclesiastical view of this territory. Almost all denominations are here represented, and few have fewer members than our own. Whilst our Church is so much stronger in the States than the Cumberland Presbyterians, yet here they have, I believe, nine ministers, and communicants proportionably. We could enumerate other denominations, of whom the same general fact is true. This arises from the fact that the most western States, particularly Missouri, have emigrated here principally; hence the denominations which flourish most there, are here most numerous. Difficulties of various kinds present themselves in this field; denominational strifes to prepossess the various fields, a spirit of proselytism, the sparseness of the population and houses to be obtained for holding meetings, added to general worldly-mindedness and indifference about the gospel, make it difficult and somewhat trying to the gospel minister. But shall we be discouraged? It is as we expected. In this field there is a little Presbyterianism. We contemplate organizing a little church shortly. It will be very small. But we wish to go forward. How happy for us if, with the coming emigration, a few families of real Presbyterians would come and settle with us! If the eastern States, where our Church is numerous, knew as much of this country as the western do, then would we hope that such would be the fact.

"I feel deeply the want of books left behind me and lost; we hope, however, to be able to obtain a small church library when we organize, which will be some advantage to me. We hope that your churches on the highly favoured eastern shore of our common country, will not forget us on their western shore. Especially we beg an interest in your petitions at a throne of heavenly grace."

Rev. Mr. Thompson writes from Clatsop Plains, Oregon, December 26th, 1851.

"We had two objects in our recent visit in the upper Willamette, which was protracted to some ten weeks from our field of labour. One was the constitution of the Oregon Presbytery; the other was to take my wife and children on a visit to her father in the Willamette valley, some seventy-five miles above Oregon city.

"From our last report to the present time, (absence included) our services have been as usual, preaching every Sabbath, succeeded by the Sabbath-school. We should have other religious meetings much more frequently, if the few families in our church were not so far apart. The families on either extreme are some ten or twelve miles distant from each other.

"The annual meeting of our Bible Society was held yesterday (Christmas day) in the Presbyterian church. It was a very interesting meeting and well attended. Several addresses and many remarks were made which manifested great zeal and deep interest in disseminating the word of life in these ends of the earth. During the past year about one hundred and thirty dollars were subscribed, of which amount I believe one hundred have been paid into the treasury. The Clatsop County Bible Society is auxiliary to the American Bible Society. Two hundred and fifty dollars worth of Bibles and Testaments are now on their way from New York to this society.

"I presume you will have heard before this reaches you, that the Oregon Presbytery was constituted on the 19th of November last, in accordance with the injunction of the General Assembly. This was done at Lafayette, where Mr. Geary resides. So we have at length a second Presbytery on the Pacific, and soon we trust with the blessing of the Lord, we shall have a third, and then a Synod.

"There are a number of places that ought to be occupied by ministers of our denomination, not because we have churches that desire preachers, but because there are a very few Presbyterians in each of these places, and numbers of persons who care little for any kind of preaching. This is truly a missionary field, for there is not a town nor neighbourhood in the territory that is able to support a Presbyterian minister.

"Portland is at present the most flourishing town in Oregon, and presents a very active and business-like appearance. Most of the vessels that enter the Columbia go up as far as this place. Some of them are towed up by the steamer, which makes two trips from Portland to Astoria every week. It is situated on the west bank of the Willamette, about one hundred miles above the mouth of the Columbia. Many think it bids fair to continue to be what it is already, the first commercial place in the territory. Its present population would, I think, fall short of a thousand. The Methodists and Congregationalists have each a minister and house of worship, in which they hold their regular services every Sabbath.

"Oregon City is some twelve miles above Portland, at the Falls of the Willamette. Its natural advantages are great, the falls affording an immense amount of water power, so that it must eventually become a great manufacturing town. Its present population is about the same as Portland. The Congregationalists, Baptists, Methodists, and Catholics have each a stated ministry and houses of worship in this place.

"Salem, more than fifty miles above Oregon city, is quite a flourishing village. It is beautifully situated on the right bank of the Willamette, and its wharf is visited almost daily by the steamers that are constantly plying up and down this fine stream. It is the prospective capital of this territory; indeed, the Legislature is in session there at the present time. It has a population, I should think, of some four or five hundred, and presents a very thriving and prosperous appearance. The Methodist Institute is located here, and this is by far the strongest hold of that denomination in the territory. Here are the residences of a number of their ministers. There are several Presbyterians in and near the town.

"The three places just mentioned promise most encouragement for the settlement of Presbyterian ministers at the present time. Unless Presbyterians should emigrate more largely than heretofore to this country, we are forced to the conclusion that the building up of our churches here will be a slow and tedious work. Who will come into this truly missionary field? However discouraging its present aspect may be, as it regards Presbyterianism, surely our Church will not think of neglecting so important a country. A territory destined in all human probability soon to rank among the foremost of the States, in wealth, enterprise, health, intelligence, and piety. May the 'Lord of the harvest' send such labourers here as he will delight to bless in his own work."

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Acknowledgment to Young Ladies.

We tender our sincere thanks to the "two young ladies," for their generous enclosure in the following note. Perhaps others may emulate their good example.

"We send enclosed, five dollars from our private purse. Hereafter we hope to give something every year. It is a melancholy truth, that we have often spent on trifles, the money we might have given to the Lord. Although our donation is small—every heap is formed of atoms, and this will help to make a larger sum. Besides, the Lord receives according to what we have. FROM TWO YOUNG LADIES.

The following note with a handsome enclosure is from a gentleman of distinguished legal standing in Pennsylvania.

"I enclose you a draft for —— dollars, as a contribution to the Board of Domestic Missions, having for its supervision and cultivation a very extensive field, and for which labourers are required, at an expense beyond the present limited means of your Treasury.

It is to be deplored, that so many of our churches have failed to respond to the calls of aid to this cause, at a time when extended territory and an influx of foreign immigration, with its irreligion, superstition, error and ignorance, demand increased missionary labours and instruction, as the church's instrumentality of reform, under the blessing of Providence, for the saving of souls, the growth of our Christian church, and the prosperity and stability of civil government. Very respectfully."

Fruit in old age—The offering of a Mother in Israel.

"The enclosed New Year's thank-offering from New Jersey is requested to be at the disposal of the Board of Domestic Missions, from one who is completing her eighty-fifth year, and feels that perhaps it is the last she may be permitted to give, and whose fervent prayers daily ascend for the enlargement and prosperity of those Boards whose doings are chronicled in the Home and Foreign Record.

Very respectfully yours."

MOTHERS, LOOK AT THIS!

Illinois.—"We administered the Lord's supper on the first Sabbath of January. Five persons were received on letter, and seven on examination. Of those received, there was the mother and three interesting and intelligent daughters, all baptized at the same time, and together took their seats at the table of the Lord! The services of this communion were deeply interesting, and all appeared affected at what they saw and heard. Others are still thoughtful, and I trust they will be brought from darkness into the light of the gospel of salvation. This accession increases our number to forty-three communicants. Our people feel greatly encouraged, and appear to labour with becoming zeal and fidelity. Our prayer-meetings are well attended, and I think there is considerable interest throughout this community on the subject of religion. I hope and pray it may be greatly increased, and that we may give all the glory to him who died to redeem us from sin." M.

Have you interesting and intelligent daughters? How are you bringing them forward in life? To whom and to what do you dedicate them? Are you for God, or against him? When will you profess Christ before the world, together with your daughters, and then sit down with them at the table of the Lord?

LABOUR FOR, AND TAKE CARE OF THE YOUNG, AND THE CHURCH IS SAFE.

Ohio.—"My greatest discouragement the first four or five years of my labour here in this 'new town,' was, we had no YOUNG society. Here and there a solitary youth was under the control of religious parents, or religious principles. There were hardly enough of these in our church, or in all the churches combined, to say 'we,'—not enough to keep from getting lonesome. But the dancing-room was filled. Now my sitting-room is filled, mostly with precious youth, for Bible class, and several of them are regular and efficient teachers in the Sabbath-school. When I have them around me, I hardly know how to be sufficiently grateful to God, who has given me their attention and affection." T.

THE ELDERS AT WORK, AND THE LORD'S WORK REVIVED.

Georgia.—"H—— church presents some features of deep interest. The elders are ready to meet their obligations in the fear of God. They frequently call the church together on the vacant Sabbaths, and by prayer and exhortation strengthen and encourage one another, and uphold the hands of the minister. My congregations here have been large, very attentive, and solemn. God has in mercy answered the prayers of his children, and refreshed our hearts by the communications of the Holy Spirit. I visit them once a month, and preach sometimes two, and sometimes three days together. Since my last report, two have been added to the church on profession of faith, four or five more are indulging hope, and some fifteen deeply concerned. Concerning many of these last, we may say, as our Saviour said of one, they are near the kingdom of heaven. Nearly all of these are the children of the church. How faithful is our covenant-keeping God!" N.

THE GERMANS.

The following communication from a missionary to the Germans in one of our largest cities, will not only convey a favourable impression of his wisdom, fidelity, and zeal, but also of the excellent opportunity he enjoys of preaching the gospel to his countrymen, and preparing those who have recently arrived among us, to become good and useful citizens in their adopted country. It is the design of the Board of Missions, in obedience to the expressed will of the General Assembly, to do all in its power for the spiritual welfare of this people.

"Two hours every week I devote to give instruction to the children, in my hall, in religious knowledge, according to the Heidelburg Catechism, the old standard of the Germans. About forty children attend these instructions, and as these instructions take place before the prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening, from five to seven o'clock, the greater deal of the parents attend too these hours of instruction, and I find that God is blessing these instructions to parents and children.

Every day I devote some hours to the very important and humble work of visiting German families from house to house, distributing also German tracts and Bibles, where I find it expedient to do so. I distributed in these three months more than 8000 pages of tracts, and six Bibles. In the midst of the month of November, I found a German lying on a sick-bed, suffering very much, and deprived of all necessary comfort. I have helped him, and I found that he was the editor of a very bad German paper, called the Lucifer. I have had the pleasure to hope that the man has come, through my instrumentality, to the knowledge of his sins, to repentance, and I hope that he will become a Christian. He has been one of the most dangerous, unbelieving men; having influence on the German population through his paper. God has changed his heart! The Lord co-operates with us, the Lord visits many of my countrymen in this city.

The association of young men, which has been organized under my care two years ago, is going on very good. Last Sabbath evening we had the anniversary of this society. The object of this association is to bring the German young men together, and make them acquainted with each other, to give them opportunity for reading, conversing, discussing, and singing, and to hear weekly a lecture, which I have given regularly, and thus draw them away from the many temptations to evil with which they are surrounded. This association proves an important means of extending our influence among young men who stand in no connection with the church, and we will bring them under the influence of the gospel by and by. One hundred and thirty young men have been since the beginning under this influence. It was a very interesting service on last Sabbath evening." S.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

A house of worship builded with little aid from abroad, and the plan detailed.

The following valuable and most interesting letter from a missionary of the Board in Iowa, we commend to the perusal of our old and established and contributing churches, that they may see the struggles and devotion of their brethren in the frontier settlements, and rest assured that all they give to the building of churches is accomplishing a vast amount of good to our Zion. A small appropriation from the Church Extension Fund, oftimes accomplishes a great work; a work to bless generations! We commend the perusal also to our churches in wilderness places, that they may see what a true love to the great Shepherd and to his flock, and a dying world, may accomplish; and how, by general contributions, and a patient, persevering, cheerful spirit, a noble enterprise may be brought to completion, without being oppressive to any. The Lord bless this faithful pastor and his generous, willing people, and cause their good example to stimulate others to go and do likewise. If anybody chooses to send us a donation (be it much or little,) for this church, we will have it forwarded immediately.

"Ever since I left the southern part of the State I have deeply regretted that the churches in this northern region are without houses of worship. I believe there are but two houses of this kind (belonging to the Presbyterian Church) north of Iowa City. One of these is at Dubuque and one at Edinburgh or Scotch Grove in Jones county. Such a state of things much more deeply affects the prosperity of the Church than many are ready to believe. Court-houses and school-houses are now almost the only places where the people of God meet for his public worship. In the former, civil investigations unfolding all the darkest pictures of human nature are regularly exhibited—Political haranguers, lecturers on mesmerism, animal magnetism, &c. &c.—Negro songsters, learned pig exhibitors "et omne id genus" claim the court-houses as belonging to the public. And as their special business is to enlighten the public, of course they meet them in their own house. The result is, that sacred reverence for a place of worship which was possessed by him who said, "keep thy foot when thou goest into the house of God," is never felt by those, whether old or young, who are in the habit of worshipping in court-rooms. School-house worship is attended with difficulties of the same kind already recited; besides the additional trouble that old and young, male and female, healthy and infirm, are subjected to the unpleasant necessity of 'riding the rail' during the season allotted to worship. I have been striving to have these evils remedied in the churches with which I labour. One of these will, I trust, have their house up, if not completed, during the coming summer. If you think their plan one that should be recommended to feeble churches, you can make such use of this brief outline as you may think proper. And first, they secured an eligible lot as soon as there was any probability of their being able to build. This should be noted because we could not buy such a lot now for twice, and perhaps thrice the sum we paid for it one year ago. Members of the church then turned out and quarried and hauled rock for the foundation, nearly enough of which we now have on the ground, and not one cent was paid out for this part of the work. The congregation then applied themselves to the work of furnishing wood, for the purpose of burning brick. The yard will be prepared, and the hands furnished for the yard. A competent person has been employed to mould and burn two hundred thousand brick. The surplus brick, we trust, will pretty much meet the expense of making the brick and of laying the walls of the house. One of our elders owns a saw-mill only three miles distant, and he stands pledged to do all a man in his circumstances can do towards furnishing lumber. One or two of the members are carpenters, and their time and skill will be exerted in framing, putting on the roof, &c. This church is one of the feeblest in point of wealth I ever knew, and yet we hope on the above plan to erect a house of no mean appearance, with very little aid from abroad. One friend of Zion, who does not wish a trumpet sounded before him, left us fifty dollars when on a visit here during the winter. Another has authorized us to draw on him for ten dollars as soon as we need that sum. A very few more such friends, together with sufficient energy on the part of our people, will enable us soon to complete a work which will tell on the interests of this church. And we trust the example will be felt by other churches, until the court-house and the school-room shall no more be needed for the public worship of Jehovah. I. S. F."

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

A REMARKABLE ANSWER TO PRAYER.

In a Circular Letter, recently issued to the ministers of our Church in reference to the day of special prayer, and not published in the Record on account of want of space, the following statement occurred.

"In the third place, the blessing of God has in a particular manner followed the observance of the Concert of Prayer for Colleges. In 1850, the revival of religion at Princeton College, as precious a work of grace, perhaps, as any that preceded it, occurred in close connection with the prayers and efforts resulting from the solemn keeping of the last Thursday of February, as recommended by the General Assembly. The remarkable revival at Hanover College, which was in progress during February of last year, received an important impulse by the religious solemnities of the same occasion. Other colleges, as Jefferson, Oglethorpe, Yale, Amherst, have borne witness to the some gracious coincidence. The immediate answer recorded in the experience of the prophet, has been not unfrequently returned to the supplications of God's people, even "whiles they were speaking, and praying, and confessing their sin and the sin of the people Israel, and presenting their supplication before the Lord their God." "It came to pass before they called that God answered, and while they were yet speaking he heard."

We have to record another remarkable instance of God's answer to the prayers of his people. The following notice from the "Southern Presbyterian" will excite lively emotions of praise and gratitude to the Lord of the harvest.

REVIVAL AT OGLETHORPE UNIVERSITY, GA.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAY.

The Psalmist addresses God in this delightful language, "O Thou that hearest prayer!" And how many precious illustrations are afforded to us that Jehovah is a prayer hearing God. The present state of religion in Oglethorpe University is, to the minds of Christians there, a manifest instance of direct answer to prayer.

On the afternoon of the last Thursday of February, the usual literary exercises of the College were suspended, and the Faculty, students, and citizens, assembled in the chapel, to unite in the annual concert of prayer for colleges. Nothing of a remarkable character occurred; there was simply exhibited a respectful attention to the exercises. One of the speakers who conducted the exercises remarked, that though there had been a cold state of religious feeling in the College, yet he had observed an unusual interest was awakened this year in the ecclesiastical bodies all over the land to dedicate this day to prayer for colleges. He was therefore looking with expectation for extraordinary blessings to flow down upon our literary institutions in answer to the prayers of God's people.

The pious students appointed a special prayer-meeting at night in one of the recitation rooms. An unusual number of non-professors were found at the meeting. Whilst they were engaged in singing, prayer, and reading the word, an extraordinary influence descended upon the meeting, and they were all, saint and sinner, melted into tears. One young man expressed his fears that he had no piety, and begged the company to pray for him. Another youth, who had, unknown to the rest, been engaged for months in religious reading and prayer, but all in darkness, obtained a hope of pardon. Others were prostrated under overwhelming conviction of sin. A sunrise prayer-meeting was appointed for the next morning, and a committee waited on the Faculty to obtain their approval of the meeting and their presence at it.

Since that time a daily prayer-meeting has been held, and such other occasional exercises as the state of things seem to call for.

Some twenty students have expressed a hope of being brought from darkness to light. Others are under deep conviction, and almost daily some new convert is found rejoicing in hope. There is a still, but deep and solemn influence, pervading the community, and the prospects seem daily to grow brighter. Let Christians, encouraged by their past experience of the power of prayer, continue to pray for this Institution, the child of the Church—that God would make it a "school of the prophets," and send from it many a faithful labourer into his vineyard, for the fields are white for the harvest, but the labourers are few. The prayer of the prophet, "O LORD, REVIVE THY WORK," let it constantly ascend. Who can tell what God may do for this institution?

A PASTORAL LETTER

TO CANDIDATES FOR THE GOSPEL MINISTRY.

Issued by the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION ROOMS,
Philadelphia, February, 1852.

Dear Brother in Christ:—Among the agencies which it is the privilege of the Board of Education to employ, in endeavouring to advance your best interests, is that of addressing a pastoral letter; and we pray that the Spirit may sanctify the truth he may permit us to bring at this time and in this form to your consideration. The connexion of the preparatory course with your future career, together with some of the responsibilities and duties resulting therefrom, are the topics on which are offered a few brief hints.

I. It is a certain fact that there is connexion between your preparatory and future course in life.

The power of habit proves this connexion; and in this principle of our nature how abiding a strength! Dispositions are now being formed, habits of action nurtured, and a standard of life established, which are to exert lasting and powerful influences. "Father," inquired a child, "what kind of a man am I to be?" "Very much the same kind of a man as you are a boy," was the reply. The habits acquired in early life are prophetic of our future destiny. Exceptions prove the general rule; and the demonstrations of what has been called our second nature possess an authority not easily overthrown. The student rarely becomes a different man from what he was in his early course.

The influence of training throws light upon this same idea. The processes of education are among the most earnest and controlling in the formation of character. How much active influence is at work in academies, colleges, and theological seminaries! The recitations, the prayers, the intercourse of the preparatory period—all its incidents, trials, duties, sins, efforts—are the unconscious occasions of developing and fixing, of exciting and retaining, the traits which are seen throughout the whole future life.

All the analogies of the Divine government conspire to enforce the solemn truth. Is there any connexion between sowing and reaping in the natural world? Not more than between the seed-time of youthful acquisition and the harvest of matured character. The axiom that "eternity depends upon time," includes the influence of early discipline upon after years. Providence would invalidate its laws, if the issues of the preparatory course failed to correspond with the promises and threatenings of its beginning.

Accordingly, experience and observation declare that young men commonly convey with them, through life, the characters formed in the college and seminary. More than twenty years ago, Dr. Miller said, "Mark my words; that young man will never do any thing in the ministry;" and the siftings of a quarter of a century made the sad prophecy a hopeless reality. Who expects to gather grapes from thorns? When did human observation falsify the union between the means and the end, or break up the connexion between causes and their results? The ministers who have left the seminaries of our church and are now engaged in active duties, will ordinarily recognize in their own Christian experience no essential change of general character. There has been improvement, where the elements existed in earlier life; but the progress actually made has not varied materially from what might have been foretold by a shrewd observer of human nature.

II. The certainty of this connexion between the present and the future, suggests the solemn responsibilities resting upon yourself and every student, at this period of his course.

As an individual you have personal responsibilities to improve, to the utmost, all your opportunities. The solemnity of present scenes has an awakening power which should not find you asleep. Every day, every moment, is weaving into the texture of life, forms and materials which will never be wrought out again. You are now deciding the most important questions which will ever occur for your intelligent consideration. Momentous personal interests are at stake both for time and eternity, both as an individual Christian and as a minister of the word. In short, the relation of the present to the future, summons every student to mould his character according to the highest standard of gospel truth.

There are also responsibilities flowing from your relation to the Church. The spiritual welfare of others is depending upon your present aims and acquisitions. If, in the language of Whitefield, "a dead clergy make a dead people," it is no less true that a feeble, inefficient and stand-still clergy, or one that is active, zealous and faithful, will leave characteristics for evil, or for good, on the present, and even future generations. The Church has done much to prepare you for her service, at the institutions whose advantages you have enjoyed, and through the instructors set over you in the Lord; and it is reasonable to expect adequate returns for her parental care. Little do young men realize what the Church is expecting of her candidates, in character and in service. The students of such instructors and of such a Church should be men of no ordinary stamp. Their influence is to be felt far and wide throughout our bounds, not only in their own congregations, but in Presbyteries, Synods and General Assemblies. The whole world, indeed, has an interest in ministers of the gospel. Eight hundred millions of souls will be more or less affected by their spirit, influence, and conduct. Your public responsibilities, therefore, are very great.

The responsibilities of a student in his relation to God's glory should affect his heart. Do you love your Creator, Preserver and Redeemer? Is Christ precious to your soul? Is it your meat and drink to do the will of God and to glorify your Father in heaven? Such is the influence, then, of present efforts upon your future power of serving, that, if remiss now, you will suffer a loss which no tears or zeal can hereafter supply.

Responsibilities, solemn and various, are pressing you to use to the utmost, the privileges and opportunities of your preparatory course.

III. There are two points which, in view of the responsibilities resulting from the relation of the present to the future, seem to require special attention. We refer to Christian character and to the call to the ministry.

1. Christian character pre-supposes a vital union to Christ by faith. Whether this union has been truly formed, and whether, if formed, it is bearing appropriate fruits, are questions, whose present decision has far-reaching results. It is not very likely that a person who goes through his preparatory course, with a hard, impenitent heart, will be undeceived afterwards. What, then, dear young friend, is the ground of hope that your sins are pardoned? Do not, we beseech you, carry the terrific burden of impenitence, or of doubt, into the active scenes of life. In the language of Andrew Fuller, "If it be a matter of doubt with you, whether you be truly converted, far be it from me to endeavour to persuade you that you are so. Your doubts may be well founded, for aught I can tell; and supposing they should be so, the door of mercy is still open. All the blessings of the gospel are freely presented for acceptance to sinners. Sinners, whatever may have been their character, have a complete warrant to receive them; yea, it is their duty to do so, and their great sin if they do not." Now is the time to settle this point, if unsettled. It was a remark of the late Dr. Alexander, that in his judgment, there had been frequently instances of students in the Seminary, who were unconverted. Look well, therefore, to your personal interest in Christ; for without piety the greatest natural gifts are but snares. Whitefield said that "accomplishments in an unsanctified heart only make a man a more accomplished devil." It is awful to enter the ministry without grace; and the more awful, because under such circumstances, so few ever arrive at a knowledge of the truth.

But, if a true child of God, remember that, as your present piety is, in a good degree, to be the measure of your future attainments, it is your duty to aim at greater things. "Work out your salvation with fear and trembling;" "press toward the mark;" be not satisfied with any progress already made. The character of your religion through life will partake of its prevalent spirit now. Let Christ, in the glory of his person, the purity of his example, and the power of his offices, be more frequently in your contemplations. It is not profitable to be engrossed with marks and evidences, to the too great exclusion of a direct communication between the soul and the Saviour. "These," says old Robert Blair, "though in their own place, may, and do, prove useful to our faith and living thereby, yet, if we offer to make all of these, or any of these, the object for our soul to rest or rely upon, in order either to our salvation, our sanctification or outgate from trouble, they are not able to support or bear up the weight." Look to Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; pray fervently; read the Bible attentively; "it is not so much by remembering our past religious experience that we shall obtain satisfaction, as by renewed exercises of grace." It is not an exaggeration to say that, much as the Church needs an increase in the number of her candidates, her greatest want is an increase in the quality of their graces. Endeavour, therefore, to let your light shine in the fervent glow of consistent piety.

2. Every pious man is not called to the ministry. There are persons who keep out of the ministry, who ought to enter in, as well as those who enter in, who ought to keep out. It is indispensable to be "fully persuaded" respecting a call to the ministry by the Spirit of God, before beginning a course of preparation for its duties. And after the preparation has commenced, it is well to re-examine a point, having so important a bearing on private and public interests. What, then, is the ground of your belief that God has called you to the ministry? Are you clearly in the path of duty? On this subject, we beg leave to refer you to a candid and able article in the first volume of "Home, the School and the Church."

If hopefully called to the ministry by the Spirit of God, it is important to examine your gifts and qualifications with particular reference to the fact that these will ever depend materially on the character of your present attainments. How much zeal should be enlisted in equipping yourself thoroughly for the vast work you have undertaken! Latin and Greek and Hebrew are useful only as they discipline and fit you for the understanding of the Scriptures. The age demands more than ordinary mental accomplishments, a greater range and a profounder depth of learning than ever before. But the power of the ministry is, after all, not in the resources of human wisdom, but in the peculiar grace which God only can impart. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, and he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." Is he zealous, apt to teach, and self-denying, are more important questions than does he understand Hebrew and all knowledge? Is he willing to follow Christ, to go any where, to seek not his own, to condescend to all classes, to spend and be spent, to beseech men day and night with tears? Has he a compassionate spirit; does he labour in season and out of season; is he enterprising in his plans of usefulness; does he care for the heathen; is he a friend of education; does he take an enlarged view of the wants of the world; does he feed the lambs; is he a man of prayer? Such questions as these reveal the true power of an ambassador of Christ. And we beseech you not to overlook the divine spirit of your profession in labours to secure its literary accompaniments, however necessary the latter may be. The former is infinitely more vital to your success. And as both are through life to be so closely connected with your present attainments, may you exercise yourself diligently and under the divine guidance, in cultivating the true spirit of one "anointed to preach the gospel to the poor," and the qualifications of one "thoroughly furnished" for his work.

Commending you with Christian affection to the Lord of the harvest,

We are your fellow servants,

C. Van Rensselaer,
Wm. Chester,
In behalf of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church.

"WHO WILL TAKE THE COLOURS?"

Since we last alluded to the numerous deaths among our ministers, others have been summoned from the strife of the battle-field to their eternal rest. No less than thirty-two of our standard bearers have fallen before the foe since the beginning of the ecclesiastical year. Who will take the colours, which their hands can no longer clasp? Who will fill up their places in the army of God's elect?

The Rev. Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, in a funeral discourse on the late Dr. Gunp, has the following remarks which have an application in the numerous bereavements our own Church has experienced:

"Gone to the call, 'Come ye up hither,' they have left an empty place in the church, an empty place in the ranks of its officers, of its praying and faithful members. Oh! that God would persuade others to lift up the banner which they have dropped, and step into the place which their death has left empty. 'Another man to take the colours!' was the cry in one of our regiments on the battle-field: they lay on the ground, and the gallant young ensign bleeding beside them—it was answered, bravely answered. Through the smoke of battle the sun glanced again on the levelled line of muskets, and another volley rang. Again that cry, 'Another man to take the colours!' Stepping forth, one bent him over the dead, loosed the staff from the dead man's fingers, and flung the flag on high in the face of the foe; yet another volley rang—he too, goes down; and a third time the cry rose, terrible above the roar of battle, 'Another man to take the colours!' The Thousand Years are not begun, nor, as those who have entered on Millennial times, do we see Christ's banner floating this day from peaceful towers; it is to be borne up by the arms of faith, and on through the very fire of battle. Over all the field, Christ's cause stands in need of men of might—men of prayer—men that can wield the sword of the Spirit among us, this sad day more than ever."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE PIETY OF THE TEACHER.

It is not only necessary that the matter of instruction should combine in due proportion the religious and the secular, but that the person who communicates instruction should be imbued with the Christian spirit. Mere formalism is an atmosphere of death. Truth must be made impressive by the savour of piety. If the teachers of a nation are worldly-minded, and careless in regard to the duties of personal religion, a system of education may embrace religious topics without having any vitality of spiritual influence. On this subject, we quote a few sentences from an address delivered by Dr. Candlish, of Edinburgh, the Convener of the Education Committee of the Free Church of Scotland.

"As to the kind of teaching which we mean to provide, let me advert to the highest qualification of a teacher of youth—a qualification which can be secured only by the outpouring of the Spirit of God—a qualification, however, which it is our bounden duty to aim at, and to pray for—I refer to personal piety. I am aware of the difficulty of touching upon this topic. I am aware that it is difficult to ascertain the presence of personal piety, or true and living spirituality, in a man's soul. But it is not difficult to lay down a general principle, upon which, so far as human infirmity permits, men are to act. I believe, then, the principle of our scheme to be substantially this:—That the teachers of youth should be as decidedly spiritual men as the ministers of the gospel themselves.

"O, Sir, a great delusion has gone abroad upon this subject, and it has been thought that we could so fence the teaching in our schools—that we could so lay down rules—could so enforce the reading of the word and prayer—that it did not matter what the teacher was. A delusion has gone abroad that our children were safe in these schools because there was a rule that the Bible should be read in them—that they should be opened and closed with prayer, and that the Catechism should be taught. Do I undervalue these securities, Sir? God forbid. I prize them as fences, but as nothing more. Of what avail is it that your children are fenced in with prayer and reading the Bible and the Catechism, if the pasture into which they are fenced is without the blessing of God, and if the shepherd who feeds them is a shepherd who will kill their souls? Sir, I trust we will start with the conviction that the excellence of a school lies in the school-master. Rules are nothing—the man is everything. Tell me what the man is. Is he a man of God, a man of prayer, a man who makes the welfare of his pupils the subject of daily supplication at the throne of grace? Tell me, is your school-master such a man, and I do not care what the rules may be; I place my child without hesitation under such a man. I wish it, then, to be distinctly understood, that, from first to last—in training up our teachers, in putting them to the Normal School, in licensing them, and in getting them appointed to schools, so far as our judgment goes, personal piety will be an indispensable requisite. And I may remind you that it is not human wisdom which avails us here, but, in so far as the instrumentality of man goes, human prayer. We depend upon the prayers of God's people. We know that many make it a business to pray for spiritual pastors; we urge them to pray also for spiritual teachers. Many recognize a duty in the former, but neglect it in the latter. Many pray for us, and for a blessing on our instructions, but few pray for the teachers of their own children, that God would send among the lambs of the flock a shepherd after his own heart."

A GOOD PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

If there be first a willing mind to make education auxiliary, under the superintendence of the Church, to the objects of the Church, difficulties and misgivings would practically be often found less formidable than they at first appeared.

The school, attached to the Presbyterian Church in Squan, N. J., had as few encouragements as could well be imagined. The Church was but recently organized; it is a missionary Church, comparatively small and feeble; and yet the people, with a little aid from abroad, have not only put up a neat and commodious house of worship, but they have recently erected a school-house of their own by its side. The following letter from the Rev. Morse Rowell, who has been instrumental in providence in establishing both the Church and the school, gives an interesting account of the latter.

Squan Village, N. J., February 25, 1852.

Rev. and Dear Sir:—It becomes again my duty and privilege to send a semi-annual report of our Parochial School. Within the last six months we have removed the school into our new Parochial School-building, situated close to our church. As the building is an excellent one, and pleasantly located, the removal has proved highly beneficial to the school. Never before has the school been so flourishing. It has increased in numbers until there are now nearly or quite sixty different scholars. The school is evidently the object of God's favour and tender care. And it has become more and more dear to the patrons. This prosperity is quite remarkable, when we consider that this is quite a poor people and that our school does not receive one cent of public money. God has blessed us, praised be his name. We are full of hope for the future.

The Lord has sent to us an accomplished teacher, in the person of Miss Freeman. She uniformly opens the school with prayer, and reading and expounding a chapter from the Scriptures. She hears recitations in the Catechism twice every week. The scholars are also required to repeat verses of Scripture from memory, on three days of each week. They sing every day at the close of school.

Our school is truly a nursery of sound learning and pure piety; it is a great prop and bulwark to our Church.

From this brief statement I trust that you will see that the cause of God is aided by the appropriation of your Board. Would that we could get along without assistance: but as I have incurred large expense in sustaining the school, I am compelled to apply for the usual remittance. May the Lord bless the Board of Education for the generous help afforded in planting and supporting this school. Its charity is not in vain. Your brother in the kingdom of Christ, M. Rowell.

REFORM IN HARVARD COLLEGE.

Under this caption the secular papers mention a political arrangement designed to governmentalize this old institution. The Board of Overseers are henceforth to be elected by the State. The corporation itself remains unchanged and is self-perpetuating; but the Board of Overseers have a veto upon the election of officers in the institution. The following is the politico-ecclesiastical designation of the new Board of Overseers.

One	Democratic Presbyterian.
One	Free Soil Unitarian Congregationalist.
One	Democratic Unitarian Congregationalist.
One	Whig Episcopalian.
One	Whig Baptist.
One	Democratic Baptist.
Three	Free Soil Orthodox Congregationalists.
One	Free Soil Methodist.

Here are three Democrats, four Free Soilers, and two Whigs; or in other words, one Presbyterian, two Unitarians, one Episcopalian, two Baptists, three Orthodox Congregationalists, and one Methodist. Politically there is a three-fold cord, and ecclesiastically a six-fold one; but by the combination of Church and State it is expected that unity will be twisted in.

This is the institution founded by the pious Puritans, the first law of whose college code, enacted more than two centuries ago, in 1642, was that "every one shall consider it the main end of his life and studies to know God and Jesus Christ, which is eternal life." The University was consecrated by its founders to Christ and his Church. The last revival of religion in the institution was in 1741. Its first century was one of glory. But the self-perpetuating Corporation became tinctured with Arminianism, and then went on and down to Unitarianism. The Government is now trying to step in with its authoritative councils.

Let Presbyterians learn a lesson. If the Puritan idea of education is the true one, the Government is not the true organ to accomplish its ends.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 4, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon will be preached by the Rev. William A. Scott, D. D., before the General Assembly in Charleston, South Carolina. The Rev. William T. Hamilton, D. D. is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in the church on University Place, New York city, by the Rev. William B. Sprague, D. D., on the Sabbath evening preceding the meeting of the Board.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, March 13, 1852.

China Missions.—Our letters are dated at Ningpo, December 12; Shanghai, December 11; Canton, December 27. A lot had been purchased at Shanghai for a house and chapel, after much difficulty. The Taoutae opposed the purchase, partly, it is supposed, on account of his belief that the erection of a high building would result in his death! It seems that the district magistrate died soon after the erection of the tower of the Baptist church, to which cause the Chinese attributed his death.—The missionaries were all pursuing their usual labours, and these are spoken of by Mr. French at Canton, in terms that apply generally to all the stations: "Our two chapels have been kept constantly open during the year, and there has been more preaching of the word, and a greater distribution of tracts, in connection with our mission than in any previous year. But alas! as yet we see little fruit. Even the few buds of promise which have occasionally appeared, to cheer our hearts and excite our hopes, have one after another passed away. Still we are not discouraged, but labour in faith, believing that God will make his word effectual to the accomplishment of his own purposes. Remember us constantly in your prayers, and beg for us an interest in the prayers of the churches."

Siam Mission.—We have received advices dated November 24. The missionaries were all well, and in addition to their usual duties, were making preparations to build their houses. They renew their request for more labourers.

India Missions.—Our letters are dated at Lodiana, December 8; Amballa, December 29; Saharunpur, January 7; Futtehgurh, January 7; Agra, January 10; Allahabad, January 7. Messrs. Porter, Orbison, Morrison, Seeley, and Campbell, were out on missionary tours; and Messrs. Owen, Munnis, and Rudolph of the Lodiana mission, were engaged in preaching to the multitudes at the Allahabad mela, which was then in progress. The other labours of the missions were going on as usual. At Agra three persons were received as church members on the 7th of December. At Futtehgurh, two new members were admitted to the church on the 4th of January, and three other applicants were advised to continue longer on trial. The examination of the school in the cantonments at Futtehgurh, established and superintended by the Rev. Gopenath Nundy, gave great satisfaction to the European and native gentlemen present. One of the latter, Maharajah Dhulip Singh, the Sikh chief, gave a donation of two hundred and fifty rupees to the school.

Africa: Liberia Mission.—Letters dated to the 26th of January have been received. The excitement caused by the war with a native tribe was subsiding. Mr. Wilson had commenced his labours in the Alexander High School. The schools of Mr. James in Monrovia, and Mr. Erskine in Kentucky, were also doing well.—It is with deep regret we have to mention that the Committee have been constrained to terminate the connection of Mr. Ellis with the Board. He has also ceased to be pastor of the church in Monrovia. This case will be noticed in the Annual Report, and will doubtless receive the attention of the proper church court.

Creek Mission.—By a letter of the Rev. J. R. Ramsey, of January 29, we learn with much regret that on account of Mrs. Ramsey's continued feeble health, it will be necessary for them to withdraw from the mission, at least for a season. This has been feared for some time, but their reluctance to leave the missionary work has delayed their decision. In other respects, the prospects of the station at Kowetah are very favourable.

European Missions.—By letters received from Paris, January 28th, and Geneva, January 26th, we are glad to learn that "the work of evangelization has not been slackened, and has pursued its steady and peaceful course;" "the dangers and interruptions anticipated . . . . have not been realized;" and one of our correspondents adds, "our courage has not abated." At Geneva much larger contributions are greatly needed for carrying on the missionary work in France.

Return of a Missionary.—We are thankful to mention the safe arrival, on the 12th of March, of the Rev. J. L. Scott, who has been about fourteen years connected with the Furrukhabad Mission. He visits this country for reasons connected with his family, his children requiring his presence.

ON POLYGAMY AND CASTE IN THE MISSION CHURCHES.

In some parts of the country charges are publicly made, as we are credibly informed, that the Board and the Missionaries, and through them the Church, tolerate polygamists and observers of caste in the mission churches.

These charges are not true. No instance has ever occurred in which a polygamist, or one retaining the distinction of caste, has been received as a member of any of the churches connected with the Missions of the Board.

As the gospel gains ground in a heathen country, it will come in contact with evils that do not exist in Christian nations; and practical cases will occur requiring much wisdom for their proper settlement. This will be found true in regard to the social and family relations. In India, questions concerning the course to be pursued where a man has several wives have been frequently raised, and may be presented at any time for the action of the Missionary. Under these circumstances, this subject came properly before the Synod of North India—it being considered important by the brethren that they should act under the same views in cases that might occur. We shall quote here the whole of their action in the premises, the Minutes being printed in the Missionary Chronicle of November, 1849.

At the first meeting of the Synod, held at Futtehgurh, in 1845, under date of November 17th:—

The following resolution was adopted, viz., that a Committee of two be appointed to draw up a report to be presented at the next meeting of Synod in reference to the following and similar questions, viz.:

1. Is the marriage relation dissolved by desertion, where the party deserting goes back to heathenism, or Mohammedanism?

2. When a man embraces Christianity, having previously married a plurality of wives, what is his duty in relation to them?

(1.) Should he retain them all as his wives?
or,
(2d.) Should he separate from all except one of them?
(3d.) In this case, should he be required to support those from whom he is separated?
(4th.) If any of those thus separated embrace Christianity, are they at liberty to be married to another man?

3. Is it proper for a Christian to maintain as his wife a woman to whom he has been married according to Hindu or Mohammedan law, who had been previously married to another man, and divorced by him according to that law, the former husband being still alive?

Messrs. Wilson and Rankin were appointed this committee.

At the second meeting of the Synod, held at Agra, in 1848, under date of December 2d:—

The Committee appointed at the last meeting of Synod to draw up a Report in reference to several questions concerning the Marriage Relation, reported: whereupon it was,

Resolved, That the Report be accepted, and the whole subject be the order of the day for Monday.

Under date of December 4th:—

On motion, Synod proceeded to the order of the day, viz; The discussion of the subject relating to the Marriage Relation. Mr. E. G. Fraser, an Elder of the Church at Agra, being present was invited to give his views on the question, which he did; when, on motion, the whole subject was postponed till Thursday next.

Under date of December 7th:—

The Synod then proceeded to the order of the day, viz. the report on the Marriage Relation, when the whole Report as amended was adopted; and is as follows:—

1st. In relation to the first question—"Is the marriage relation dissolved by desertion, when the party deserting goes back to Heathenism or Mohammedanism?"

In the opinion of the Committee, the teaching of the New Testament in 1 Cor. vii. 15, seems to affirm that it may be so regarded. Yet that position should be assumed with a great deal of caution, and not until after all lawful means of reconciliation have been fully tried, and time allowed to be assured that all have really failed.

In such a case, where there is deliberate and permanent desertion of one of the parties, it leaves the other party—in this case the party aggrieved—no alternative except voluntary apostacy from Christianity itself, or abandonment of the party concerned. The necessity is forced upon the party aggrieved either to give up Christ, or the party to whom he or she was bound by covenant in the marriage relationship. The character of the obligations owed to Christ the King and Head of the Church, must be put into the scale with that of the obligations owed to the party apostatizing from Christianity. Paul says in the passage above referred to, "If the unbelieving depart, let him depart. A brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases." That is, a brother or a sister is under high and sacred obligations, obligations which they have no right to disregard or lightly esteem: but it should not be construed into a bondage, in which they are hopelessly trammelled. A point may be reached at which it is proper to consider those obligations cancelled. But in reaching that point, in coming to that decision, all pains should be taken to be assured that it is unavoidable, and that it is done in a forbearing, considerate, conscientious manner. And it should be manifest to all that the party thus seeking to be released, has done all that could be done to effect a reconciliation, short of sacrificing the interests of Christianity itself.

Therefore, Resolved, That in case of continued and apparently permanent desertion, the Synod, with reference to 1 Cor. vii. 15, considers the aggrieved party to be at liberty to contract a new marriage after the expiration of at least two years: provided always that when possible, due notice should be given to the party in fault; and that the aggrieved party should act with the advice of the Session of the Church to which he or she may be attached.

"2d. When a man embraces Christianity, having previously married a plurality of wives, what is his duty in relation to them? (1st.) Should he retain them all as his wives?

"(2d.) Should he separate from all except one of them?

"(3d.) In this case should he be required to support those from whom he is separated?

"(4th.) If any of those separated embrace Christianity, are they at liberty to be married to another man?"

The difficulties which gather themselves around this subject in a heathen or Mohammedan country are so many and so great as to make it a subject peculiarly difficult to decide in an incipient stage of the progress of Christianity.

The Missionary body in Calcutta,* as early as 1835, had found it a practical difficulty with which they had to deal. They also found it exceedingly hard to decide. They therefore appointed a Committee, composed of missionaries of different societies and denominations. After much research and examination of the subject in all its bearings, that Committee reported, on the whole, in favour of not constraining the party so trammelled to separate, or turn off any of those to whom he sustained such a relationship.

The Committee are of opinion that we are not ready yet for a final and satisfactory decision of the question. Such ground should always be taken as will show that the New Testament, in all its length and breadth, and the spirit of the Old Testament too, goes to forbid and to condemn the assumption of such a relationship altogether. But where the relationship has been assumed before it came in contact with Christianity in any form, it becomes a case much more difficult authoritatively to decide. A positive or authoritative decision of the question, therefore, had better be postponed till time and experience have thrown more light on the subject.

3d. "Is it proper for a Christian man to retain as his wife a woman to whom he has been married according to the Hindu or Mohammedan law, who had been previously married to another man, and divorced by him according to that law, the former husband being still alive?

This question does not appear to come fairly before Synod as a case to be decided at once. Each Church Session ought to be left to deal with such cases as they come up, in view of their respective peculiarities, and in consultation with the civil authorities of the place. The cases would then come up before the Presbyteries and the Synod in the regular course of revision, and more information would thus be acquired before anything like an authoritative decision be attempted. Almost every case of this kind will have features and peculiarities of its own, which must be weighed and examined by persons conversant with the facts of the case, and decided by them in view of all the peculiarities of the case itself.

The preceding remarks and extracts will give our readers a full view of this subject, so far as it is known. In view of these statements, they can judge for themselves as to the truth and candour of the charges made against our missionary brethren.

We may add, that according to the plan on which the Missions of our Church are conducted, the responsibility of deciding on the qualifications of Church-membership falls upon the Church-Sessions; and their action is subject to the review of the superior Church courts, terminating with the General Assembly. Neither the Board nor the Executive Committee can take action on a question of this kind, without going out of their province. In no instance has this been done. If any practical case should occur, the question of polygamy, caste, or any other, could be brought before the General Assembly in a regular manner; and the merits of the subject could be investigated under circumstances likely to secure a just decision, and one that would prove satisfactory to our Churches.

* [Note by the Editor of the Foreign Record:—This body was composed of missionaries of the Church of England, the Church of Scotland—afterwards the Free Church—the London Missionary Society, and the Baptist Missionary Society, Eng.]

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. C. W. FORMAN.

Failing to convince men of sin—Boats on the Biasá—Appearance of the country.

Oct. 6.—Chuhar—fifteen miles from Amritsar.... Here I made two efforts to preach, but although the people understood unusually well for "Zemindars," or landholders, yet they seemed so utterly careless that I was quite discouraged. In one case having endeavoured to convince some men of sin, I failed so completely, that I did not offer the gospel, thinking it unnecessary to offer food to the full, or medicine to the whole. I afterwards thought I ought to have said to them, that although men are great sinners in the way of actual transgression, there was danger of sinning still more grievously by refusing deliverance from sin and its penalties when God offers it.

7*th.*—To-day crossed the Biásá. It was night when we crossed, and the full moon was shining beautifully upon the broad river. In this country every river seems to have its peculiar boats; all of them in upper India have flat bottoms, and float upon the surface of the water, but they differ very much in form. On this river the sides and stern of the boats are low, and the bow very high, terminating in a point. The sterns are not rounded, but square. The camels, carts, &c., are taken in over the side, which is made about a foot lower in one place for this purpose.

I was much struck with the fertility and beauty of the country towards Jalandar, the trees, corn, and other products showing a much greater degree of productiveness than the country between the Biásá and Rávi.

Encamped at a little mud village near the river. Found a good many sick of fever, owing to the low ground and stagnant water which is always allowed to collect in the large holes from which the earth is taken to build with.

Attacked by fever—Visits of natives—Delightful intercourse with Christians.

Oct. 8.—Just as my servants were striking my tent, I was attacked with fever. Sat under the shade of a large banyan tree from ten to half-past four with a burning fever, which continued through the march, and almost all night. Gave a few books away, and talked to the people a little in the morning. Had excellent opportunities of doing so in the afternoon, but fever prevented. Some men and children sat before my tent almost all day. When one party would go away, another took their place. The men tried much to please me with flattery. Every thing received some notice, but my tent more than all. It is new and rather genteel. One man said, "The English, living or dying, great or small, do every thing just right." To-day's march brought me to within nine miles of Jalandar, and as I did not wish to be exposed to another day's sun, resolved to go on early in the morning.

Oct. 9.—Arrived at Jalandar about seven and a half o'clock. Found all well and glad to see me. Soon after I came, Captain Conran, an old friend, rode up. We were each surprised to see the other, he thinking I was in Lahor, and I thinking he was in Hoochianpoor. He only came to call, but sent away his horse, and remained all day. We spent a delightful day together.

A school boy wishing to become a Christian—Arrive at Lodiana.

The native brethren had much to tell us about one of their scholars, who was resolved to join us, but his parents opposed with violence. He seemed firm, yet sufficiently yielding. His father gave him gold ear rings, and massive gold bracelets, and promised him a thousand dollars if he would remain a Hindú; but Bhudu said, No, I want none of these things, I want to be a Christian. He is eighteen years old, and has been long in school. His knowledge of Scripture history attracted the notice of Mr. Newton and myself two years ago. May the Lord keep him! He is now confined in his father's house in a village one mile from Jalandar. This event had driven away almost all the boys from the school, which had been large.

Oct. 10.—Left Jalandar in company with Golok Nath, in his bullock carriage. Came out fifteen miles; slept three hours at Pagwara.

Oct. 11.—Came on from Pagwara this morning, leaving there at two o'clock A. M. Arrived at Lodiana at nine.

Oct. 12.—To-day preached in English from the text "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me; hope thou in God," &c.

Oct. 13.—Examined the school. More than two hundred boys in attendance in all the departments, and nearly half learn English. Spent the evening at ———'s. He and his wife are pious, and seem to be excellent people.

Oct. 14.—Spent much of the day in writing our annual report of labour done at Lahor. In the evening went out with Mr. Newton to preach. Had good audiences, and he spoke encouragingly of my improvement in the language. In the evening conducted a meeting for native Christians. Had no time for preparation, but spoke with great ease, though this was my first attempt of the sort in Hindustání.

Returning to Lahor—Little work, but some compliments—Preaching in a large village—Various incidents.

Oct. 15.—Bade farewell to my friends at Lodiana, including the Newton's, who are going to America, and began my march to Lahor, via Fírozpúr. Ordered my servants to pitch my tent at Hamhur, but when I arrived there at eight o'clock P. M., there was no tent. I thought I would have to spend the night without tent or bed. Borrowed a bed-stead, on which I lay down under a tree, having sent out two men to hunt for the tent. One soon returned to tell me he had found it at the next village. Servants had no excuse for disobeying orders, but I was too glad to find a shelter to be angry.

16*th.*—Very little missionary work to-day. Could not get the people to listen to me. Talked to a faqir, who said I had all knowledge, with which he thought I would be greatly pleased.

17*th.*—At a pretty large place half way to Fírozpúr. Went out at eleven o'clock to preach; found a pundit and sat down by him; he cared nothing about religion. Asked me if I was born in the Punjáb, as he could not otherwise account for my knowledge of the language. Nothing is too manifestly false to be said in flattery. Breakfasted this morning with Dr. ———, who called at my tent last evening. He was travelling the same road, but I make longer marches than he.

18*th.*—At a large village, probably of one thousand or fifteen hundred people, nearly all Hindus. Went into the village in the morning and evening to preach; found the people ready to hear, and many to approve. Commenced the morning by asking a shopkeeper about his wealth. He seemed much pleased with his riches. I asked him how much of it he expected to take out of the world with him. He said nothing, but a youth sitting by said, "All that he gave away in charity"—not exactly true, but a good answer for a heathen. A Hindu came to my tent in the afternoon with one of our books which had been given him, to ask some questions, but it was soon evident that he came rather as a teacher than learner, so I got rid of him as soon as I could. I am encamped in the yard of some Musalmán faqirs. When I came in, found them preparing bhang, (hemp leaves,) and the pods of poppy, making an intoxicating drink. They said they were going to get drunk, and then go to sleep. These are their holy men. A Musalmán youth came in the evening to see me; said he wanted to go to Lahor with me and read in our school, but had no money, and his father was dead. Agreed to go and act as my servant while reading in school.

19*th.*—Sunday. At same place; have had excellent opportunities of preaching the gospel. In the evening went to see the brother of the Thanadar, or chief officer of the village, who was sick of fever, and prescribed for him.

20*th.*—At a caravansary in the jungle, near where the bloody battle of Firozeshahr was fought, several years ago. Went into the caravansary, and talked some time with fifteen or twenty hard Musalmáns. No good impression seemed to be made.

Missionary Conversations in Firozpur.

21*st.*—At Fírozpúr. Went into the city as soon as I arrived, and entering a Hindu place of worship, entered into conversation with a lot of Brahmans. I attempted to expose the insufficiency and falsehood of their religion, and the truth and sufficiency of ours. In the afternoon two of the Brahmans came to my tent; said they were dissatisfied with their own religion, having followed it long without profit; were much pleased with what they had heard from me, and wanted books to enable them to inquire further into the subject. May the Lord guide them into a knowledge of the truth! I went into the city in the evening, and seeing a number of respectable Musalmáns, I took a seat which was offered me, and soon introduced the subject about which I came to speak, by asking the signs of a true prophet. They were greatly puzzled by the query, and made desperate efforts to answer it, but could not. One man said that God put a mark of a seal upon the prophet's shoulder. To make the question a little more definite, I asked how they knew Mohammed was a true prophet. Not being able yet to answer, they asked me how I knew Christ was a prophet. I mentioned the prophecies concerning his character, the time and place of his coming, and the circumstances of his death and resurrection, and also the prophecies he had spoken. They said there were prophecies in the Old and New Testaments concerning Mohammed, but could not tell where they were written, or what they were, but there were such, for the Koran said so. I told them the Koran was now on trial, and it was not the custom to take the prisoner's testimony in his own case. They assented to the justice of this rule. Then I proceeded to say that there were not only no prophecies with reference to the coming of Mohammed in the Bible, but it was written that there would be no prophet after the Messiah. They soon abandoned this ground, and turned to prophecies written by Mohammed. Well, what prophecies did he write? Why, that there would be a day of judgment! They all seemed to feel the weakness of this. I urged them to give me one sign by which I might know that Mohammed was a prophet, but they had nothing to say; and as is their custom at such times, they began to move about and murmur angrily among themselves. I saw it was not worth while to stay longer. I had been talking a long time with them, so I just remarked that it was not right to give up the old books, until those who gave us new ones showed us their credentials, and we saw they were unexceptionable. Saying this, I bade them good evening, and returned to my tent.

Argument with a Musalmán—The privilege of preaching the gospel—A Musalmán not at leisure, and an ignorant Sikh—Arrive at Lahor.

22*d*.—Kassan, a city of about twenty thousand inhabitants, surrounded by a brick wall. Near it is a fort and ten or twelve villages, all of which formerly belonged to one native chief. Commenced to talk to some people at a shopkeeper's door, who asked me to sit down, but seeing he did not wish his business to be long interrupted, I soon ceased. In the evening had a crowd of people at my tent. They were not much disposed to listen, and rather rude. I was talking about Christ's being the second Adam, when a Musalmán interrupted me, by saying that Mohammed occupied that place in their religion. I wanted to know how a sinner could be the surety of other sinners. I asked if it was customary for creditors to take those as sureties who were poor and involved in debt. He denied that Mohammed was a sinner. This ground he was soon compelled to abandon by a reference to the Koran. When again urged to show how a sinner could be our Saviour, he was silent, and when I went on to insist that Christ was the only Saviour, he seemed greatly disgusted, turned away, and went home. The conduct of the Musalmáns now is so much like that of the Jews in our Saviour's time, I feel that it is the greatest privilege and honour to be allowed to preach the gospel to them, whether they will hear or forbear. I have a sort of feeling which I never should have had, if I had not been a missionary. Constant contention for truth and virtue has given my piety something of a peculiar turn. The other night I was riding along singing the hymn,

> "I'm not ashamed to own my God,
> Or to defend his cause;
> Maintain the honour of his name,
> The glory of his cross"— and when I had finished it, I felt that my face was twisted into an expression of indignation.

23*d*.—Continued at Kassan all day. In the morning I went to one of the villages to preach. The village contained about four hundred houses; half Musalmáns and half Hindus. Each class lived in its own part of the town. A venerable looking Musalmán asked me to sit down with him and a number of others. I asked if they had seen our books. "No," he replied, not very civilly, "we don't want to see them." "Why?" "Because they don't contain the true religion; they are not now to be obeyed; the Koran is God's word, which is now in force." "How do you know the Koran is God's word?" Here he was very opportunely interrupted by business; as soon as he seemed at leisure, I took up my thread where it had been broken off. But I had scarcely time to utter a sentence when he had something more to say to those about him on private business. I waited ten or fifteen minutes, and then arose and said, "I came to have some conversation with you, but you seem to have no leisure." "No, we have no leisure this morning," replied one of the company, so I made my salam.

I then went into the city and got an audience. A Sikh contended that Bábá Nanuk was their surety. "How do you prove that he was?" "In the same way in which you prove that Christ is yours." "But you don't know how we prove that; then how can you know that you prove that Nanuk is your surety in the same way?" "Well, it is written in the Grunt," [the sacred book of the Sikhs.] "How do you know the Grunt is true?" Of this of course he had no proof, and so I was permitted to go on, but not without occasional interruption. In the evening had a large audience at my tent. Gave away a few books. Came out to a sárái or caravansary after sunset.

24*th*.—Came on twelve miles to a little village within fifteen miles of Lahor. On my march gave away some books at a village which I passed, and talked a little to the villagers.

25*th*.—Arrived at Lahor.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. M. JAMIESON.

Leaving the station on a missionary tour—Travelling establishment.

January 7th.—I have just set out from Ambálá on a short tour for the purpose of preaching and distributing books, and have come seven miles to a place called Kot Kuchriá. Our party consists of Mrs. Jamieson, myself and four children, who accompany me for the sake of health. After being closely confined for six months by the burning heat of this country, and prostrated by its enervating influence, it becomes a duty for every foreigner to make the best of the cold season for recruiting health and strength, and this can be done in no way so well as by making an excursion in the country. Happily for the missionary, he can do this, and at the same time promote the cause for which he labours as much, and perhaps more, than by remaining at his station.

The first thing to be done in making preparation for a Missionary tour, is to overhaul the tents and put them in travelling order. These, for the plains, consist of a large day-tent, and a small night one for each family. . . . .

After getting the tents in order, the next thing necessary for a march, is to procure ox-carts, or camels, for the conveyance of them, and other baggage; also tent-pitchers, &c.

The ox-carts of India are a mechanical curiosity—something between a truckel-wagon and a dray; they have only two wheels, which are made entirely of wood, and very heavy. A small iron axle protrudes through the hob, and rests on the rude frame outside of the wheel, which is lashed to the frame work of the cart with ropes. The body of the cart is constructed of bamboos, and is balanced on the axle-tree so as to see-saw at discretion. Thus poised, it not unfrequently disgorges its load of chairs, tables, trunks, crockery, pots, and pans, as it may happen, all in a heap in mud, or water, much to the annoyance of the foreign gentleman who is so dependent on such articles, and the amusement of the oriental, whose sole luggage is bound in a napkin. But the traveller's greatest vexation is the snail-like rate at which these carts move. Their average velocity is one mile an hour.

Orders given—Expected pleasure—Vexatious disappointments.

. . . Having got our camp equipped, I sent off the carts last night from Ambálá, with orders to proceed to this place, and told the watchman in whose charge the camp is, to have the tents pitched, and all ready, by the time we should arrive in the morning. After an early breakfast we set out, Mrs. Jamieson and myself in a gig, and the children with a nurse in a bamboo cage lashed on a cart, expecting to have a pleasant drive, and to find every thing done as directed, on reaching our camp ground. But we had not come more than two miles until we found one of our carts sticking in the deep sand of a dry river-bed, and the driver sitting, like the man in the fable, calling on his gods for help without putting his shoulder to the wheel. I went to a neighbouring village to procure help, and soon found two oxen on the street. I inquired of a by-stander whose they were, and if I could get them for a short time, to help us out of the difficulty. He replied, he knew nothing about the oxen, except that they were not work-cattle. I soon suspected he was himself the owner, and told him so, also pointed out to him the mark of the yoke on their necks. He then confessed they were work-cattle, but had no yoke. I told him his story was false, that where there were oxen there must be a yoke, and rather impatiently insisted on having them for an hour or two to take us over the sand. For this I offered him a full day's wages, but he remained as obstinate as the oxen in the sand. An old man, however, who turned out to be the father of my equivocating friend, having heard my offer, and thinking me a liberal as well as troublesome customer, ordered his son to let me have the oxen, yoke and all! Having got our cart under weigh once more, we came out five miles to our camp. Here our troubles were of another type, but no less trying to human nature. The tent, instead of being pitched for our reception, was sprawled in all directions except the right one, and the rain pouring down in torrents. One of the tent-pitchers had gone off to his home to bid farewell to his family, and the other coolly confessed he had never even seen a tent put up in all his life, and that he had taken service merely for the pay. Nor was there another man on the ground who could do such a piece of (hikmat) wisdom, although some of them had spent all their days in a military camp. After stowing away Mrs. Jamieson and the children under a piece of canvass, I turned tent-pitcher myself, and soon astonished the camp by my hikmat.

Illustration of Caste—Rainy night under canvass—Thief stories.

To illustrate the ignorance of each other's work which exists in India among the different castes, I will give another example. A man spends all his days in cutting grass for one horse, (or rather digging up the roots of grass from under the sand) and cleaning him, and yet never learns to saddle or bridle him. Another spends his life with the same horse, in doing this, and running with his master when he rides, or drives out, to hold the horse; and yet never mounted one. This is the business of the sawar or rider, whose sole business it is to break in horses.

As the day had passed before we had all things arranged for the night, and as it continued to rain, I have not been able to do any missionary work to-day.

We are now sitting in our large tent, which is pitched on a barren plain, quite comfortable, but without all is dark and dreary. Nothing is to be heard except the spattering of the rain on the tent, and the doleful sounds of four watchmen calling to each other from under their blankets in a half-asleep, half-awake voice, "Oh, brothers, be careful of the thieves."

These unwelcome visitors are very numerous and daring in this part of India. I have been robbed three times since I came to the country, while travelling, by them. They quietly cut the canvass of the tents, and carry off trunks, clothes, and whatever they can find. The wife of one of our missionaries had all her day-apparel stolen one night, and had to travel ten miles the next morning in her night-clothes. The thieves sometimes denude themselves, and besmear their bodies with oil, in order to elude the grasp of their pursuers in case they should be caught.

An English officer once told me of a scene he and two brother officers had with a thief thus dressed out. They one night heard something making a noise in their tent, which they at first supposed was a dog, but afterwards, suspecting it was a robber, they sprang on him, and, oily as he was, they secured him until they got a light, when they found he belonged to their own genus. They then bound him hand and foot with a tent rope, and coolly told him to take his rest until it would be light enough to hang him. As soon as day appeared, they erected a gallows, and told him to prepare for what would soo n follow. The poor fellow was much agitated, and being a Musalmán, requested time to say his prayers, which was granted. A rope was then put round his neck, and one end of it drawn over the gallows, so as to stretch his neck as much as it would bear; while in this critical situation one of the officers secretly cut the rope with his sword. The affrighted culprit, supposing it had fortunately broke, fled for life to the jungle, deeply impressed, no doubt, with a sense of his narrow escape from the hands of the kafirs, and a disgraceful death. It is very seldom that thieves in this country do any bodily injury to those whom they rob; we fear more for our property than our lives. But "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchmen waketh in vain." To his care we commend ourselves, and trust in his protection.

Preaching to Mohammedans—Their objections and reply.

January 8th.—Went out this morning with Lálá, one of the native brethren, to preach in the bazár; we met in the gate of the Sarai, a number of Mohammedans, to whom we spoke, and offered books. The chief men among them said they could not read, and if they could, they would not take our books; that they were in possession of the true religion, and wanted no other; that it was dangerous to read our books, as some silly people did, and had their heads turned by them; that he had been informed a whole village of Hindus in the neighbourhood of Saháranpur had become Christians in consequence of reading some books they had received from a Pádri [clergyman] there. To these remarks, which were made in an angry tone, I made no direct reply, except to correct the mistakes: I preferred preaching the simple gospel, and endeavoured to impress on the minds of my hearers, the great importance of true repentance, faith in Christ as the only saviour of sinners, and holiness of heart. What I said of our Saviour was listened to with silent indignation depicted on each countenance, a smothered rage flashing from each eye, and a scornful twirl on each lip. We left them with heaviness of heart, and could only breathe a silent prayer that He whom they despise would destroy the enmity of their hearts, and fill them with his love. We afterwards went to another place, where we found a company of Hindus. These Lálá addressed, and was quietly heard. Kot Kuchria is a very small village, consisting chiefly of a large Sarái (inn), built of unburnt bricks, and a few shops for the supply of travellers. The country around has a sandy barren appearance.

At Shahabad—Mode of cooking on a journey; the steward's perquisites—Preaching under a tamarind tree.

January 9th.—Came this morning seven miles to Sháhabád, a large town, inhabited chiefly by Mohammedans.

Shàh means king, and abád, residence, whence it is probable our abode originated. Having sent off our large day-tent last night, according to marching order, and slept in our Shouldári, (sleeping tent,) on our arrival we found it pitched, and ready for our reception.

As the mode of cooking on a march in this country is a culinary curiosity, I must say a few words respecting it. In the absence of a kitchen, several small furnaces are made of clay, by the plastic hands of the cook, with an aperture in the top large enough to admit the bottoms of the cooking vessels. These are made of copper, and tinned inside. As they are very thin, a few small sticks of wood in the furnace are sufficient to cause them to boil in a short time. With this primitive apparatus at his command, and on a sandy plain, a Hindu cook would laugh at an American cooking stove, and much prefer the custom of his fathers. The principal part of our food, the same worthy procures daily from the bazárs. He goes in advance of the camp, to lay in supplies for the table, and when he has the good fortune to get into the service of a moneyed man, who is more thoughtful of the palate than the purse, he drives a good business in the shape of over-charges, perquisites, &c. There is a story extant of a Governour General's Khánsamán (Lord of the pantry) who, when his lordship was out on a tour of inspection, preceded him for the above purpose, and to procure his supplies free of expense to himself, told the villagers the lord Sahib was, like all Englishmen, an all devourer; that he was not satisfied unless he could have a Hindú child served up for breakfast every morning; but that if they would let him have all he required gratis, he would intercede with the most noble in behalf of their village, and spare their children from such a calamity.

After breakfast we went to the Bazár to preach. Lálá first read aloud a part of a tract, to draw the attention of the people, and collect a congregation. I then, standing under the shade of a tamarind tree, read and expounded the fifteenth Psalm, in Hindustani, to a large and attentive audience. Several Pundits and Moulavíes wished to interrupt me with various idle questions; but I told them I could attend to no one until I had finished my subject. One Moulaví was particularly anxious to defend his religion, and still more so, to show his skill in debate, and to him I replied at a proper time.

Discussion with a Mohammedan teacher of religion.

His first remark was, Sir, you have been saying a great deal about the necessity of holiness of heart, in your address, but you do not understand the subject, nor do you practice holiness. You say your prayers in the morning before bathing. I desired him to inform me what his idea of holiness was. He replied, the abstaining from swine's flesh, wine, and every thing which defiles the body, was holiness; that if a Musalmán but takes the name of the unclean animal on his lips, he becomes unholy. To this I replied, there is a great difference between your definition and mine. Yours has reference only to the body, mine to the soul. God searcheth the heart, that he may give to every one according to his works, not the body. A human judge does the same, so far as he can. Christ taught his disciples, that the kingdom of God was not meat and drink—"Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies. These are the things which defile a man." I then read the account of Peter's vision in Acts x, wherein he was taught that what God hath cleansed no man should call common or unclean.

Moulavi.—You do not observe the precepts of your own religion. Christ forbade the use of wine and swine's flesh. The Jews also were commanded in the law of Moses to abstain from the same things. You profess to receive the Tauret (Pentateuch), and the Injeel (New Testament), as the word of God, why are you so inconsistent?

Missionary.—The first assertion you made is a mistake. Our Saviour no where commanded his disciples to abstain from wine and swine's flesh. He plainly showed by his teaching, that eating and drinking, except when indulged in to excess, had no moral character, and the law of Moses, to which you refer, was a ceremonial one, and was only binding on the Jews for a time. It was intended to keep them separate from their idolatrous neighbours, who eat, and sacrificed swine to their false gods, until Christ would come to fulfil the law of Moses, do away with the ceremonies which prefigured his coming, and unite all nations in his Church. But it also seems to me there is much inconsistency in the Mohammedan religion. The eating swine's flesh is only one of the things forbidden by the Korán. It likewise prohibits lying, theft, dishonesty, and uncleanliness; and yet, for none of these latter sins do you exclude a Musalmán from your religious fellowship, while for the former offence, you say, a Mohammedan can never be forgiven, nor suffered to live. Why single out this one transgression, and mark it with such marked displeasure? "You strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." You say a follower of Mohammed cannot even take the name of the Sur (swine), and yet you admit our common father Adam gave names to all animals. How did he name it? But the swine is a creature of God, as well as you or I, and is good in its place; I suspect better in the sight of its maker, than many a self-righteous man. Do not despise the works of God. But further, you eat the flesh of the ass, which we hold among those animals not to be eaten, although we do not consider eating its flesh a sin; also, that of the cow, and the domestic fowl, which the Hindús abominate. So I think we stand on a level as to eating. But remember, we will be judged by God, not according to what we eat, but according to what we do. Religion concerns the heart, not the stomach.

Moulavi.—You talk much about holiness of heart, your religion produces no such effect, God has given so much efficacy to the Musulmán religion, that if the lowest caste Hindú should read the Kalma, viz. "There is but one God, and Mohammed is his prophet," he would become holy; also, God has given so much grace to Mohammedans, that, let them be as wicked as they please during life, and die in their faith, they would be saved.

Missionary.—Then yours is just the religion to encourage all kinds of wickedness—just the faith for thieves, liars, drunkards, and debauchees. But God has granted no such dispensation to man. He has given us a religion to regulate our conduct, and make us better, and not worse. He requires obedience to his holy law, and wo be to the sinner who presumes to disregard it. A religion which does not sanctify the heart, and purify the affections, is false.

Moulavi.—What! the Korán false! It is the only true word of God, and has superseded the Jewish and Christian Scriptures, as one Governor General of India supersedes another.

Missionary.—That idea you have got from Sheik Sádi. There is no such a thing written in the Korán. On the contrary, in one of the chapters, it reads thus, "Oh ye book-men, unless you remain firm in the faith of the tauret and Injeel, you will be in the possession of no religion." But let us examine the claims of the Korán to be a divine revelation. Mohammed was not foretold by any of the prophets, as a person who would give the world a new religion from God. He wrought no miracles to prove his mission to be divine, and made no prophecies to establish the religion he gave to be true. He professed to have received his revelations from Gabriel, in the darkness of the night, when all others were asleep, and published them without any evidence of their truth; and to complete his imposition, he recorded in the Korán, that God had sanctioned his immoralities, and many other falsehoods.

Here our conversation was broken off by angry clamours on all sides, and I returned to our tent; many persons followed for more books, and were supplied.

[To be concluded.]

INDIA: FURRUKHABAD MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. R. S. FULLERTON: MYNPOORIE, JANUARY 7, 1852.

Examination of the School—Remarks of the Magistrate.

The examination of the Mynpoorie mission school took place on the 20th of last month. The most of the Europeans of the station, Mr. Reid, the Superintendent of Common Schools for the north-west provinces, the Rajah, and the most of the native officers were present. The attention throughout was good, and those composing the audience expressed themselves highly pleased with the manner in which the boys acquitted themselves. The subjects on which the different classes were examined, were, English, Hindú, Urdu, and Persian; Geography, History, English Grammar, Arithmetic, Geometry, what is here known as the larger and smaller Catechisms, and Composition. At the close of the examination, our magistrate, C. Raikes, Esq., distributed prizes in money from his private purse, among the boys, to the amount of some forty rupees, and Mr. Reid distributed perhaps ten rupees' worth of Government books.

Mr. Raikes then arose and delivered a short address to the school, first in English and then in Urdu, a memorandum of which he kindly sent me, and which I now transcribe:

Students of the Mynpoorie Mission School:—I am not going to make a long speech to you, nor a fine speech. It would be troublesome for me to translate a long speech into Hindustani, and as for a fine speech, even if I knew how to make one, you would not all understand it when it was made. No. I am not going to make a speech, but just to say a few words which you will all understand, and which I hope you will remember.

I need not recommend the pursuit of learning and knowledge to young men who have proved this day the zeal and the success with which they have followed their studies. We have all witnessed your satisfactory acquirements in history, geography, languages, and other useful learning. I repeat, I need not recommend study to you, for you have yourselves tasted, some less and some more, the advantages of learning and knowledge. But may I remind you that knowledge, mere head knowledge, will do little good, and may do great harm, without heart knowledge too. Now, heart knowledge depends on religion and on morals. As for your religion, I leave that to others; I have nothing to do with your religion, but I have a great deal to do with your morals. I came here to day, not only as your friend, but as your magistrate; and I say again, as your magistrate, I have a great deal to do with your morals. It makes a great difference to me, whether the Mynpoorie Mission school sends you as orderly and moral members of society into the world, or whether you are merely puffed up by the learning you get here, and come out of school without heart knowledge as well as head knowledge. I want to see you leave this school examples of moral virtue.

Remember what you have so often heard within these walls. Let no boy who has been educated under masters, pious, truthful, and good, come out into the world of every day life to throw discredit on the education which he has received. Let it never be said that a scholar of the Mynpoorie school has said any thing untrue, or done any thing unjust. One word in conclusion; I need not remind you how much you owe to the missionaries, your kind instructors and friends. I know that you love them, and well you may, for they devote themselves to your instruction, not for their own advantage, but for your good. Whilst many of us are engaged in the pursuit of money or ambition, they labour, may I not say, "without money and without price" for your improvement. The best return that you can make for all their labour is your attention and obedience to their instructions. Nor are they entitled to your gratitude alone. None feel more truly the obligation conferred on India by such men, and by the admirable Society to which they belong, than the servants of Government; none know better than they do, how much the country must benefit by labours alike so earnest, so unpretending, and so disinterested.

Before Mr. Raikes left, he told those who drew prizes, that he hoped that they would make good use of their money, and they afterwards came to me almost en masse, to ask what they should do with it. I advised them to buy dictionaries, to which they at once consented, and several who had only received a prize of one rupee, brought seven rupees, and asked me to buy dictionaries for them. We cannot close, without expressing our gratitude to Mr. Raikes for his many acts of kindness to us as individuals, and as servants of the Board. Though a member of another branch of the Church, he has ever given us his countenance and support.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

LETTER OF THE REV. S. N. MARTIN: NINGPO, DECEMBER 6, 1851.

The gospel preached, but few yet receive it—Day-schools tried.

Since the sending of the last mission letter, nothing of special interest has occurred. Our various operations go on as usual, though almost none seem sincerely inquiring after salvation through the Saviour whom we endeavour to preach. We are permitted to speak freely, without any to hinder. Our hearts are often pained by the worldliness and indifference to eternal things evinced by the people, and by frequently hearing remarks designed to throw contempt on the doctrines of the gospel. Yet we are encouraged by having numbers to listen respectfully and attentively to the messages we bring them. The seed is sown, mostly among thorns, upon stones, and by the wayside; but here and there we believe a grain alights in soil prepared by the Lord of the harvest, and sooner or later he will cause it to bear fruit.

Early this year several day schools were commenced as experiments, one in the city, three in the suburbs, and one on North bank. All except the latter were situated in places where foreigners were almost wholly unknown, and the people very suspicious. Two of these schools never could get above seven or eight regular pupils; the others succeeded better; but when the excitement among all natives in foreign employ, referred to in Mr. Rankin's letter July 28th, prevailed, two schools were entirely deserted by the pupils, and two were so much reduced in number that it was not worth while to continue them. The one at the North bank is attended by boys from families living near and well acquainted with us; it was not affected by the cause which broke up the others, and still goes on prosperously.

We believe day-schools will be useful, if conducted under favourable circumstances, which we could not command, in little rooms, temporarily fitted up for the purpose. They afford an opportunity of discovering bright and promising boys, who may be transferred to the boarding school, a thing very desirable, as the present pupils are necessarily picked up anywhere, and are of low and poor parentage, their object being to get rice, more than knowledge. These day schools also bring us into nearer relations than can in any other way be attained, to the families from which their pupils come; and exert a good influence on the neighbourhood around them. The great drawback on their usefulness is the want of Christian teachers. We pray that this want may not long exist.

The translation of the Scriptures into the spoken dialect progresses slowly, as but little time can be given to it. We need such a translation for various classes of persons.

MISSIONS IN EUROPE.

MISSIONARY WORK OF THE GENEVA EVANGELICAL SOCIETY.

Brief statement of the Society's position.

This Society has three departments of missionary labour—the school of Theology, Evangelization, and Colportage. In the former there are twenty-six students. In the direct preaching of the word, a number of pastors and evangelists are connected with the Society; and several colporteurs are also employed in spreading a knowledge of true religion, chiefly in some of the provinces of France.

We regret to observe a serious deficiency in the income of the Society. In a letter lately received from Geneva, gratefully acknowledging a donation of the Board, an earnest plea is made for farther aid. This we trust our churches will enable the Board to grant.

Notices of two Colporteurs—What colporteurs ought to do.

From the last Circular of the Society we translate a few paragraphs on Colportage. Two of the labourers of this class are thus spoken of:

The first is one of the beloved students of the school of Theology, who asks us to employ him in this service during his vacations [partly as a preparation for the ministry.] The other is one of the evangelists happily employed by the Society for many years, who to quicken and extend his ministry, has undertaken to visit thoroughly his field of labour, carrying the word from house to house, in colportage.

Their work has not been in vain in the Lord. They have been blessed themselves, and have shown us what colportage can do, when the colporteur is worthy of the book which he carries, and the Master who sends him. One of them sold, in two months and a half, 374 copies of the Holy Scriptures; and hardly a copy went out of his hands, without a serious word to show its inestimable price, and to urge on the conscience of the purchaser the duty of giving it good usage. [Particulars of these labours are given. One of the colporteurs writes as follows:]

An interview with a Romanist Silk-weaver.

Discouraged, I arrived at the hamlet of Ch. After calling at several doors in vain, I entered a silk-weaver's. All was furnished with the cross, the Virgin of Sallette, the Virgin of Osier, our Lady of Fourviere, saints and saintesses—the air breathed a perfume of devotion Roman-like, and I almost fancied myself in the cell of some abbess. I offered my plain book with some fear. In fact the mistress of the establishment refused it, but she entered into conversation with me, saying she would like to have the life of all the saints. "The word of God," I replied, "contains the life of St. Paul, St. Peter, St. John, St. James, St. Barnabas, &c., and moreover it contains the whole life of Jesus Christ, who is our only model. You seem to be religious; purchase the gospel, read it, ask God to help you by his Holy Spirit, and your faith shall be enlightened and strengthened; for the word of God is divinely inspired for our correction, instruction, consolation, and making us perfect in every good work." Opening the book I read to her the annunciation of the angel Gabriel, the song of Mary, and some parts of the Sermon on the Mount. She replied to me with sense and seriousness. We spent an hour together, and she ended by purchasing the gospel, which will be perhaps well placed in her hands. . .

BOXES OF CLOTHING, intended for the Missions of the Board, may be sent to the Mission House, or to any of the Agents of the Board; and should be preceded, or accompanied, by a written statement of the source whence they came, and of the value of their contents in detail.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY is published monthly for the Board of Foreign Missions, at fifty cents a year for five copies of the newspaper edition to the address of one person, postage included; and at twenty-five cents a year for a copy of the pamphlet edition. Copies of the pamphlet edition, when desired, are sent free to donors of five dollars and upwards, and to ministers whose churches contribute to the funds of the Board. Address, "The Foreign Missionary," Mission House, 23 Centre Street, New York.

Postage on the Newspaper Foreign Missionary.—This paper is under 300 square inches in size. The postage, payable quarterly in advance, is—for 10 copies, per quarter, under 50 miles, 3½ cents; under 300 miles, 6¼; under 1000 miles, 9½; under 2000 miles, 12½.

☞ As the postage cannot be prepaid at New York, let it be deducted according to the above rates, when remittances are made to pay for the paper. Thus the price is—fifty cents for five copies, postage paid.

OVERLAND LETTERS.—Letters for the Overland Mail, to India, Siam, and China, should reach the Mission House in time for the steamer nearest the first of each month. Postage: assessed according to weight, at the rate from New York of forty-five cents for half an ounce. This may be paid by sending post-office stamps to the Mission House.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—The Board is incorporated under the laws of the State of New York. The corporate name to be used is—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

Certificates, of Honorary Membership, on the payment of Thirty Dollars; of Honorary Directors, One Hundred Dollars.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 265 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, colportage, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to Rev. JOHN LEYBURN, D.D., Corresponding Secretary and General Agent.

Orders for books, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. JOSEPH P. ENGLES, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. ENGLES, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M.D. Treasurer.

WHAT THE COLPORTEURS OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION ARE EXPECTED TO DO.

In order to correct erroneous impressions, it may be proper to state that the colporteurs of the Board of Publication are not required to "hold meetings," nor in any way directly or indirectly to perform such duties as might be regarded as infringing on the prerogatives of the ministry. If our colporteurs have transgressed in this respect, information of the fact has not reached us. So far as we have been able to learn, they have been very generally well received, and have left a good impression. In this, as well as in all other human affairs, there will of course be occasional exceptions.

A colportage system of some sort, we regard as absolutely indispensable to the efficiency of a religious publishing institution. Of what avail would it be that we publish books, even though these were tenfold more than they are, were they to be laid on our shelves, there to remain until orders were sent for them? Even were local depositories established in various sections of the Church, would they reach the multitudes who are scattered through rural districts and the more sparsely settled portions of the country? There must be a body of men who will make it their special business to canvass every neighbourhood, taking the books from door to door, or in vain will we essay to supply the Church with a sound religious literature. The duties of the colporteurs of this Board require them to take the books to the people, and whilst performing this office, to converse on personal religion, and engage in prayer wherever this may be suitable and advisable, just as any other pious persons ought to do. We confidently believe that no harm can result, but that on the contrary, incalculable good will ensue from such a colportage system judiciously conducted.

We just add, that inasmuch as it would be impracticable to sell the books at such a profit as would defray the expenses of these colporteurs and pay for their grants and for the other donations of the Board, it is but fair and reasonable that the churches should contribute the funds required to meet these expenditures, just as they do to any other benevolent institution. We rejoice to know that this is becoming the general sentiment of the Church. Voluntary contributions from various sections of the country are increasing; few, if any, pulpits are closed against applications for collections, and in every respect there are most gratifying tokens of a kindly sympathy. The work goes on. Who can refuse their help?

IMPORTANT MOVEMENT FOR THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION IN NEW ORLEANS.

From the Report of the proceedings of the late meeting of the Synod of Mississippi, published in the New Orleans Picayune, we learn that very decided measures were adopted by that body for establishing a Depository of the books of the Board of Publication in New Orleans. The Depository is intended to be a chartered institution. The churches were enjoined to make collections in aid of the object previously to the 1st of April, and required to report as to whether or not they have complied with this injunction, to the next meeting of Synod. The Rev. Dr. Scott, J. A. Maybin, Esq., and others, were elected a Board of Trustees "for the establishment, superintendence and control of said depository, and directed to seek incorporation according to the laws of Louisiana, with power to receive donations and legacies, to purchase and hold property, &c."

By a private letter, since received, we learn that the Committee of the Synod are making arrangements to purchase a lot and erect a suitable building for the purpose. The Rev. Dr. Scott and his noble church seem to have taken hold of the matter in earnest. A more important movement towards extending and giving efficiency to the Board of Publication has not been made in any portion of the church.

THE DOUBLE GOLD EAGLE; AND THE ROCKING-CHAIR,

OR SOMETHING FOR PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

Dear Brother—Among the late contributions from my congregation for the Board of Publication, you will have observed that several were for life memberships (at $30 each). Of these, three of them were for young children. In regard to two of them, I have thought the following notice might be interesting, and its publication of service.

About the time of making the contribution, your discourse greatly attracted the attention of one of these children, aged between six and seven years. On his returning home with his mother, he said to her that he would like to be a life member, because he could thus help in giving away good books to the poor people. "But," said his mother, "D——, how will you become a life member? it costs thirty dollars." "Why, mother," he answered, "you know that my brother A—— has a gold double eagle, and I have been saving my money till I got enough to exchange it for a double eagle also. I have already got eighteen dollars, and if you will give me twelve dollars more, that will be thirty dollars, and I will give it all." "Yes," said she, "but then you will not have the double eagle at all." "I know that," he replied, "but I had rather give my money in this way, than to have the gold piece: I would only lock it up for a keep-sake, to look at; and I am sure the money will do more good if I lay it out for good books to be given to the poor people that have none. I am sure the money would do me as much good in this way, as if I only kept it." "Well, my son," replied this judicious mother, "I am glad that you want to lay out your money so wisely; but I wish you to think about it a few days, for fear, if I give your money away, you might afterwards be sorry." No more passed; and after some days, the lad came to his mother and told her he had thought a good deal about it, and he was still of the same mind. The result was, that the mother complied with his request, and the little fellow is very happy, to think that his money will do some good, instead of resting in his drawer.

The other child is now only a few days over four years old. His birth-day was drawing near, when his father usually made him a handsome present. He said to him, "Now, Ally, you know that I am going to make a present, on your birth-day. And I thought I would get you an elegant child's rocking chair; but I would sooner take the money and make you a life-member of the Board of Publication, which will send books with it to little children, and other people who have not so many nice books as you get, and no money to buy them with. And we will get a beautiful certificate, with your name and birth-day in it; it shall be framed; and when you grow up, it will keep you thinking of doing good, and that your parents wish you to love to do good, instead of spending all your money in toys, or something else for your own pleasure. Now, which shall I do?" The child was not long in deciding. "I will do without the rocking-chair, and you may get me the certificate." It was accordingly done. But the parent had another object. He wished not only to exercise the child to self-denial, but to teach him that benevolence never loses. For besides making the child a life member, a few days after, a very handsome rocking-chair appeared in the parlour, which his father had purchased for him, with which the child was very much delighted; but he still felt happier in thinking that he had been willing to do without it, in order that the money might do good to the poor and needy. It was in a similar way, you remember, that Cecil taught his child to believe, in obeying the commands of God, by prevailing on it to give up a necklace—a pretty hard sacrifice—but which the father afterward replaced by one of greater value.

These incidents teach us,

1. That instruction is not lost on the young. They can understand and feel what their duty is; and to form them to correct sentiments and right habits in childhood, will train them up to feel and act aright when they grow up.

2. That nothing is lost, by the habit of benevolence. A cup of cold water given from kind and pious feeling is not without its reward.

3. The things that please us for the moment, are soon perished; but who can tell the duration and extent of that influence which is produced by a good deed, an act of self-denial for the good of others.

4. Are there not other parents and other children that might be exhorted to follow these examples. Whether is it best to inculcate a false and selfish economy, to foster the love of dress and self-indulgence, in children, and sow a harvest of unbelief and selfishness, of mere worldliness and sinful waste, and possibly make them a curse to themselves and others in after years or to educate our children to consider the poor, making them industrious, prudent, and frugal, and that they may do good, and encouraging them in those habits of practical piety, which will in after years, make them a blessing to others and truly blessed to themselves?

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

"Godliness is profitable for all things, having the promise of the life that now is, as well as of the life to come."

K. M. J.

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

Had not Bunyan been shut up in Bedford jail, the world had not been blessed with the Pilgrim's Progress; had not Edwards been driven from his people in Northampton, many of his best works had never seen the light; and had not two thousand of England's best ministers been deprived of their livings by the act of uniformity, succeeding generations had not been furnished with so rich and abundant provision for their spiritual life, nourishment, and growth. No man liveth to himself. The misfortunes of some are the salvation of others. The works of the dead are the life of the living. Let us do what we can to scatter these works far and wide over the earth, for in them the dead yet speak!

READING.

There is no want of reading: but there is a vast amount of unprofitable reading. Pamphlets of the lightest and vilest kind are all abroad, while so numerous are the issues of the newspaper press, that the people have been said to be "educated by newspapers;" and surely they are almost governed by them. This has had a blighting influence on the piety of the church, and is no doubt one cause of the present low state of religion. This alone—light reading—is sufficient to account for the dearth of revivals.

One effect of light reading is, that it dissipates the mind, and renders it averse to serious thought, and solid and profitable reading. It also has a corrupting influence. It feeds and nourishes the depravity of our natures, and quenches the Spirit's heavenly influences. And as what corrupts the heart and weakens moral principle does also vitiate the conduct, there is danger that the life will but too clearly show with what the heart has held intimate but disastrous communion! Shun light reading as you would shun poison! It leads to death!

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A Digest of the Acts of the Supreme Judicatory of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Compiled from the Records of the original Synod of New York and Philadelphia, and of the General Assembly from its organization in 1789 to 1851, inclusive. Arranged to illustrate the Constitutional Rules of the Church. 12mo. 288 pages. Price 65 cents.

The Digest which has been so long anticipated, has at length made its appearance. The old one had become obsolete, years ago, and for a long time there has been no means of determining what have been the decisions of the highest judicatory of the Church, except by the interminable work of wading through all the volumes of the Minutes. We have now the action of the General Assembly on all the important questions which have been before it, condensed into a small compass, and arranged in a lucid and convenient order. Though the volume does not appear to contain a very large amount of matter, its preparation has cost a great deal of labour. It was prepared, at the request of the Board of Publication, to whom it had been referred by the Assembly, by the Rev. Richard Webster, of Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, and does credit to his patience, judgment, and power of condensation.

A Catechism of Scripture Doctrine and Practice, for Families and Sabbath-schools; designed also for the oral instruction of Coloured Persons. By Charles C. Jones. 18mo. 154 pages. Price 15 cents.

Dr. Jones's Catechism has been long known and valued, especially in the South. It contains the fruits of his long, faithful, and successful labours for the instruction of the coloured people, and supplies a most important want in regard to their spiritual welfare. It has been published heretofore at such inconvenient points as to render it difficult, and in many instances impracticable, for persons to obtain it. Issued as it now is by the Board, and sold at so low a price, it ought to secure, as it deserves, a wider circulation than ever. Although designed originally for the instruction of the coloured population, it is by no means unsuitable for other uses, and is well adapted for Sabbath-schools and Bible-classes generally.

Presbyterian Tracts. Volumes VI. and VII. Price 50 cents each.

These volumes continue the series of Tracts from No. 91 to No 136, and are rich in the usual doctrinal and practical matter. The seven volumes of tracts now issued would make a very excellent family library.

Early Religious History of John Barr. Written by himself, and left as a legacy to his grand-children. To which is added a sketch of his character. 18mo. 80 pages. Price 16 and 22 cents.

The subject of this autobiography was one of that numerous class of American Presbyterians whose lineage is to be traced to the north of Ireland. The narrative is a simple statement of his Christian experience, and of God's dealings with him in the earlier part of his life. Those who love to watch the workings of a human heart under the operations of divine grace, will find something to edify them in these pages. The sketch of Mr. Barr's character appended; is an affectionate tribute from a grandson.

Mr. Barr was a pious and intelligent North Carolina farmer.

TRACTS.

Are Infants Saved? By the Rev. David McConaughy, D. D. 24 pages.

Not a few parents will be thankful for these words of comfort on a most interesting subject. The object of the tract is to prove that infants are saved.

Old Age Anticipated and Realized. By the Rev. Reuben Smith. 16 pages.

This is a commendable effort on the part of the writer, to cast some rays of sunshine on the pathway of those who have arrived at the evening hours of life. He has made valuable suggestions and given good counsel.

How Stands my Case with God? A help to self-examination. By the Rev. William S. Plumer, D. D. 32 pages.

Like all the other tracts from the author's industrious pen, this is sensible, searching, instructive, evangelical, and well calculated to do good.

Emily J———; or the Danger of Worldly Conformity. 20 pages.

An unusually interesting narrative, illustrating a prevailing sin and danger of professing Christians.

The Posture in Prayer, or God to be worshipped with the body as well as the mind. By the Rev. Isaac Todd. 24 pages.

It would not be amiss for all the members in all our churches to read this plea for a respectful and reverent posture in prayer. One of the crying sins against propriety, of the day, is the prevalent disposition to "sit bolt upright," when the minister says "Let us pray." Few things are more unpleasant, than when the minister rises to lead the people in a direct address to God, to see the congregation all keep their seats. An entire congregation, standing reverently whilst their prayers are going up to the throne above, is a spectacle most appropriate and impressive, and we cannot perceive why persons who can be upon their feet hours at a time elsewhere, cannot stand up a quarter of an hour in the house of God. Ministers may have aided in the formation of these bad habits by making their prayers of an inordinate length, but however the evil may have originated, it ought to be remedied.

Paul's Inquiry. 4 pages.

The Universalist's Death-bed. 8 pages. Both excellent practical tracts.

Qualifications of a Sabbath-school Teacher. By the Rev. James Hamilton, London. 16 pages.

A tract from Hamilton's glowing pen will be read without any commendation from us.

Varieties.

Ronge the Reformer.—Ronge, once so famous as the leader of the so-called reformation of the German Catholics, and whose reformation came to nothing, because it was not built on the Bible, but had a basis of rationalism, is now in England—an exile from Austria—lecturing on the influence of the Jesuits in Europe. The churches which he had gathered, and which had survived till of late, have all been dissolved by the government.

Religious Charities.—The religious charities in Massachusetts for the year 1850, it is estimated, amounted to $308,000. The Evangelical Congregationalists, constituting one-third of the numbers, gave two-thirds of the amount.

Germans.—In Cincinnati there are but two American military companies, and five German. The Germans hold their parades, balls, concerts, games, &c., always on Sunday.

Protestant Methodist Church.—There are connected with this church in the United States, 31 annual conferences, 72 stations, 368 circuits, 90 missions, 807 ministers, itinerant and local, 841 meeting-houses, and 65,008 members.

Blessing of Pious Parentage.—The statistics of one of our theological seminaries, gathered some time since, presented the following results: Of 101 students, 71 had both parents pious; 23 had one parent pious; 7 had neither parent pious.

Methodist Theological Education.—Rev. S. M. Vail, of the Biblical Institute, Concord, New Hampshire, has been writing a series of letters for the Northern Christian Advocate, on theological education in the Methodist Episcopal Church. In letter first, Professor Vail states that measures are now in train, at Lima, New York, to connect a biblical school with Genessee College, which shall have a separate endowment of at least $50,000.

A Temperance Town in New Jersey.—The proprietors of the new town recently laid out on the Delaware, in Burlington county, New Jersey, nearly opposite Tacony, called "Rierton," have a bill of incorporation before the Legislature of that State, one section of which prohibits the manufacture or traffic in intoxicating liquors on any of the lots, which proviso must be inserted in every deed of conveyance.

Insanity in California.—Insanity is said to exist to a fearful extent in California. The editor of the Courier thinks there have not been less than four hundred cases in San Francisco since the settlement of the place. Excitement, disappointment, privation, gambling, and dissipation, are doing their work.

Chinese in California.—The Missionary Advocate for January says, that in San Francisco there are strong indications of an interesting work among the Chinese of that city, many of whom are studying the Gospels and the Acts, which have been distributed among them. Some of them attend church, and one is a bold and earnest convert.

Temperance Movements in Great Britain.—The House of Commons have at present a bill before them to appoint a select committee to inquire into the license law of Scotland. In the debate upon it, Mr. Fox Maule said that the consumption of spirits there amounted to 6,000,000 of gallons annually, being almost two gallons and a half for each person, infants included. An act has also been passed, regulating the sale of beer, in which no debt for beer drank on the premises is made recoverable.

New York State Senate.—The number of Senators is 32. The oldest is 64 years of age—the youngest 29. The majority are over 35. Among them are only five single men. Most of them are natives of New York, but there are six from Massachusetts, three from Connecticut, and two from Vermont.

Landholders and Freeholders.—According to the census of 1850, there were 1,448,486 landholders in the United States, in addition to 930,977 freeholders.

Indiana.—The ordinary expenses of the State of Indiana for the year ending October 31, 1851, amounted to $71,810.36, being at the rate of only seven cents to each individual of the population. The taxable property in that State amounts to $210,000,000.

Religion in Colleges.—There are 120 professors of religion among the students of Yale College, 70 in Brown University, 21 at Bowdoin, 118 at Amherst, and some 800 others in different College institutions in New England.

Hungarian Settlers.—A party of twenty Hungarians have gone to Missouri, to purchase a tract of land. They have sufficient means to purchase 10,000 acres of land and the necessary agricultural implements for cultivation, and to stock the same.

An Abundance of Constitutions.—During the last forty-eight years there have been five constitutions in France, reckoning that last promulgated; and it is precisely forty-eight years since the Civil Code was promulgated by Napoleon, then Consul for life.

The Largest Manufacturing City in the World.—Manchester, in England, is unquestionably the greatest manufacturing city in the world. The annual value of the Cotton manufactures of that city, is $235,000,000; that of the Woollen manufacture of the same place is $100,000,000; and that of the Linen manufacture is $60,000,000. The silk manufacture is also quite large, but the amount we have not seen stated.

Native Preachers in India.—Three young men were licensed and set apart in Calcutta to preach the gospel by the Calcutta Presbytery of the Free Church of Scotland. They were all natives, and had for some time been employed in missionary work in connexion with the schools.

Mint Operations.—The Philadelphia North American says there are annually consumed in the chemical operations of the Mint in that city, seven hundred tons of anthracite coal.

New Orleans.—There are now in this city nine Presbyterian churches open for public worship every Sabbath. Sixteen years ago there was but one church, and that without a pastor, with 25 members and 120 of a congregation.

Methodist Church.—A Convention for securing lay representation in the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been held in Philadelphia. A large number of delegates were present from different States, and the meetings were fully attended and of unusual interest. Strong resolutions were passed, expressive of the sense of the Convention relative to lay delegations in the annual and general conferences, as a matter both of justice and expediency. The Convention appointed delegates to urge this matter before the General Conference, shortly to meet in Boston.

Popish Encroachments.—The bold impudence of the Roman Catholic priesthood in this country is increasing every day. A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature to vest in Archbishop Hughes all the right and title of the real estate belonging to the various Roman Catholic congregations in his diocese.

The Sandwich Islands.—A gentleman who has just returned from California, expresses the opinion that the Sandwich Islands will, in less than two years, apply for admission to the American Union.

First Newspaper in Virginia.—The first newspaper tolerated in Virginia was in 1780; the subscription price was $50 per annum for one copy; advertisements of moderate length were inserted for $10 the first week, and $7 for each week succeeding.

HYMN FOR THE OPENING OF A CHURCH COURT.

1. Almighty Lord! our waiting eyes
Are turned for help to thee:
O hear, and in this sacred place,
With us a dweller be!

2. O let thy Holy Spirit come,
With wisdom, truth, and grace—
To guide our counsels, and to keep
Our souls in righteousness.

3. Give help to conquer sin and self,
Each idol to dethrone;
To yield our hearts to Zion's King,
And Israel's God alone.

4. Enable us with holy love
To work together here:
To purge our church from sloth or guilt,
And downcast hearts to cheer.

5. O Sun of Righteousness, arise!
And on thine Israel shine,
And let thy quick'ning beams descend
Upon this lowly vine:

6. And cause its branches wide to spread,
And fruits mature to bear;
Till over all this goodly land
Its plants are everywhere.

7. And gather 'neath its fostering shade
The outcasts of our race,
From distant lands, afar from God,
And strangers to his grace.

8. And when our duties here are done,
Permitted to disband,
May gracious blessings from our King
Go with us o'er the land!

THE BETTER COVENANT.

He is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises.—Heb. viii. 6.

The apostle speaks in this chapter of a first and of a second covenant; of an old and of a new covenant; and in the following chapter of a first testament; and of a new testament; and in the preceding chapter of a better testament; and so in the verse above quoted of a better covenant. See Heb. vii. 22; viii. 6—13; and ix. 15—22.

1. This new and better covenant is the covenant of grace. It is a covenant entered into between the Father and the Son for the redemption of men. Into this covenant we become interested by faith; and then the covenant is made with us, and we become partakers of all its peculiar benefits. In this sense God promises to make this new covenant with Israel, i. e. with all the spiritual seed of Abraham, whether they be Jews or Gentiles. Heb. viii. 10—12.

2. The old and inferior covenant is not the covenant of works. That was made with Adam, and by him it was broken. It knew nothing of altars and sacrifices. It had no mediator and no ministry, whereas that old covenant of which Paul speaks had both. Heb. ix. 1—22.

3. Nor is the covenant with Abraham that old and inferior covenant. The covenant with Abraham is the same in substance as that which is made with every believer, i. e. it is the covenant of grace. Abraham believed God, and it was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom. iv. 1—17. Gal. iii. 13—29. The covenant with Abraham was made long before the old covenant referred to by the apostle. He fixes the date of this old covenant in Heb. viii. 9, where he speaks of it as the covenant made with the fathers in the day when the Lord took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt. It was while on the way from Egypt to Canaan that this old covenant was made. Hence it is not the Abrahamic covenant. That remains still in force, as the apostle teaches in Gal. iii. 17. The covenant that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul. The law did not and could not disannul it. Its blessings come on all the spiritual seed of Abraham. The promise is to us and to our children. In short, the covenant with Abraham is the covenant of grace in its relation to the chosen seed. Abraham became interested in it by faith, and so do we. He and his seed were circumcised, as a seal of the covenant and a sign of their covenant-relation to God; and so we and our children are baptized. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise; and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed. Gal. iii. 1—29, and iv. 28.

4. The old and inferior covenant is the national covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai. We have an account of this covenant in the 24th chapter of Exodus. The covenant is proposed in the 19th chapter; its conditions are contained in the intervening chapters; and its ratification in the 24th chapter. The basis of this covenant is the moral law. Hence the tables on which it was written are called the tables of testimony, or the covenant; and the ark in which they were deposited is called the ark of the covenant. Heb. ix. 4. This covenant included the whole Mosaic dispensation; and it is here compared by the apostle with the covenant of grace as administered under the gospel. The promise of the new included the removal of the old legal economy, and the introduction of a new dispensation, as much superior to the old as Christ is superior to Moses and the priests of the law. Heb. vii. 11—22; viii. 13. This new covenant—the covenant of grace, including the whole gospel economy—is established upon better promises than the old national covenant with the Jews, including the Mosaic ritual; for if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. 2 Cor. iii. 7—9.

Read Ex. xxiv. 3—8. That this is the old covenant to which the apostle refers, is clear from what he says in Heb. ix. 15—21. Neither the first testament was dedicated without blood. For when Moses had spoken every precept to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves and of goats, with water, and scarlet wool, and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, "This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you."

It is a point, then, which the apostle has settled, that by the old covenant he means, not the covenant of works made with Adam; not the covenant made with Abraham; but the Sinai covenant—the national covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai when they came up out of Egypt—a covenant sealed, not with circumcision, but with the blood of slain animals. Heb. viii. 9; and ix. 15—20; Ex. xxiv. 3—8. This covenant was to be temporary. It promised Canaan, and secured temporal blessings to the Israelites while they were obedient, together with the enjoyment of religious privileges; for it was connected with the ceremonial law under which the Levitical priesthood officiated. And this covenant, with all its ceremonials, was done away by Christ, who is the Mediator of a better covenant. Indeed, the promise of a new covenant implied the abrogation of this, and the introduction of a new dispensation. Heb. viii. 13. But circumcision, being no part of this covenant, having been instituted long before, (Gal. iii. 17,) was not abrogated with it, but changed into baptism; and so to be applied to believers and their offspring, as circumcision was. Hence the right of infants to baptism. Of such is the kingdom of heaven. M.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

A STRANGE THING.

Even the wise virgins slumbered and slept. As sinners sleep in their sins, so Christians sometimes sleep over their duty. This is a strange thing.

It is strange, if we consider what has been done for them. God has loved them with an everlasting love. For them the Saviour has died. The Holy Ghost has been sent down from heaven to renew their hearts and lead them to Christ. They have been made alive from the dead, and been made not only children, but heirs of God. And how can they sleep for whom so much has been done?

It is strange, if we consider their professions. They have subscribed with their own hands unto the Lord, acknowledged his right to them, vowed to be his. When convinced of their sins, and brought to feel their need of Christ, they bowed to his sceptre, and made a full surrender to him. They kept back nothing then; they made no reserve. And when they stood up in the great congregation, to profess their faith in Christ, there was no reserve made in their dedication to him who bled for them. And often since they have repeated their vows, and said, we will serve the Lord. Yet after all they fall asleep, and this may well excite astonishment.

It is strange, if we consider their circumstances. They are engaged in a warfare. "Hell and their sins resist their course," and yet they sleep on the field of battle and when their leader cries to arms! They are surrounded with temptations; within them are the remnants of corruption, without and around them the seductions and allurements of the world: they need to watch and pray, and yet they sleep! They are the salt of the earth, the light of the world, and stand in the most solemn relations to the cause of Christ and to perishing men; they are under the strongest obligations to be ever vigilant and active. On them is suspended, instrumentally, the salvation of souls and the conversion of the world! How then can they sleep? How strange that they can slumber, with the weight of a world resting upon their shoulders, with the destiny of immortals suspended upon their zeal and watchfulness! Christians asleep! It is a strange thing! Oh, it is high time to awake out of sleep! Sleeper awake! awake! awake!

IMPORTANT TABLE FOR SYNODS AND PRESBYTERIES IN CONNECTION WITH THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD AT LOUISVILLE.

Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut Street,
Philadelphia, April 8, 1852.

We have just received the following Table from the Executive Committee of the Board at Louisville, accompanied by some explanatory remarks from Dr. Hill, Corresponding Secretary of the Committee. It is a table similar to the one published from the Office in Philadelphia in the October number of the Record, and is a most valuable one, and cannot fail to suggest important reflections to Presbyteries and churches. A similar table for the same time will be made out from this Office, so soon as we find leisure to prepare it. It is a matter of congratulation that the church is so generally coming up to her duty in the mission given her by her Divine Head, of thoroughly evangelizing our great and growing country. We share the labour and the reward with all other denominations who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth. Our year closes beyond our expectations, and we would thank God and take courage.

The following table has been made out with great care and labour, and though it may not be entirely accurate, it approximates as near to it as under the circumstances could be expected. It includes in the receipts only the money that has been actually paid into the Treasury of the Board, or to missionaries commissioned by it, and in the expenditures only that which became due to Missionaries from May 1st, 1851, to April 1st, 1852. A number of churches have missionaries of their own, as, for example, those of St. Louis, Natchez, New Orleans, New Albany, and other places, who were not in commission from the Board. The money raised for their support is not included in this table, as it did not come into our Treasury. This remark is also true of the Presbyteries of South Alabama and Tuscaloosa, which have commissioned and paid their own missionaries during the past year. In some cases the contributions of both last year and this have come into the Treasury within the eleven months; whilst in others the funds of churches, which regularly contribute to the Board, were paid in last year before the first of May, and have not yet been paid in for this year, thus causing in the one case the contributions of two years to be counted, and in the other of neither, though the churches contributed last year, and doubtless will do so the present. Notwithstanding these drawbacks, the tables give a tolerably fair estimate of the relative liberality of the churches in the different portions of the field. We leave the facts to tell their own tale.

W. W. Hill.

MINNESOTA.

We give below the first of a series of short articles from an excellent brother in Minnesota, with which we hope to be able from time to time to furnish our readers. This is among the most important of all the missionary fields in the great West. The soil, climate, water, lumber, and great abundance of good lands now in market, offer inducements to emigrants second to none in the western country. There will soon be there a large population; and this is the time to plant our church there, that it may grow up and extend with the increasing population. The little church just organized in St. Paul, greatly needs a house of worship. They appeal to benevolent Christians in our church for assistance in this their time of need. The great importance of this enterprise cannot be doubted, and we sincerely hope their appeal will not be in vain. Any donations sent to our office will be gladly received, and go directly to the end for which they are given.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

St. Paul, Minnesota, Feb. 27, 1852.

In attempting to furnish a few short articles for the Record, giving information in regard to Minnesota, we feel that our pieces must of necessity differ from those usually published in the department of Domestic Missions. Such articles relate generally, to the state of churches in missionary fields. As yet we have but little to communicate upon this subject, having just commenced our labours, and being the first of our branch of the church in Minnesota.

I have just organized a church in St. Paul, consisting of eight members, four males, and four females; we have elected two elders, and expect to sit down together at the Lord's table, for the first time, on next Sabbath the 29th of February. This is a small beginning, but the Lord is able to make "the little one a thousand," and our prayer is that he may hasten it in his time.

St. Paul is the capital of Minnesota Territory. It is situated on the east bank of the Mississippi, seven miles below the mouth of the Minnesota, or St. Peter's river, and contains at present a population of two thousand. The town, as now laid out, extends along the river a distance of two miles. Its site is beautiful; a succession of table-lands approaching the river terminates at the water's edge in a perpendicular bluff of fifty feet. Upon the first bench stands St. Paul; from the foot of the second issue springs of the purest water sufficient to supply the whole town, and comparatively little expense will conduct it through every street.

St. Paul is the emporium for all this region of country, even as far north as the Selkirk Settlement in Canada, and as far west as the Red river of the North. From its present commercial importance, and its position at the head of navigation, below the falls of St. Anthony, St. Paul must become the city of the upper Mississippi. These things make this an important point, as well to those who labour to extend the kingdom of Christ, as to those who seek the wealth of this world. Neither has the importance of this point been overlooked by Christians, or the man of sin; the religious privileges of the place are keeping pace with other improvements. The New School Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, and Romanists, have all laid their foundations here, and a liberal policy has been persued by these denominations; they are all supplied with good houses of worship, and an able, laborious ministry. These churches have been built mainly by contributions from abroad, and have gone up like magic. The Presbyterian Church is a good brick building that cost seven thousand dollars, and in less than four months from the laying of the foundation, service was held in the building. We are the last who have entered this field, and may we not hope, that a like liberality will be shown by members of our branch of the church, as has been by our brethren of other denominations. The erection of a house of worship is essential to our enterprise in St. Paul, it is the work now to be done! and may we not hope that the stewards of God who read these lines will give them a prayerful consideration, and that the necessary means for the erection of a church will be forthcoming, that we may not be called to leave our field of labour to beg for this purpose. The extension of Christ's kingdom is the work of the whole church, and if ministers of the gospel give up the gains of this world, and devote their time and talents to this work, are not private members under obligations to give of their substance for the same work?

In view of these things allow me to ask each individual whose eye may fall upon the question. Do you desire to see that branch of the church to which you belong and whose doctrines you believe to be the truth of God, built up here and extended throughout the Minnesota Territory? If so, how much do you desire it? Estimate the amount in dollars, and forward it to Mr. S. D. Powel, Mission Rooms, 265 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, that it may be available.

A VOICE FROM NEW ORLEANS.

We give below a short but pungent extract from a sermon on Domestic Missions, recently published by Dr. Scott of New Orleans. May a kind Providence spare his useful life, and keep alive in his heart that love for souls, and that zeal for the advancement of Christ's kingdom, which have so long dwelt within him, and made him a bright and shining light, wherever the Lord has caused him to labour!

His remarks on the moral condition and wants of New Orleans may apply with equal force to all our great cities on our Atlantic coast—and the time has fully come for Christians in these cities to arise and bestir themselves in the building of Churches and in the employment of ministers and city-missionaries, lest ignorance and vice accumulate in fearful masses, and our cities vie in iniquity with many in the old countries, and send their pestilential influences over all our land.

Another extract may appear in our next number.

Among the mighty agencies which it has pleased God to ordain for the conversion of the world, the preaching of the Gospel is the chief. The cause of domestic missions, therefore, is the first and greatest cause of our age and country; and just in the proportion that our population increases, and as the agitations of the Old World cause its inhabitants to seek a home in the New, in the same degree are our obligations increased to support schools, colporteurs, missionaries and pastors throughout the length and breadth of our country.

The importance of religion, the superiority of Christianity to every other system of religious worship, and the sufficiency of the means which we possess for carrying into execution some more direct and extensive plans for the preaching of the Gospel, are subjects that none of you will call in question. We live in a missionary age, and in the midst of a vast missionary field. It is obvious to the mere stranger that this city and its neighbourhood present a wide field for steadfast, persevering and well-directed efforts for erecting churches and gathering Sabbath-schools and congregations. From the United States barracks below to Carrollton above, and on both sides of the river, and from the river bank to the lake shore, we have a missionary field, containing, it is believed, at least 150,000 souls. Seven years ago there was but one Presbyterian congregation in this city. Now, in the city and in Lafayette, by the blessing of God, there are seven. Six of these worship in English and one in French. But what are these among so great a multitude? At this moment there is a pressing necessity for missionaries and means to support them in this city. From many districts around us, and from many parts of the State, the Macedonian cry is made to us every day —come over and help us.

Lift up your eyes and look at the thousands of people of colour in this city, who have no pastor to care for their souls. Look at the thirty thousand Germans among us without a single regularly organized Presbyterian church; and look at the hundreds of American families, or families that speak the English language, who do not attend any place of Protestant worship. Think of the vast multitude of immortal beings that crowd our streets every season; and remember that these are our countrymen—that many of them are not pious—that they are living in sinful but hopeless destitution—many of them almost indifferent on the subject—many of them filled with gross and fatal delusions—liable every moment to sickness and death—a dark and gloomy grave awaiting them, and beyond the grave, an unknown, awful eternity coming to meet them!

Can anything more be wanting to awaken your piety and call forth all your sympathies? They are our fellow-men. They are living in sin, and the only hope of saving them from hell, is to bring them, before they die, to Christ.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

In addition to the religious interest among the students at Oglethorpe University, Ga., referred to in the last Record, we learn that a similar state of things exists, by the grace of God, among the students at Centre College, Danville, Ky., at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, Pa., and at the Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

The following particulars of the revival in Jefferson College are contained in a letter recently received.

Jefferson has been blessed with a precious season of revival. It began on the day set apart for special prayer. It seems to verify the experience of the prophet, that while God's people were calling upon God and confessing their sins and presenting their petitions, God heard and answered them. About forty-five students of the College have professed a hope, and fifteen others, principally in the Ladies' Seminary, have been hopefully converted. A deep, solemn influence still pervades the Seminary, but the College has disbanded, and very many have gone forth under deep convictions. What the influence of associating with friends and a cold and careless world may be upon them, God only knows. Oh may He keep them from going backward, and lead them to a knowledge of himself. Many who had not thought of it, or were undecided, are now looking forward to the study of the ministry. I trust thousands shall rejoice, not only through time, but throughout eternity's ceaseless ages, and praise God for this revival.

Such wonderful testimonies to the connection between prayer and its answer, record the fidelity of our covenant-keeping God, the sincerity of his promises, and his readiness to do still greater things for his people if they will draw near to him in increased faith and love.

GENEVA THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL.

DR. MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ'S ADDRESS.

[We have received, through the kindness of the Rev. J. C. Lowrie, the circular of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, a part of which we translate as containing matter of much interest in this department.]

The opening exercises of the scholastic year took place in the Oratory, on October 3d. Professor Merle d'Aubigné presided. Many members of the Committee were present, and also a number of friends from abroad. Among the latter were noticed two of the early pupils of the school, the Rev. Mr. Anet, of Brussels, and the Rev. Mr. Sibleyras. After prayer, and the reading of a portion of the word of God, the President of the school addressed the students in an exhortation, of which we can only give a brief outline.

It may be remarked, that among the different works of the Church, the work of the Theological School was perhaps the one which presented the greatest difficulties; its very excellence provokes equally the favour and the disfavour of men; and according to the source from whence the Professors draw their instructions, whether it be pure or poisoned, is the Theological School a blessing or a curse. But it is not only in reference to the Professors that difficulties exist, but in reference to the students also. Some of these difficulties ought to be distinctly pointed out; and omitting to-day theological discussions, we will take views altogether practical; following the example of Paul, who in his epistles, after the great principles of Christian theology, lays down the rules of life. There are general facilities, as well as special, for the student in this School. But alas! from these very advantages come new difficulties and dangerous rocks. It is to these that we wish to call your attention. (Here the Professor developed a train of thought, of which we can only sum up the principal points.)

The first advantage of this School is, that it receives as students only those who are truly converted, at least so far as man can judge. The School believes that the minister of the word is specially called to invite his hearers to enter in by the gate, which is Christ. And in order to invite others and to give them the necessary directions, it is absolutely necessary to have entered in himself. But here is a snare. Because he is in the Theological School, a student may imagine that he has been converted, whilst he may be yet in his sins. If there are souls who have not experienced the new birth, there are also those who, thinking that they have, do not show its fruits. A defective, languishing, Christian life,—this is one of the snares to which we particularly call your attention; and in order to escape from this evil, we invite you truly to find Jesus Christ, and truly to walk with him, poor in spirit but rich in faith.

A second advantage of this school is, that those who send young men here are not worldly parents and friends, desirous of procuring for them a sure and lucrative position in life. It is the pious who send us our pupils; but here too there may be a snare. Indiscreet friends in their zeal for the kingdom of God, imagine sometimes that because a young man is pious, he is fit for the ministry. They forget that he must have judgment, good natural capacities, and the gift of speech. Sometimes young men are even drawn here by the desire to quit an obscure situation and to rise to a higher one.

A third advantage of this school is found in the helps of various kinds that are here afforded. Close at hand, however, lurks a danger, that of weakening the great principle of personal activity. The man, the minister, should develope himself freely, spontaneously, having no other support than God alone. Our aim ought to be to help, but only to help the young man to help himself.

A fourth advantage of this school is, that it does not aim at making worldly orators, who task their powers to elaborate three or four sermons a year. We demand that each one of you should know how to speak in season and out of season, and from the abundance of the heart. But then, there is a snare in our very gifts. A readiness in extemporaneous preaching ruins ministers and their ministry; we could wish that your work might be easy, and at the same time a difficult work. Those who in California content themselves with scratching the surface of the ground, find nothing; they must go down deep. A number of the students never find the gold which God has hid in his word, nay, which he has hid in themselves, and always remain moderate men.

A fifth advantage is in the theological and other duties which are required of you; duties more considerable perhaps here than elsewhere. But at this point comes another snare—health compromised. A minister without health soon finds that his soul becomes dispirited, and his labours fewer. After all, it is not so much work that kills. Work often vivifies. What injures health is the want of care in exercise, in diet, and above all, in system about our work.

A sixth advantage consists in the fact that, coming principally from the country and from small towns, you are here in a larger city where you have more intercourse with persons of superior culture. This is of great price. A student, or a minister who is rude and clownish, may injure the ministry. Every Christian, and above all, every minister ought to be a prepossessing and courteous man; not in the spirit of the world, but in the spirit of St. Paul. But in connexion with this advantage also is a snare; it is the want of humility, of simplicity, of self-renunciation. It is the too easy Christianity which appears to characterize evangelical religion in our day. Students have too light habits of intercourse. They form too soon projects of marriage, or glide easily into the midst of worldliness.

A seventh advantage is, that you live in a time of theological excitements, and the excitements have been recently no where greater than in this school. Agitations are good in some respects, for death is the worst of evils; but there is also danger. I would particularly warn you of two reefs, the Charybdis and the Scylla of Theology, namely, the spirit of tradition, and the spirit of innovation. The spirit of tradition has for a long time reigned over the church, it has rejected all improvements, all reform, resting upon no other basis than ecclesiastical authority, which perpetuates the faults and errors of antiquity. But now we see an opposite tendency, a spirit of licentious innovation, of changes without end, of radical revolution. It would appear that, in order to correct one evil—tradition, it was necessary to rush into another—innovation. You are young, you are in search of truth, you thirst for it: this is well. But remember that between the two abysses of tradition and innovation there is a rock, the word of God. Submit yourselves to the word, but do not make the word submit to you. "Germany!" is the cry; "Germany!" There are, undoubtedly, doctors in Germany, even among the best, who do not yield to the word the homage which is its due. But since so much is said of Germany, I will quote a saying of a German, a celebrated saying of a celebrated German. "My wooden house on which my sun-dial stands is out of order," says Claudius in his Asinus omnia secum portans; "the dial no longer indicates the exact hour; neighbour what shall I do? Must I arrange my house and make it accord with the sun; or must I lay hold of the sun, and make it agree with my house?"

Yes, gentlemen, and there is the greatest advantage you can find among us; we wish you to be theologians of God's word—of all the word—of the word which is human throughout, and throughout perfectly divine. And it is not only to your intellect that we present it; it is to your heart, to your will, to your life. As the theologian ought to receive all the word, the word reclaims all the theologian. Theologians have often appeared, whose only qualifications were those of human science. It is true we are never but as fragments, parts of a book which is not yet complete. But we ought to go on unto perfection, and to endeavour to be theologians, not after the model of this or that University, but after the model of St. John or St. Paul.

After this discourse, of which we have given a mere abstract, the ministers present expressed their great joy in assisting at the opening of the School, and said that it was only after their entrance upon an active life of evangelization that they appreciated the full value of their theological studies. They exhorted the present pupils to profit by all the means of instruction now offered to them, for later in life they would find comparatively little time for study.

The President then presented the Rev. Mr. Binder as Mr. Raymond's successor in the functions of Director of the Preparatory School.

Professors Gaussen, Pilet, and La Harpe, and the Rev. Messrs. Cordes and St. George, then addressed to the students a few words of exhortation and encouragement. Afterwards two of the students and several other brethren successively engaged in prayer to God, and the assembly broke up after singing, and the benediction.

The School this year numbers only 26 students, of whom four candidates are preparing for their final examination.

WANT OF MINISTERS.

The rapid growth of our country, and the increasing demand for able and competent men to fill the pastoral office of old and new churches, is a question of deep and solemn interest. Dr. Scudder, the veteran missionary, while lecturing on this subject uses the following language:

"There is another subject which ought to engage the attention of every pastor. I allude to the efforts which should be made to bring forward young men of suitable qualifications for the gospel ministry. The qualifications to which I allude are piety, common sense, sound faith, education, and good health.

Thousands of this description are to be found among the great body of the pious young men belonging to our different evangelical churches—young men who have gone, or who are about to go to some secular pursuit, with little or no effort on the part of Christians to prevent it. There are at present hundreds of pious young men in our colleges who ought to study for the ministry; but who, I fear, will be lost to it, and this too from the sole reason, that suitable efforts will not be made to secure them for it. O for a baptism of the Holy Spirit upon the professors of these colleges, that they may be constrained to be unwearied, both in public and in private, in making these efforts. Such a course of procedure would, in the times that are passed, have prevented many a pang of regret and sorrow. President Pierce, in speaking of his remissness on this point, says, 'Having within twelve years admitted not far from one hundred young men to the church, I know not one of the number who is now on his way to the ministry; and coming among the churches of the Western Reserve, where God has poured out his Spirit of late, in the most wonderful manner, and gathered multitudes of youths into the fold, and seeing how few young men are in the course of preparation for the ministry, I have been led to fear that others like myself have been neglectful of Christian obligation.' With proper efforts many of these young men might, under the blessing of God, have been secured for the ministry. Should the eyes of any minister of the gospel who is connected with our colleges, pass over these pages, I would beg to ask of him, if he has ever laboured with the pious young men in the institution to which he belongs, for the purpose of securing them for the gospel ministry? Has the awful condition of the heathen, who, humanly speaking, must be lost, unless they are secured for it, constrained him to pray agonizingly, and to labour in season and out of season for this great object? If not, I fear that he has been making sad work for a dying hour, and more sad work for the judgment-seat of Christ, and for eternity.

"Where efforts to bring forward young men to the gospel ministry have, to any considerable extent, been made, how blessed have been the results. I have read of one church which, in fourteen years, furnished between thirty and forty persons who had either entered the ministry or who were about to enter it, and in whose bosom their remained from ten to fifteen others who had expressed their desire to enter it. One minister of the gospel, who had been a settled pastor for about thirty-five years, was made instrumental in introducing one labourer for nearly each year of his ministry. And what was the secret of his success? It was because he urged upon all the young men of piety, the consideration of the duty of preparing for this sacred office. O, if every pastor of our churches would pursue a similar course, and if, in addition to his private efforts, he would preach at least annually upon this subject, what an amount of good might be accomplished. He might be the means of having the gospel preached to thousands who must otherwise be left to perish. May grace be given to you, dear brethren, so to act in this momentous business, that when you come to the close of life, you may have the unspeakable pleasure of reflecting that you are about to leave many who have been brought into the ministry through your instrumentality."

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE GLORY OF AN ACADEMY.

The highest end of an institution of education is to lead the soul to Christ, the great Teacher for time and for eternity. To reject religion from a course of human training is to degrade its main object, and to run the hazard of incurring the punishment of God. Religion is the one thing needful. Its knowledge is a natural part of a system of education. It is the best part. It will assist in developing the intellect as well as in directing the conscience, in forming high moral character, and in saving the soul. Whatever else is taught in schools, academies and colleges,

LET CHRISTIANITY BE TAUGHT.

The following information, incidentally contained in one of our letters, shows how the blessing of God accompanies the means of his appointment:

"The Academy at Elder's Ridge, under the care of Blairsville Presbytery, and superintended by the Rev. A. Donaldson, has had some indications of the special presence of God, and his willingness to bestow blessings. At a recent communion, eight of the students connected themselves with the church; and since then three or four others have professed a hope. A number of others were deeply concerned. This institution numbered fifty students during the past winter and will perhaps reach sixty-five or seventy during the summer. What encouragement do these facts give to God's people, constantly to send up to his throne the prayer, "O Lord, revive thy work."

The Presbyterian Church will have reason to praise God throughout eternity for the disposition, prompted by his grace, to enter at last upon the work of Christian education. A great field is before us; and it will become greater and greater just as we keep in view the true glory of educational institutions.

MARENGO ACADEMY.

The following letter from the Rev. R. H. RICHARDSON, of Chicago, Illinois, contains the interesting intelligence of the addition of another Presbyterial Academy to the growing list of our Christian Institutions. God is opening the way for our Church to regain her educational influence. Though infidels gnash their teeth, and fellow Christians sometimes cry out "sectarianism," the path of duty is plain before us. We have covenant obligations which no cry from earth should tempt us to hesitate to fulfil. The day is not far off when there will be a hundred Academies in our Church—not left to the contingencies of a precarious life, but sustained in being by the prayers and ties of the Church herself, and all keeping in view "the chief end of man."

The new Presbytery of Chicago has signalized its ecclesiastical origin by a most influential movement; and we trust that it will put into operation another academy before long.

MARENGO ACADEMY OF THE PRESBYTERY OF CHICAGO.

Chicago, Illinois, April 9, 1852.

Rev. C. Van Rensselaer, D. D.

Dear Brother:—The new Presbytery of Chicago, which has just held its first meeting at Marengo, made a good beginning in the matter of education, by receiving under its charge a school in successful operation at Marengo, and adopting it as the "Marengo Academy of the Presbytery of Chicago." The school during its last term had seventy scholars in attendance; is under the management of a competent and faithful teacher, and has the permanent use of excellent rooms in the basement of the new Presbyterian church, now in process of erection in the village of Marengo. The principal room is now completed and well fitted up for its object. Two others are as yet unfinished. It is probable that application may be made to the Board of Education for aid towards this and other wants of the Academy; and I do not hesitate to say that the funds of the Board could not be more judiciously and beneficially employed.

Presbytery elected the Trustees required by the rules adopted, and these Trustees have met and organized themselves. This is our first Presbyterial Academy. We hope ere long to report the establishment of others.

I send you annexed the constitution or regulations adopted by the Presbytery for the government of the academy.

1. This Academy shall be known by the name of "The Marengo Academy of the Presbytery of Chicago."

2. The Academy shall be under the management of a Board of Trustees, consisting of five persons, all of whom shall be members of Presbyterian congregations, and a majority of whom shall be members of the Presbyterian church; and every three of said Board shall constitute a quorum competent to the transaction of business lawfully within their province.

3. The Presbytery reserves to itself forever the right of visitation and of the appointment of Trustees.

4. The Board of Trustees shall have power to elect teachers; prescribe their terms of office; fix their salaries; the prices of tuition; the number and length of terms per annum &c.; and these Trustees shall meet at least once a term, or oftener, on a call of any three members, one notice having been given to all at such time or times as may be agreed on among themselves. It shall also be the duty of the Trustees to present annually at the spring meeting of the Presbytery a report of their doings for the year past; and these Trustees shall be elected annually by the Presbytery at said meeting.

5. It shall be the duty of the Presbyterial Committee on Education to visit and examine said Academy at least once a year, or oftener, at such time or times as they may deem best, and shall report the results of such examinations at the spring meeting of Presbytery.

6. These rules may be altered by a vote of two-thirds of the members present at any stated meeting of the Presbytery.

You will find perhaps some defects in the above regulations, but they are the best which our limited time and knowledge enabled us to frame.

Yours very truly,

R. H. RICHARDSON,
Stated Clerk.

THE DEMAND AND THE SUPPLY.

The following statements of the Rev. L. B. Gaston, agent of education of the Synod of Memphis, contains within a few lines important truth on this great subject:

As Synodical agent for the Board of Education the undersigned would represent to the Synod the result of the past year's observation and experience.

First, That the call for ministerial labour in our bounds is great—yea, distressingly so.

Secondly, That the prospects of supply from all foreign sources are oppressively discouraging.

Thirdly, That aside from the providence of God, the only alternative is, a total decline of Presbyterianism within our bounds, or the effort to rear up and provide the requisite supply of ministers from our own resources. To that end, it will be indispensably necessary to institute a system of educational processes, by which the children of the Church shall be trained up within the pale of its influence.

This system shall be, 1st. The primary schools, which shall be, if possible, the Parochial order. 2d. Academical schools, both male and female, under the care of the Presbyteries, and 3d. One or more Collegiate schools under the care and control of the Synod.

The undersigned earnestly and sincerely urges upon Synod the consideration of this important subject, with special reference to the immediate organization of this system, under the pressure of an urgent claim of the Gospel ministry upon the sons and daughters of the church of Jesus Christ, to supply the wide-spread destitutions of the southwest. The undersigned had cause to regret the partial and imperfect observance of the recommendation of Synod, and the General Assembly, by the members of Synod, touching the subjects of presenting to the churches the claims of the gospel ministry and special prayer for Colleges. He would fain hope that such weighty recommendations might not in future be lightly entertained by brethren. May the Great Head of the Church guide us into the ways of all righteousness.

L. B. GASTON, Agent.

A FEMALE COLLEGE IN THE PRESBYTERY OF WESTERN DISTRICT, TENN.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Western District, recently held, the following action was taken in reference to the Female Institution under the care of the Presbytery.

Jno. W. Campbell, E. S. Campbell, and J. H Gillespie were appointed a committee to report on the number, character, and duties of a Board Trustees, to take charge of our Female College located at Denmark, Western District Presbytery, January 26, 1852.

The Committee appointed on the Female College reported as follows, viz:

Resolved, That there shall be twelve Trustees for the supervision and control of the Denmark Female College, viz: Dr. Jno. Ingram, J. B. Neely, Thos. Reid, A. R. Reid, Jno. W. Love, Jno. Alston, Jno.

W. Campbell, E. S. Campbell, J. W. Strother, C. McKinney, B. Tyson, and J. H. Gillespie, and that the Principal of the Institution shall be, ex-officio, President of the Board. That four Trustees, together with the President, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of ordinary business; but in all cases of elections of officers, and in all fundamental regulations, there shall be a majority of the whole Board voting—in order to carry or repeal the same. That a majority of the Trustees shall reside in, or as near Denmark as practicable. That in all cases when there be an equal number of votes for or against any measure, the President is to give the casting vote.

Resolved, That Jas. H. Gillespie, Jno. Ingram, and J. W. Strother, be and they are hereby appointed by this body, to draft and present for enactment to the Tennessee Legislature now in session, a suitable charter, in conformity with the principles and designations embraced in the foregoing and present resolutions, and that the Trustees before designated, whose names shall be embodied in the charter to be drafted shall hold their office indefinitely, and have power to fill, in case of death or resignations, vacancies in the Board—subject however to the revision and confirmation or rejection of this Presbytery, as in the wisdom of the same shall be deemed proper and expedient.

Received and adopted.

THE BAPTIZED YOUTH.

Those who have received the seal of the covenant constitute a very interesting portion of the community. For their salvation there is special encouragement to labour and pray. This is a truth full of encouragement to parents who have consecrated their children to God; it is full of encouragement to ministers, in reference to that class of their hearers, and full of encouragement to all who pray for the welfare of Zion in reference to the same individuals. According to the blessed promises, we are encouraged to pray for all sorts and conditions of men, even for them "that are afar off;" but if there be any meaning in infant baptism, we have still greater encouragements from a covenant-keeping God, to pray for those who are within the pale of the covenant. How important, then, it becomes, that all God's people should seek the conversion of those who have been baptized!

If we have special encouragements to seek their salvation, there is also a special responsibility resting upon us to do so. Christians in general should remember such persons in their prayers, and ministers should make them a special object of their labours. Every minister should keep a complete roll of all the baptized young people in his congregation, that he may not overlook any of them, and that he may have the personal salvation of each as a definite object before his mind. The writer of this article has found a decided advantage in this plan, and can recommend it from his own experience.

Definiteness is very important in all our prayers and plans of usefulness. It is very important that parents should make it the special object of their heart's desires and prayers unto God, that their children may be converted before leaving the paternal roof. It is a dreadful error for parents to put off the expectation of their children's conversion to some distant period. The golden opportunity to seek the conversion of their children is while they remain in their own family circle. Every parent should do all in his power to have his children interested in the great salvation, before they are thrown upon their own resources, amidst the temptations and distracting cares of life. Afterwards, the probability of their ever being converted is very seriously diminished. When we think of the future of many, the heart sickens at the prospect. Let every parent be faithful towards his children while under his influence, as he expects to meet them before the throne of God. —Presbyterian.

THE FAMILY.

The family is the nursery of the future Church; and every parent is to his children what his pastor is to him. They are placed under his care to be trained up "in the way they should go," to be brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Hence every family should become "a house of prayer"—a nursery of piety, a vestibule of the Church, a preparatory department, in which the infant mind is trained for a position in Zion. And every parent should be a priest over his family, a shepherd, spiritual guide, teacher, and protector of the infant immortals intrusted to him. It is thus the duty of every parent to consecrate his children to God, and instruct them in his ways. The vows and obligation of their baptism involve this.

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,

No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.

The Annual Meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held at the Mission House, New York, on Monday, May 4, at 4 o'clock, P. M.

The Annual Sermon will be preached by the Rev. William A. Scott, D. D., before the General Assembly in Charleston, South Carolina. The Rev. William T. Hamilton, D. D. is the alternate preacher.

A Sermon for the Board will also be preached in the church on University Place, New York city, by the Rev. William B. Sprague, D. D., and an Abstract of the proceedings of the last year presented, on the Sabbath evening preceding the meeting of the Board.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, April 13, 1852.

Siam Mission.—The missionaries write, under dates of January 10th to 12th, that they have obtained formal possession of the ground for their buildings. The lot contains about an acre and a half, and is most favourably situated for their purposes. Dr. House says, "For the eligible location of the lot, its size, and the reasonable terms on which it is secured to us, we have reason to congratulate ourselves and the Church. He, to whose providential direction we trust we had committed ourselves during four and a half long years of hope deferred, has at last brought us out into a large place; and now, with no more of doubt and uncertainty than hangs over most of human affairs, we can go on with our work, assured of what we never were before—an abiding place in the land. We have now abundance of room for carrying on the different branches of missionary operations. . . . That some are coming to join us, we do verily persuade ourselves. Has not the time arrived for the Church to reinforce their mission in this field? Shall we not thus read the providential dealings of God with us and this land during the last year?"

China Missions.—We have received letters from Canton, January 27; Shanghai, January 13; and Ningpo, January 9. Two young women had been received as members of the church at Ningpo, one of them a pupil in the boarding school, the other a member of Miss Aldersey's school. Two persons at the same city, one of them a teacher, were inquirers; and a third professes to be a Christian.—"The experiment of writing and teaching the colloquial dialect goes on with increasing satisfaction," writes one of the brethren at Ningpo. At Canton, Mr. Happer writes—"The interest in emigration to California is increasing wonderfully. Sixteen ships are now chartered to convey Chinese emigrants, at from $40 to $50 apiece. . . . I think 8000 is a low estimate of the number now in California. The letters that come back urge their friends to sell out all to get the means to come. They are nearly all from this vicinity, and speak this dialect."

India Missions.—Our last letters are dated at Lahor, January 30; Lodiana, February 6; Amballa, February 6; Futtehgurh, February 7; Mynpurie, February 7; Agra, February 4; Allahabad, February 3. Two members of the little Christian congregation at Allahabad had been removed by death, one an aged woman, who had been a member of the church for eight or ten years, the other a young woman—both of whom professed to rely solely on the Lord Jesus for eternal life. Four persons were to apply to the church-session at Agra, the same week in which the letter from that station was written, for admission as members of the church.

Africa: Corisco Mission.—A letter of the Rev. J. L. Mackey, of December 17, mentions his continued encouragement in the work of the mission. He had commenced a school with twenty boys; but the number soon increased, until forty-eight were in regular attendance. Applications were made to him frequently to receive children as boarders. The Sabbath service in the chapel was very well attended. Mr. Mackey adds, "I have not been a day sick for many months. My health has been mercifully preserved in the midst of many labours. . . . I need not express to you again my strong desire to see this mission strengthened by the arrival of additional labourers."

Chippawa and Ottawa Mission.—A new station has been chosen for this mission on the west side of Grand Traverse bay, and a station will be formed also on Little Traverse bay. Some new arrangements will be adopted in regard to the schools of the mission. These things will be stated particularly in the Annual Report. They grow out of the blessing of God upon the mission in time past. In carrying the new plans into effect, Mr. Dougherty has displayed his usual energy. We quote a paragraph from his last letter, dated March 9, mentioning his visit to Little Traverse. "It is quite a formidable job, after a tiresome day's walk, to dig away the snow, some two and a half feet deep, and get a camp made and wood cut to keep comfortable, when the thermometer is from 6° to 8° below zero. We had one cold bright day, and having no protection for my face, it was very badly burned and my eyes very painful. I was affected with what the Indians call 'snow blind.' I suffered on the way back very much in my face and eyes. To day I am quite comfortable and can see to read and write. I found the lot which they [the Indians] had selected for the school a very good location."

Visit to the South-West Indian Missions.—Walter Lowrie, Esq., one of the Secretaries of the Board, left this city on the 12th of April, on a visit to the Choctaw, Creek, Chickasaw, and Seminole Missions. He will probably be absent from the office on this journey some two months.

Legacy to the Board.—The newspapers have made public the statement, that a large legacy has been left to the Board by the late Mr. Hans Wilson, of Steubenville, Ohio. To prevent erroneous impressions, it is proper for us to mention that the specific bequest is $1000.—The larger sum, published in the newspapers, is a residuary amount—a matter of estimate, and not payable until after an event, which we hope will be many years distant.

THE PUEBLO INDIANS.

Much consideration has been given to the subject of forming a Mission among the Indians of New Mexico. Inquiries have been made, and information collected in various quarters, bearing on this important question. The following paper prepared by the Secretary in charge of the correspondence with the Indian Missions, embodies a brief abstract of the information thus far obtained concerning the Pueblos. It will aid our readers to think of them, to pray for them, and if the way is open, to aid with their gifts in support of a Mission amongst them. It may perhaps lead some to offer themselves as labourers in this interesting field.

The Pueblo Indians of New Mexico reside in twenty pueblos, situate on or near the Rio Grande, for a distance of more than three hundred miles. The following list contains the names of the pueblos, and the population, according to Schoolcraft's History of the Indian Tribes, Vol. I. p. 519.

1	Taos,	population, 345.	50 miles above Santa Fe.
2	Pecuris,	" 250.	Above Santa Fe.
3	San Juan,	" 275.	20 miles above.
4	Poquaque,	" 200.	12 miles above.
5	Santa Clara,	" 350.
6	San Ildefonso,	" 250.
7	Jemes,	" 450.	Below Santa Fe.
8	Silla,	" 250.	"
9	Santa Ana,	" 300.	"
10	Cochite,	" 500.	22 miles below.
11	San Domingo,	" 750.	25 " "
12	San Felipe,	" 275.	30 " "
13	Sandia,	" 400.	"
14	Isletta,	" 450.	60 " "
15	Leutis,	" 250.	65 " "
16	Laguna,	" 900.	"
17	Acoma,	" 750.	"
18	Socorro,	" 600.	Below El Paso.
19	Isletta,	" 650.	" "
20	Zuni,	" 2985.

The location of Zuni has not been definitely ascertained. An intelligent trader places it 186 miles south-west from Santa Fe. They are said to be idolaters. Later information makes the population in Santa Ana, San Felipe, and Isletta, above El Paso, nearly double what is here given.

Major Emory of the United States Army, who passed through New Mexico in 1846, gives the following account of his interview with these Indians:

The next day the chiefs and head men of the Pueblo Indians came to give me their adhesion, and express their great satisfaction at our arrival. These large and formidable tribes are amongst the best and most peaceable citizens of New Mexico. They early after the Spanish conquests embraced the forms of religion and the manners and customs of their more civilized masters, the Spaniards. Their interview was long and interesting. They narrated what is a tradition with them, that the white man would come from the far East and release them from the bonds and shackles which the Spaniards had imposed, not in name, but in a worse form than slavery.

An invitation was received from the Pueblo Indians to visit their town of San Domingo. . . We had not proceeded far before we met ten or fifteen sachemic-looking old Indians, well mounted, and two of them carrying gold headed canes and tassels, the emblems of office in New Mexico. . . .

When a few miles from the town, we saw a cloud of dust rapidly advancing, and soon the air was rent with a terrible yell, resembling the Florida war-whoop. The first object that caught my eye, through the column of dust, was a fierce pair of buffalo horns, overlapped with long shaggy hair. As they approached, the sturdy form of a naked Indian, revealed itself beneath the horns, with shield and lance, dashing at full speed, on a white horse, which like his own body was painted all the colours of the rainbow; and then, one by one, his followers came on, painted to the eyes, their own heads and their horses covered with all the strange equipments that the brute creation could afford in the way of horns, sculls, tails, feathers, and claws; as they passed us, one rank on each side fired a volley under our horses' bellies, from the right and from the left. . . .

In the cañon we were joined by the priest, a fat old white gentleman. We were escorted to the Padri's, of course; for here, as everywhere else, these men are the most intelligent and best to do in the world, and when the good people wish to put their best foot foremost, the Padri's wines, beds and couches have to suffer. The entrance to the portal was lined with the women of the village, all dressed alike, and ranged in treble files; they looked fat and stupid.

We were shown into his Reverence's parlour, tapestried with curtains, stamped with the likenesses of all the Presidents of the United States up to this time. The cushions were of spotless damask, and the couch covered with a white Navajoe blanket worked in richly coloured flowers.

In November last a number of these pueblos was visited by John Griener, Esq., an intelligent Indian agent in New Mexico. He describes the people of Cochite as honest and industrious. Their wheat crop will be a failure, but of corn they will have 1500 bushels for sale.

San Domingo is represented as one of the most densely populated and flourishing pueblos in the territory. They own six hundred head of cows and oxen, with horses and mules, and large flocks of sheep and goats. Their lands are under fine cultivation, with large orchards of apples, plums, and peaches.

San Felipe was also in a thriving state. The people own 125 horses, 250 cows and oxen, and 1500 sheep and goats; with orchards, and large quantities of corn. In the settlement of some claims against the Government, they were asked if they were willing to be sworn. The answer was brief and earnest, "Why should we not; are we not Christians?"

Santa Ana is clean and neat, and the people are very industrious. They have 125 horses, 225 head of cattle, and orchards, and 1500 bushels of corn for sale.

Jemes is also in good order, kept very clean, the houses well built and the people comfortable. They own 200 horses, 225 cattle, and 300 goats.

Silla was less thriving. Their crops have failed by the drought, and they have but few horses and cattle. But they said "What God gave them, they always tried to be contented with."

Sandia is compactly built, and has some of the best lands in the territory. This is the only pueblo visited in which any drunkenness was seen, many of the Indians being engaged in distilling brandy from grapes. Here they are decreasing in number.

Isletta is one of the richest pueblos in the territory; a wealthy Indian sold last year $2000 worth of fruit and wine. They have 400 horses and mules, as many cattle, many sheep and goats; some ten or twelve orchards, and a number of vineyards.

At all the pueblos the most serious complaints were made against the Mexicans, many of them running back for a long period, and especially of their encroachments on their land. These were all taken down by the agent, and reported to the Governor of the territory.

Besides these accounts of separate pueblos, the following information relating to the Pueblo Indians generally, is condensed from the same able report of Mr. Griener.

The men in summer wear nothing but a shirt and breech cloth; in the winter they add a blanket or buffalo robe, and leggins and moccasons. Beads are highly prized by them, and are worn around the neck, and worked into their holiday dresses. They pull their beards out by the roots.

The women wear a dark-coloured shawl or blanket, called manta, which, covering one shoulder, is drawn under the other, and is fastened round the waist by a belt, leaving the arms free and bare. Their dresses are short, coming just below the knee, with leggins and shoes of buckskin. Many of them may be called handsome, and their virtue is above any suspicion.

The pueblos are built with streets, running parallel with each other; the houses constructed of adobas, two stories high, the entrance in all cases being through the roof by a trap door, to which access is had by ladders, which can be drawn up at pleasure.

Every pueblo has one large Catholic church, and two estuffas. The churches are always well filled on Sundays and fast days, for the most devout Catholics in this Catholic country are the Pueblo Indians. They seem also to have retained a portion of their old customs. They have six dances, for which they paint and dress themselves in the most fantastic manner—the Montezuma, the Green Corn, the Buffalo, the Deer, the Cavallida, and the Melachine dances.

The estuffas are circular, built of adobas, from six to eight feet high, and one hundred and twenty feet in circumference. Their dances are held on the flat roof, and their councils within the building.

The principal officers of a pueblo are, an alcade, a cacique, a war captain, and a clerk of the church or sexton. The alcade regulates the police, the cacique is one of the council, and a sort of legal adviser. The council is composed of twelve of their oldest and most influential men. The war captain trains all the young men in feats of arms, and leads all their hostile expeditions. The clerk of the church attends to the religious ceremonies, in the absence of the priest, and takes charge of the church. All these officers are elected annually.

The honesty of the Pueblo Indians is remarkable. Any of them can get credit for what they want, and theft is almost unknown. They treat their aged people with much kindness and affection. The best seats in their public meetings, and the choicest articles of food are always provided for them, and the greatest deference paid to their opinions. But although they show so much kindness to their friends, they are more fierce in war than even the wild Indians. Many of them own fine rifles, and all of them use the bow and the arrow, and the spear.

They are all said to understand the Spanish language, and a few of them can read. They have also a language of their own, which differs, to some extent, among the different pueblos.

Their laws for the regulation of the descent of property in the case of death, are just and equitable.

What would be the success of missionary operations among them, it is impossible to say till the trial should be made. Interesting as these people undoubtedly are, it would be well for the missionary who may be sent to them not to be over sanguine at first. It is easy for those not very familiar with missionary operations to say, There are no national prejudices in the way, and hence they are ready to receive instruction at once. This may be so, but behind all this is the unbelief of the human heart, and the alienation by nature of the whole soul from God. What influence their priests may have acquired over them, can only be known when a pure gospel is presented to them. They may prefer their present system of baptized heathenism, as so many thousands elsewhere prefer it, to the humbling doctrine of the cross of Christ, and salvation through him without money and without price.

But whilst the Church should not be carried away with general statements of great promise and an easy victory, neither should she be discouraged, though certain to meet with difficulties. These she meets with everywhere in her encounters with heathenism and the man of sin. It is by the preaching of the truth that the elect of God will be gathered into the fold of Christ; and as the door is now open, no delay should take place in sending the truth to this interesting people, now for the first time relieved from their oppressors, and brought under that civil and religious liberty, which permits every man to read the word of God, and secures to him the liberty of worshipping God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

For some time this mission would be an expensive one, compared with others. The supplies must be sent from Missouri, and the carriage alone of a barrel of flour is twenty-five dollars. But this expense would gradually be lessening, as the territory fills up with inhabitants.

Besides the foregoing twenty pueblos, there are seven others, called Moquid Pueblos. Little is yet known of them. They are said to number 11,000, and are supposed to be due west of Santa Fe, and three or four days travel north-west from Zuni. They all speak the same language, but are reported to be separate, distinct, and independent republics: though for the purpose of mutual protection they all join with each other.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

AN EVENING AT JWALA MUKHI.

Sights among the Heathen.

The Rev. J. H. Orbison is the writer of the following paper. No one who begins to read it will leave it unfinished. Our missionary friends help us to see the heathen as they are.

Omitting an account of the journey from Lodiáná, and many other details, let me present some of the scenes witnessed one evening at the Mela of Jwálámukhí last year. The city of Jwálámukhí is in the eastern part of the Panjáb, situated at the foot of one of the ranges of the grand Himalaya chain of mountains. The city takes its name from the shrine, and the shrine is called Jwálá-mukh—Mouth of Flame—from the fact that thin, lambent flames of burning gas issue from the mountain side. The Hindus say and believe that these flames are but the manifestation of one of their most popular goddesses. Here they have built a temple enclosing the Devi, and here millions present their offerings. It is given out by the Priests, and believed by the people, that no combustible material will burn in this flame. But this is wisely accompanied with a proviso that the material must be brought in contact with the flame involuntarily, undesignedly. Countless numbers of absurd and contradictory stories about this manifestation of gas receive full credence by this poor, deluded people.

The scenes of one evening are sufficient to show how much the gospel is needed to humanize, elevate, enlighten and save. Other means have all brought forth miserable fruits. Imagine the multitudes gathered here, thickly covering a vast area, swaying to and fro, a living sea of humanity, and the noise of mingled murmuring and roaring, like the noise of many waters. As the day draws to a close the shadows come down from the mountains and the darkness gathers around the multitudes. Then here and there and everywhere throughout the vast assemblage the Fakírs light their little lamps in imitation of Jwálá Jí, ring their bells and gather their circles of deluded followers. It might seem that such a vast multitude of human beings in various costume, with the robed priest's twinkling lamps, tinkling bells, and devout circles, would appear grand, but all other feelings are lost except sadness and disgust. The folly and blasphemous wickedness is so very, very palpable!—Approaching one of the lights we see a Fakír in a long robe, with a bell in his hand, which he rings as he sings and gesticulates, ever and anon bowing to the lamp which represents, or rather is (through the miraculous power of the priests) the goddess. The people sitting around in a circle, bow and chime in with a chorus. A poor, wretched-looking votary who has just joined the circle presents a few pice to the flame of the lamp, placing them upon the lamp-stand, from which they are conveyed to the Fakír's pocket. The Fakír mumbles over a prayer for the benefit of the offerer, at the close of which all the circle shout "Victory to Devi," and bow their foreheads to the ground.

At another place we find a large company gathered around a Fakír who has a large lamp in each hand. Hideous music is kept up by some musicians. The Fakír dances, whirls around on one foot, balances the lamps on his fingers, waves them to and fro, and singing, applies the flame to a sheet stretched over head without burning it. The people murmur inwardly "Is it not a god?"—and they are robbed of their pice by imposture.

A little distance further on, a Fakir is dressing and ornamenting a boy like a girl. Having completed all the arrangements, the music strikes up, a burning lamp is placed in the hand of another boy not disguised—and the newly-made girl begins to dance and bow and twist about. Then the boy with the lamp moves around the dancing one, presenting the flame to his face as gracefully as possible: and the simple people sitting by gaze with stupid, superstitious wonder at the pantomimic representation of some of the deeds of the gods.

Ascending some steps to a kind of platform on the side of the mountain, we behold a kind of shrine. Before it is a burning lamp, on one side sit the musicians, ringing bells, striking cymbals and singing. Two Fakírs profess to be filled with the spirit of the Devi and to have the power of divination and giving oracles. One had been overpowered by the spirit of Devi and now stood motionless with his hands bound. Coming to himself a little, his hands were loosed. He then took his long iron tongs, with short bits of iron like lashes at one end, and beat himself terribly over the back until he wrought himself into a high state of fervour, then bowing before the flame, gazed at it for some time with a fixed, stupid stare, until suddenly he gave a shriek and a jump, and he was dispossessed of the Devi. The surrounding multitude cried, "Victory to Devi." The other, who had long, matted, dirty hair, and his almost naked body smeared with some kind of mixture, had placed himself on all-fours between the legs of the first during the time of his iron-beating, where he twisted himself about most awfully. Then he rolled himself in contortions upon the hard stony ground. Rising upon his hands and knees he crawled towards the lamp; and gazing at the miniature Jwálá as if to drink in some supernatural influence, he began to shake his head rapidly and fiercely, and twist his body like a serpent. In this state he was prepared to utter oracles for the benefit of any who wished information. One person from the crowd asked if there was any person at the Mela who owed the Devi anything. The dirty, but sagacious oracle still shaking his head mumbled forth "Yes, there are many, but some will pay to-morrow." Another question put was, "My wife will not speak to me; what is the reason?" In the midst of the noise I could not catch the broken answer. The poor fellow, after crawling about again, and after some more contortions, returned and gazed at the flame. Then wringing his neck almost off, he gave a loud shriek and the spirit of the Devi had left him. The stupid people immediately shouted, "Victory to Devi."

Such are a few of the scenes witnessed one evening. Similar scenes, and perhaps more revolting, were at the same time being enacted at all of the other hundreds of twinkling lights.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

ARE INDIA MISSIONS A FAILURE?

Mr. Editor:—A young missionary, when about leaving his native land for a foreign field, has peculiar advantages for eliciting the opinions of those he leaves, in regard to the work in which he is about to engage. Some speak to him words of undoubting hope, strong faith, earnest zeal, and a cheerful service to Him that redeemed them, so predominant in some hearts, that they rather envy the lot of the missionary, than pity his weakness, or lament his fanaticism. Others, with less faith, and a less vivid apprehension of the Saviour's love and presence with all his servants, speak kindly of the exile's self-denial and philanthropy—wish him all success, yet think it at best a very doubtful and expensive experiment. Another class regard him simply as a soft-hearted, deluded fool. If his task were to melt down the frozen snows of Mont Blanc, and cover it with fragrant orchards and vineyards, they might credit him as a bold experimenter, and though rather incredulous, they would secure him from the charge of utter imbecility, by referring to the undeveloped powers of Chemistry and Natural Philosophy. Men will believe almost any thing—dare any thing which rests on human skill or reason—but, strange anomaly, the word of God, the promise of God, the power of God, in their relation to human affairs, are with such men no ground of effort or hope. Good enough in their way, these heavenly mysteries—but what have they to do with channeling a ship-way across the Isthmus, or extracting gold from the mines of California? All these opinions of the world are natural enough, as the Musalmán's prostration towards Mecca is natural, but they are not true; they are the teachings neither of experience, nor of the immutable word. Unfortunately, this same spirit has been harboured in some Christian hearts: they are wearied by calls of the agents for Foreign Missions, and querulously inquire—"Where is the fruit of all this expense of money and life; better spend it at home, here are large fields; rather let me follow my child to the grave, than send him to heathen ground as a missionary." All these expressions, and some much stronger, were heard by the writer, just before leaving the United States, from professing Christians, too; and in the hope of relieving their fears about the political economy of giving to foreign missions, the subjoined information is forwarded. It is enough to show that giving the gospel to the Hindus —to all the different branches of the great heathen family here—is the work of God: that his seal is stamped upon it, and while unhesitating obedience to a clearly revealed duty is obligatory on all, we have here the testimony, graciously given, that in due time the fruit shall be gathered. The extracts are from an article in the last number of the Calcutta Review, and the author, it is said, is the senior member of the London mission in that city; one whose long experience and patient research give ample warrant for the strict fidelity and truth of his statements. The article should be published entire, as I hope it will be, when you receive the Review. The extracts are but a meagre specimen.

After a few remarks in regard to the country, people, government, &c., he refers to the several successive plans that have been pursued for Christianizing India. The first, by the Portuguese king and his fighting priests, in Ceylon and South India,—an effort characterized by cruelty and bloodshed, and yielding its appropriate results. The second, by the Jesuits, claiming to be high caste Brahmans, with their usual falsehoods and jugglery; in manner, dress, &c., like the heathen; in heart, doubtless worse. The third effort was by the Dutch Government; and here also the unwise, anti-scriptural method, force, was employed to convert the heathen; by force, I mean the refusing of Government employment, farming of land, &c., to all who would not become nominal Christians. Of course all these were failures; the 40,000 Romanists of South India can scarcely be distinguished from the heathen. The fourth and last, is the plan of modern missionary societies. It began in India, in Tranquebar, in 1706: was sustained mainly by the king of Denmark, and missionaries from the University of Hallé: by Augustus Herman Francke and his successors. During the century more than fifty missionaries came to India, in connection with this mission. Schwartz was one of these. There were 50,000 baptized converts altogether, and vast results might have been fairly expected, had not German neology at home quietly consumed the missionary spirit there, so that by the close of the century, or a little after, only three missionaries remained, and these supported by English friends.

The present era of India missions dates from the founding of the Serampore Baptist Mission, 1799; henceforward the work fell into the hands of England and America, the continent of Europe retiring from the field. The progress now was rapid. From Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, as centres, the light began to spread in all directions. The results are succinctly stated by the Reviewer, thus:

"At the close of 1850, fifty years after the modern English and American Societies began their labours in Hindustan, and thirty years since they have been carried on in full efficiency, the stations at which the gospel is preached in India and Ceylon, are 260 in number, which have enjoyed the services of 403 missionaries; belonging to 22 missionary societies. Of these missionaries 22 are ordained natives. Assisted by 551 native preachers, they proclaim the word of God in the bazárs and markets, not only at their several stations, but in the districts around them. They have thus spread far and wide the doctrines of Christianity, and have made considerable impression, even upon the unconverted population. They have founded 309 native churches, containing 17,356 members or communicants. These church members form the nucleus of a native Christian community, comprising 103,000 individuals, who regularly enjoy the blessings of Bible instruction, both for young and old. The efforts of missionaries in the cause of education are now directed to 1345 day-schools, in which 83,700 boys are instructed through the medium of their own vernacular language: to 73 boarding-schools, containing 1992 boys, chiefly Christian, who reside upon the missionaries' premises, and are trained up under their eye; and to 128 day-schools, with 14,000 boys and students, receiving a sound, scriptural education, through the medium of the English language. Their efforts in female education embrace 354 day-schools with 11,500 girls; and 91 boarding-schools with 2450 girls, taught almost exclusively in the vernacular languages. The Bible has been wholly translated into ten languages, and the new Testament into five, not reckoning the Serampore versions. In these ten languages, a considerable Christian literature has been produced, and also from 20 to 50 tracts, suitable for distribution among the Hindu and Musalmán population. Missionaries have also established and now sustain 25 printing establishments. While preaching the gospel regularly in the numerous tongues of India, missionaries maintain English service in 59 chapels, for the edification of their own countrymen.

The number of missionary societies employed in the work, are the great Missionary Societies of England, the Established and Free churches of Scotland; American Societies, comprising the American Board, Presbyterian and Baptist; six German Societies; Irish Presbyterian; Wesleyan, &c. Add to them the six Bible Societies of England and America."

I have not room for extracts, in regard to the great incidental fruits of mission labour as given by the Reviewer. The patronage which government has shamefully given to heathen idols, has been gradually diminishing, though even now this sin lies at their door. So late as 1844, (see Sir Herbert Maddock's minute, on the grant to Jagganath,) the English Parliament were apprized that "the temple of Jagganath is only one of innumerable Hindu temples, the establishment and worship of which are partly maintained by money payments from the public treasury." It is also known that the government exclude the Bible from their colleges and schools, while they are supporting the Calcutta Madrissa—"a college for the education of Mohammedans in their own creed!" This short-sighted and anti-Christian policy is gradually giving way to the influence of missionary and private Christian effort, so that we may hope the day is dawning when it shall not be true in India, that the Saviour's word is dishonoured in the house of his friends.

A word in relation to the cost of this work. I quote from the Reviewer. "The cost of all the agency in the Presidencies of Bengal and Agra, including the support of 159 missionaries, amount to £68,000. This sum is not quite equal to two items only of the government expenditure, viz: the salary of the Governor General (£24,000), and his travelling expenses £45,000."

But I must close, I have not space to speak of the Suttee, Infanticide, Human Sacrifices, Thuggee, Slavery, &c., all which are fast disappearing under the influence of Christianity in India. They know little of the iron customs of semi-civilized India, who think to break them by a single blow. They are the growth of centuries, inwoven with all their public and private feelings, and nothing but the steady flame of Christianity, consuming while it purifies, can ever affect these millions of idolatrous Hindus. Then let the Church of America and England give abundantly, and pray continually; let the young men come by scores, full of faith and zeal; the harvest is ready, the people are waiting, idolatry is falling—where are the reapers! Will they not come, and, gathering the sheaves which the Master is offering them, bring them home to the heavenly garner with songs of praise and everlasting joy? Our day of toil will soon be over, there is time enough for rest in heaven.

Yours affectionately,

L. G. H.

SIAM MISSION.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. S. MATTOON: BANGKOK, NOVEMBER 24, 1851.

Notice of Missionary work—New fields, and more labourers wanted.

We have little news to report by this mail. We are making but slow progress in getting our own houses ready. We have begun sawing boards for building, and they have at length commenced removing the old buildings from the ground, which leads us to hope we shall soon get possession. Our other labours proceed as usual. Mr. Bush has entirely recovered, and is absent with Dr. Lane on a trip into the country for tract distribution.

. . . As we are now, we hope, permanently settled here, we need men and means to make our mission efficient. Our thoughts are often turned to other fields intimately connected with this by geographical position and political ties, which have not as yet been even explored by Protestant missionaries. If we had the men and the means we should think it wise to make an effort to enter on these fields at once. In reference to one or more of them I hope to be able to speak more definitely and more intelligently in a few months.

In the meanwhile, if you can find men who are willing to preach the gospel in the "regions beyond," out of the track of monthly steamers and monthly mails, but in places where the sound of the gospel has never been heard, and where the Bible has not been put into the language of the people, let them think of South-Eastern Asia.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

IDOLATRY AS A MEANS OF RAISING RICE.

Many of our readers are farmers. We commend the following paper to their consideration. Its perusal will lead to the inquiry, Who made us to differ? It will lead also to a deeper compassion for these ignorant deluded people—This paper was written by the Rev. A. W. Loomis of the Ningpo Mission.

In China, as in most of the Eastern countries, the principal dependence of the inhabitants for food is rice; and for the cultivation of this grain there must be fresh water sufficient to irrigate the fields. The rice lands are submerged from the time of ploughing until within about ten days of the harvest. A rainy, or mouldy season, as it is called, is expected in the spring, in April and the early part of May, when the farmers prepare the ground, sprout the seed in small beds, then transplant it into the fields, all the time working in mud and water more than ankle deep; and the spring rains are generally depended upon, not only to afford water to soak the ground at first, but also to fill all the canals and reservoirs with a supply which, together with occasional showers, shall be sufficient to enable every farmer to keep an inch or two of water on his fields till the berry of the rice is filled out and begins to harden. It is sometimes the case that the spring rains come early, before the farmer is ready to plough, (for ploughing and seed-time are put down in the almanac, and no person ventures to be before the time which the almanac makers have prescribed,) and in this case it is dried up before he needs it, or does not last through the summer. Again, the rains may come later than usual, when the husbandmen do not conceal their impatience, and I may say anger, for they do get angry with their gods when they afflict them, as they are apt to think without cause, or more severely than there is need. The rains also may be too abundant, when the young grain is, as farmers say, drowned out. Severe and continued storms sometimes come on near harvest time, and destroy the crops nearly ready to be gathered in. For these reasons the occupation of husbandry is attended with much anxiety, and not a little uncertainty. I am not now able to remember a season in which we did not, at one time or another, hear the farmer expressing his forebodings of evil, and muttering about the perverseness of the weather. Sometimes the burden of his complaint was, "Clouds unwilling to cease pouring—every thing will be drowned." At other times, "Heaven not willing to rain—the sun-god fierce; every thing is burning up; all of us will have to starve to death." The spirit they exhibit is not at all that of pious resignation, but of complaint, as though the gods were dealing hardly with them, by refusing to reward their hard labour, and therefore about to cause unaccountable suffering by withholding the needed supply of food. But if the evil continues long, various expedients are resorted to, to cause the hearts of their deities to relent, and grant the desired relief. Petitions are generally sent in to the prefect of the district, desiring him by proclamation to forbid the slaying of animals, that the people may thereby all be compelled to mortify themselves by abstinence from animal diet, in hopes that by this means the gods may be appeased. At first the prohibition extends only to hogs, sheep, and goats; and afterwards, if the gods remain inexorable, fowls and every kind of animal food is forbidden; and any person detected in killing or selling any of these interdicted creatures would be severely punished. The officers feel in a great measure responsible for the prosperity and happiness of the district or department over which they are placed, and are consequently in great trouble when that on which their people depend for subsistence is in danger of being cut off. They therefore, often of their own accord, require the people to fast, and are not negligent to observe themselves what they require of the people. Sometimes all the officers in the city go in procession in their sedans, accompanied by attendants, to the temples to sacrifice and pray for rain, or for a cessation of the rain, as the case may be. Even the Emperor himself does the same, supposing that for his own faults, or maladministration of government, heaven is afflicting his people; therefore he sacrifices, fasts, and confesses his sins.

At one time, when another missionary and myself called upon the Taou Tae of the Ningpo and Sheaou Shing departments, it being a season of drought, he spoke quite feelingly about it, and remarked that the only hope of the people was in the "mercy of heaven," and that the duty of all men was to pray for it: and he intimated his wish that we with our friends would supplicate our God for the blessing in which we were interested equally with the people amongst whom we lived. His request reminded us of the mariners in the ship on board which Jonah was fleeing to Tarshish, who, afraid on account of the storm, began to cry, "every man unto his god," and awoke Jonah also, and said, "Arise, call upon thy God."

In 1846 the part of Che Keang province, in which we were, was visited in the early part of spring by great and long-continued rains, and there was much worshipping, fasting, &c., to procure a cessation of it. Among other expedients, as I learned, a colossal image in one of the temples was brought out into the street, that the rain might pour down upon his head, in order that he might have opportunity of testing for himself whether or not it rained, and whether the representations of those who sought his interference were true or not! This wet weather did at length cease, but it was followed by a more protracted and more distressing drought. For three or four months scarcely enough rain fell to wet the dust, and the consequence was, that the rice growing on the plains was dried up, the water of the canals and reservoirs was exhausted, even the wide and deep canals near the city were as dry and hard as the streets: also the crops of sweet potatoes and millet cultivated on the hills were almost entirely cut off. The heavens were as brass, and the earth as iron. The hearts of the stoutest failed them, and people looked sorrowfully on each other, and shook the head with forebodings of dire calamities. Deputations came in from all parts of the surrounding country with petitions to the officers that they would lay on heavier injunctions regarding fasts, or other expedients to appease the hitherto relentless deities. I saw a procession consisting of two or three thousand people, from a section of the country some miles to the south-east of the city, made up of the literati, landholders, and farmers, the latter class forming the principal part; and a company of men with more sorrowful visages I never saw. They really appeared like men already half famished, dragging along their weary way under the scorching sun; many of them bare-headed, others with the large sun hat, and others with a napkin over the head. They carried flags with various inscriptions and devices—small flags borne aloft on newly cut bamboos, on which the twigs and leaves were left—lanterns, fancy sedans, gongs, &c. At last came the idol in a chair with two bearers, an incense car preceding, and another following him. The procession marched first to the Taou Tae's office, and he came out and worshipped the idol which they carried, and afterwards they marched around to the other officers, who also worshipped the image, and offered a prayer for rain.

In the summer of 1847, there was again a lack of rain. In the latter part of the month of July we visited Chusan and Pootoo for health. While lying in the harbour of Chusan, several native vessels came in, in which were some high officers from Ningpo, with attendants, on their way to the sacred Island of Pootoo, to sacrifice and supplicate for relief from the present distress. It so happened that showers of rain came not many days after this, which afforded the Chinese an opportunity of exultation in the efficacy of their worship, and the verity of their gods.

At this time, also, we found the south gate of the city of Tinghae shut, and all who went in and out of the city were compelled to go through the water-gate, or the gate of the canal which passed into the city under the wall, and which was then dry. I did not learn what was the precise design or import of this. It may have been for the same intent as the fasts; that is, to compel all the people to afflict themselves in some way, and humble themselves; just as the king of Nineveh compelled all his people, old and young, to fast and put on sackcloth, and commanded that even the beasts, herd and flock, should not taste any thing, that they should neither feed, nor drink water.

CHURCH AT NINGPO.

Its dimensions, arrangement, style, and location—Hopes of its usefulness.

Our readers have already been informed that the church in Ningpo has been completed and set apart for divine worship. The Rev. M. S. Culbertson may be called the architect of this building, and from his pen we have the following description of it, under date of August 8, 1851. We regret that we cannot insert an engraving of it.

The entire length is seventy-eight feet by forty-three feet front. A portico and vestibule with the front walls take up about twenty-five feet, leaving the hall for worship about forty feet by fifty-three in dimensions. Across the front end of the room there is a gallery a little less than fourteen feet wide. The room is capable of seating comfortably about five hundred persons. A portion of the room near the pulpit is separated from the rest, and appropriated to the use of the women. They can enter by a private entrance in the rear, and thus avoid encountering the crowd (if happily there should be one) about the front door. Over the vestibule are two small rooms which may be convenient for holding Bible classes, or as a place in which to sit and meet with any who may be disposed to enter for conversation on the subject of our doctrines. In the rear of the church is a small dwelling-house eighteen feet by forty, occupying the whole of the space between the church and the extremity of the lot. It has two rooms on each floor, finished off in such a way as to be a comfortable dwelling for a single missionary or a small family. When not occupied by a missionary, it may be occupied by the family of the sexton—or of a native assistant, when we may be so happy as to have one. The style of architecture attempted is the Tuscan, chosen chiefly on account of its simplicity. This seemed on the whole better suited to our purpose than a building in the Chinese style. Indeed the nature of the locality, as well as convenience of use, forbade our adopting the latter, since in Chinese buildings the main entrance and the portico, with its columns, are always at the side, and not in the gable, while our lot was long and narrow, requiring the end of the building to be on the street. Having adopted a foreign style, it was thought best to avoid, as far as possible, the introduction of Chinese ornaments, which would interfere with the unity of the plan. It was thought too that a foreign style would attract more attention than a Chinese building, and thus assist, by exciting inquiry, in diffusing a knowledge of our objects and views.

You have already been fully informed as to the circumstances which gave rise to so long a delay in the erection of the building—you are aware of the difficulties we met with in procuring a suitable site, and of the manner in which we were prevented from securing one which we had selected, and for which we had been negotiating for some months. This lot was purchased by the agents of another society, but is still unoccupied. The situation which we finally obtained is on a street that is a good deal frequented, so that we may hope to get as good congregations here as in almost any part of the city. It has the advantage too of being near to our residences. The lot is about one hundred and twenty feet deep by seventy feet front. This gives us an open space of about thirteen feet on each side of the building.

I trust that the kind friends, who so generously contributed funds for the erection of this temple to the living God in this dark land, will be permitted one day to have tangible evidence that they have indeed "lent to the Lord," and to rejoice in hearing that "this and that man was born there"—yea, that great multitudes have been brought to Christ through the word preached within these walls. Those who have provided the means for erecting the building, will not be forgotten by those whose privilege it may be to dispense there the word of life.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. HENRY V. RANKIN.

Missionary Incidents and Reflections.

August 5th, 1851.—We have just been enjoying a very refreshing rain. June and July have been, as usual, dry months, and we are all more or less feeling the effect of the weather. Our numbers are consequently somewhat diminished; several have gone to Chusan to recruit, and two of our little society, Mr. and Mrs. Lord, of the Baptist Mission, to return home. This had become absolutely necessary, in consequence of the ill-health of the latter. This separation we all deplore, as it removes for a time from China valuable missionaries, and from our little circle those to whom we are fondly attached. And here I may allude to a fact which I hope will tend to startle Christians at home. Within about a year's time, since the arrival of our last reinforcement in July 1850, only three missionaries, so far as I can learn, have reached China, of whom only two expect to labour in this empire, the other having proceeded to Siam. During that same interval of time, two, Messrs. Bridgman and Fast, have been removed by death, and another (Mr. Richards of Fuh-Chau) we fear has left us only to die.* Besides these, there have been called away, by sickness and other providential causes, three from Canton, two from Ningpo, and one from Fuh-Chau. Thus while nine male missionaries have been called away from this blessed work, only three new ones have come out to the great Chinese population! According to this ratio, how long will it be ere the whole missionary force is swept away from China? It should also be considered that with the enlarging commerce the influx of foreigners for mercantile objects is greatly on the increase.

During the last two or three months we have been greatly favoured in the visits of missionaries from other ports. Among these are Bishop Boone and family, and Miss Jones of the Episcopal Mission, Mrs. Shuck of the Baptist, and Mr. Wight of our own mission, all from Shanghai, and Mr. and Mrs. Doty of the American Board from Amoy. Missionary brethren and sisters thus meeting in a strange land, find themselves no strangers to each other, and many tender recollections cluster around the blessed though transient enjoyment which we experienced, when commingling our social pleasures and our prayers with fellow workers in other parts of this vineyard. We part with some perhaps never to meet again on earth, but with new bonds of sympathy in each other's persons and field of labour.

Apprehended interference by the civil authorities.

There has of late been considerable excitement among our teachers, in consequence of certain serious proceedings on the part of the officers. These have sent men to inquire into the details of our operations, who it appears have secretly taken the names of all who are in foreign employ. What is the aim of government in this course has greatly puzzled all who are thus enrolled, and our poor teachers for a whole week canvassed the matter in great distress of mind. Several things combined to show that the officers were standing in a menacing attitude to us and to all foreigners, though in consequence of their equivocations, we could not discern their real intentions. The affair has, however, now pretty well blown over, and our teachers no longer seem apprehensive of losing their heads, or even their property or honours. We learn that there has been a somewhat different, but equally intense excitement at Shanghai.

Death of Mr. Olyphant.

Aug. 27th.—To-day the mail has arrived. It brings us sad, very sad news of the death of Mr. Olyphant, at Cairo on the 10th of June. The China Missions have indeed much to lament in the death of such a man. He had greatly wished to visit Ningpo, and had promised us to that effect, but was providentially hindered—so that we did not have this privilege. His heart, however, was with the cause of Christ in China, and had he lived we had hoped much from him. In a letter which he wrote me from Shanghai last November, after alluding in an humble manner to the little, as he said, he had done, he adds—"but if this fourth mission of me by Providence to China shall be overruled to increase my faith and love, and to the service of the cause of our blessed Lord in China, in making me either here or at home an helpmate to his servants here, I shall not have come in vain. I scarcely venture to hope, however, that such privilege is for me." This last fear is indeed most sadly to us realized, but we rejoice in the full assurance of hope for so eminent and useful a Christian. We hear also to-day of the death of the celebrated Dr. Gutzlaff on the 10th inst. Thus one after another China's missionaries and other best friends are falling, while few seem raised up to take their places. The harvest truly is great—but ah! how few the labourers!

* A fear painfully realized, this excellent brother having died at sea near St. Helena, June 5, 1851.

Popery in China.

Aug. 28.—Mr. Russel, one of the Church missionaries, called this afternoon, and gave us an account of a late visit he made to the Romish chapel at Tinghae, the capital of Chusan, and which I will briefly allude to for the purpose of giving you a glance at Popery in China. As soon as he entered, the bystanders in the vestibule directed him within, but just at that moment there came out a surly Chinese attendant, who vociferated "Begone, we don't want such men." Mr. Russel bowed very respectfully, and asked him his "honourable name"—the polite salutation among the Chinese—but the only answer was "go away." He then asked him his "dignified employment," but received the same reply. Another and better dressed man also came up, and cried out in like manner. Turning to the bystanders, Mr. Russell said, "Why surely the man is out of his head." Finding that the priest was not within, he after a while took his leave, but not before he had the opportunity of showing to the crowd who had collected and were laughing at the scene, what Popery was, and of telling them of the religion of Jesus Christ. He afterwards visited another temple in the interior of the island, where they had evidently not been instructed by their bishop, on account of its secluded situation, to beware of Protestant missionaries, and where he was received with a good degree of politeness. They had in the chapel among other pictures a representation of "T'een-Chu," Heaven's Lord (the Romish appellation for the Deity). Upon inquiring of the priests how they reconciled that picture with the expression in their Catechism that "God is without form"—they replied that that was only for the vulgar, and that they worshipped what was signified. Precisely in like manner do the intelligent Buddhist priests, who daily bow before their huge gilded idols, answer us when we tell them of their idolatry—like the Romanists, these poor idolaters profess to worship not the idol, but that which it represents. There are fourteen Romish chapels in this single island of Chusan. At Chinhae, at the mouth of this river, they are actively at work, and at this port they have a French bishop and a large establishment, including an orphan asylum.

A little blind Girl taught to read.

Aug. 29.—A number of us met this evening at Miss Aldersey's, to enjoy a social farewell with one of the Church missionaries, who expects to leave in a few days for England, to be absent about a year. This excellent lady, who for about fifteen years has with earnest zeal been spending her property and strength for the cause of Christ in the East, has had for a long time a well-trained school of fifty girls, to whose welfare she pays the most unremitted attention. One is a little blind girl, who has been taught to read English through the medium of raised letters, in which she has made no small proficiency. The poor little creature hardly realizes that she has lost her sight. When pictures were being shown to the pupils, she forced her way among the rest, saying, "I want to see too;" and then all at once, after turning her face in that direction, she exclaimed, "Why, I can't see"—as if the reality had just burst upon her.

Death in the Mission Family.

Sept. 27*th.*—Our senior school matron has this day gone, I can but hope, to her rest. Yesterday morning we discovered that Paou-shen (our oldest girl) was seized with the cholera, which has been quite prevalent of late. The matron while taking care of her was also seized with it, and after a short but severe sickness of thirty hours she fell a victim to this fearful disease. Previous to her sickness, for several months, her conduct had been exemplary, and she had expressed a wish to be baptized, and during her illness she told her friends that she wished to be buried in a Christian manner. Her sickness was too brief and too violent to allow her to say much, but what she did express, tended to confirm our hopes in her death. The school has lost much, and we have lost much by her death, but we pray and hope that manifest good will result from it, for the girls all confided in and loved her, and are greatly distressed by her removal.

Sept. 29*th.*—Our annual meetings have just closed, and we have observed this day as one of thanksgiving, in view of the kind mercies of another year from our Father in heaven. We had hoped to have enjoyed the society of brother Culbertson among us, but from unavoidable reasons he was detained, though he writes us that he will come down by the earliest opportunity.

Fruits of Missionary labour.

Oct. 5*th.*—A-jing, one of our dear pupils, has this day been admitted to church privileges. Mr. Way conducted the baptismal services, and Mr. Culbertson, who arrived a few days since, the communion services in Chinese. This young girl is about fifteen years old, though much maturer than Chinese females generally at that age. She has been four years under instruction, and from the very first her deportment has been amiable, and all her habits pleasing. For more than a year, however, she has shown more decidedly an interest in religious truth; and indeed long before she applied for baptism, all who have known her well have esteemed her to be a real child of God. Paou-shen was not able to be present at the services on account of extreme weakness, incident to her attack of cholera a week ago. In the afternoon I sat with her for a while, and found that her mind had been favourably affected by the death of the matron, and her own severe sickness. She has for a long time been a praying girl, and we had hoped that she too would have applied for admission to church privileges, but from this she has doubtless been hindered by her extreme bashfulness. Though intellectually much in advance of any in the school, there is no one with whom, on this account, it is so difficult to converse. It was pleasant to find that she was much more free than usual, and she told me that she now desired to become outwardly a disciple of Jesus, in whose merits she fully trusted. There seems really to be an awakening interest among some in the subject of religion, which in connection with the promises of God should tend to confirm our faith. Very recently two men were baptized by the Episcopal missionaries, who appear to be promising disciples. One of our teachers recently remarked that there were several men who were convinced of the truth of Christianity, which they would openly espouse, if they did not fear for their reputation. Thus they love the praise of men more than the praise of God.

Popery in China—Further facts.

Oct. 6*th.*—We are just now having in the city a large delegation of Roman Catholic bishops, who have been inducting into office Mr. Danicourt the resident French priest at this port, who takes the place of one who died about a year ago. Among them are the bishops of Mongolia, Peking, Japan, Honan, and Chekiang provinces. The French Consul from Shanghai and his family, and the procureur-general are also here. China is divided among the priests of different countries; the Italian priests having the oversight of Shanghai; the Portuguese of Canton; the Spaniards of Amoy; and the French of this city, of Peking, and their respective provinces. The French are represented by two divisions, the Lazarists and the society of foreign missions. I shall, if I can, at some future time, give more definite information with respect to Popery in China. It may be well, however, to quote the statements of a native priest from Peking to one of our number, which is confirmed by the full belief of missionaries in China, in order to correct a false statement which has had, I notice, extensive circulation in the American religious and other papers. The statement I allude to is the favourable regard of the young Emperor toward Christianity, who, this notice states, has been for some time under Romish instruction. This is probably all a fabrication. No foreigner is allowed to enter the city of Peking; and to guard against any such intrusion, such strict vigilance is observed at the gates, that even the bishop of Peking meets his followers outside the walls. Within the inner city are two chapels, built in the time of Kong-hyi, which have been however, for many years under seal, so that no one has entered them. There were in the astronomical Board in 1826, three foreign priests, but at that time two were dismissed, and obliged to remove, and the other was only allowed to remain till his death, which happened a few years later, because of his advanced age and imbecility. This, like many other astonishing stories, such as a free opening to foreigners through all the provinces, and the favourable impressions of the Emperor of Japan toward Christianity, &c., we first hear of through American and British newspapers; and they are all alike probably very doubtful stories.

Oct. 9*th.*—Mr. Culbertson returned to Shanghai to-day, accompanied by Dr. McCartee. Before leaving, we had the opportunity of consulting together respecting the desirableness of his remaining upon the Translating Committee, in which we were most of us agreed, in consideration of the importance of the work; and though the sacrifice is a great one to us, thus to part for a time with a useful brother, we could not but acquiesce in the providences which seem to have marked his course. The Rev. Mr. Syle, of the American Episcopal Mission, who came down with him a week ago, will not return for some time to come.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M. D. Treasurer.

RESULTS OF THE YEAR.

As our paper goes to press before the accounts of the fiscal year just closed are entirely made up, we are not able to present to our readers as yet, the statistics of our operations during that period. On account of our not having established depots in different sections of the Church, our colporteurs were hindered somewhat in their operations by not being able to get supplies of books from Philadelphia, because of the obstruction of the channels of communication by the severity of the weather. Still the good hand of the Lord has been upon us, and we shall be able to show that the Board has been advancing in popular favour and in usefulness. It never stood higher than at the present moment. Within the last month or two, quite a number of churches which had never before aided the Board, have of their own accord forwarded contributions. The plans for the ensuing year will probably be on a more extended scale, and with such modifications and additions as are contemplated, results still more gratifying may be expected. Already this Board is doing more than any similar institution had done at the same period of its existence.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL VISITOR.

The large subscription list of our children's paper, is an indication, of itself, of the favour with which it has been received. From the time of its commencement to the present moment, the number of its subscribers has been constantly increasing. From all parts of the Church we have had abundant testimonials as to its adaptation to the end it has in view. Its matter is usually suitable for the Sabbath, and of such a character as to be at the same time both interesting and instructive. We know some families where it is read through by every member of the household. As to typography and illustrations, we could of course render it much more beautiful; but we believe it is at present sufficiently so, and we have no idea that judicious and reflecting persons would justify us in making extravagant expenditures on such a publication, especially as it does not even now quite pay expenses. Pastors and Sabbath-school officers could with ease greatly enlarge the number of subscribers.

FRUITS OF DR. ALEXANDER'S WORKS.

It is well known that Dr. Archibald Alexander selected the Board of Publication as the channel for publishing almost all the books he wrote after its organization. We have already stated that at the time of his death we had circulated more than sixteen millions of pages of his writings! We are receiving from various quarters evidence that the seed so widely sown does not lie barren in the ground. A colporteur in Pennsylvania, from whom a letter has just been received, says: "Some two years ago, I sold three copies of Alexander's Religious Experience to three different families. This winter there were five heads of families united to the Church, who all stated to the pastor that that book, under a kind Providence, had been the means of leading them to take the step they did. The pastor said our books had been the means of great good among his people."

BOOKS BLESSED IN A REVIVAL.

A colporteur in an important city has found our books useful in promoting the good work with which the churches there have been blessed. "For some time past," he writes, "several of the churches in this city have been enjoying a season of refreshing. In the First Presbyterian Church, about forty have been hopefully converted, whilst many others seem to be earnestly inquiring what they shall do to be saved. The books of the Board have been blessed in helping forward this work. The little books Divine Guidance, and the Way of Salvation, have been especially blessed to many inquiring souls."

COLPORTAGE IN NATCHEZ, MISSISSIPPI, AND THE VICINITY.

We have found some difficulty in securing the right description of colporteurs for portions of the South and South-west. On this account an experienced colporteur from another field was sent to Natchez, at the request of the brethren in that important city, to spend a part of the winter and spring. His labours have been attended with great success; so far as we can learn, a favourable impression was made for our cause, a large number of books were circulated, and much good done, as we hope, in various ways. The colporteur speaks in the warmest terms of gratitude of the kindness shown him in and around Natchez, where he laboured, and of the efficient co-operation extended to him. The Natchez church has always set a good example in every thing pertaining to benevolent operations.

A FRATERNAL WELCOME.

A respected and valued pastor of a Congregational church in New England, says, in reference to the proposed visit of one of our colporteurs: "My acquaintance with the publications of your Board is not so thorough as I wish it was. But from what I do know about them, I can say that I should be very glad to have them circulated in my parish, throughout this county, and indeed all over New England. * * * I know no reason why he should not be as successful here as elsewhere. Any thing that I can do, to promote, in this vicinity, the circulation of your excellent books, will be done most cheerfully; and should one of your colporteurs conclude to visit this county, I shall be glad to see him at my house, and will render him whatever assistance may be in my power."

GAINING FAVOUR.

An excellent colporteur in Ohio, in making his quarterly report, says: "I find uniformly that where our colporteurs have been before, more can be done now; I find, too, that our books are gaining universal favour with the community. Our good cause is gaining every day."

LAMENTABLE WANT OF READERS.

A very judicious and successful colporteur in one of the oldest States of the Union, gives the following picture of the ignorance prevailing in his field. The writer is in the region of his own home, and is held in high estimation there.

"There is a loud call for the labour of colporteurs here, but not so loud as it would be if all our people could read your excellent books. There are in this county alone about seven hundred persons over twenty-one years of age who cannot read, and a very large number of the children also in the same situation. I make it a matter of conscience and duty to urge all such whom I meet to learn at least to read the Bible, that it may be a light to their path and a lamp to their feet, to lead them in the way everlasting."

LABOURS AMONG THE DESTITUTE.

The following, from a colporteur's report, will serve to show our readers the kind of work some of them are doing.

"I have during the last three months visited over four hundred families, conversed with more than seven hundred different individuals on personal religion, and prayed with the people three hundred and seventy-six times. I have been very much edified and profited, and in my own soul blest; and I think I can say of a truth that others have been profited, and will praise God for his loving-kindness in permitting us to meet with them. I have been pained to see the indifference and apathy manifested by some as to their eternal interests and salvation. I have in almost every instance been kindly received, and when about to leave, been very kindly and earnestly invited to call again. They thanked me for my fidelity to them, and hoped it might be profitable to them, adding, We shall not very soon forget your visit.

"I called at a miserable-looking hovel called a house—found the lady within, surrounded with four little children, all mere babes, and the wind blowing in at every corner. I commenced conversation with her, and asked her how she had got along this cold winter in such an open building. She said she thought sometimes that she and the children must perish with cold, but she had been spared. I asked her if she was a Christian. She burst into tears and said, No, sir, I wish I was. I asked her if she had a Bible. She said she had one, and had commenced to read the Testament through a few days before, and was determined not to give it up till she had read it through. She said, I am but a poor reader, and have to spell the long words, and it will take a long time to get through with it, but I am determined to persevere till I read it through. I asked if her husband could read. She said, He is a good reader, but will not read for me. I encouraged her to do the best she could, and read every day, if but a little, and try to understand what she read, and pray God to bless his own word to her salvation. You must repent, confess, and forsake all your sins, said I, and pray God to forgive you for Christ's sake, as there is no other name whereby we can be saved but the name of Jesus. I prayed with her, and when about to leave, I took her by the hand and bid her farewell. She said, Do pray for me. I told her I would, but you must pray for yourself. She evidently felt deeply on the subject of her soul's salvation. It is not likely that in this world it will ever be known to me what were the effects of that conversation. It may have been like the 'morning cloud and the early dew,' or like 'a nail fastened in a sure place.' I pray it may result in her saving conversion.

"The books of the Board have been well received, and where I have sold once I can sell again. I find the clergymen along the line are willing and anxious that I should visit their people and sell them my books. They recommend them from the pulpit, and in every way they can, aid me in my work.

"One or two clergymen that I have not yet visited are very anxious that I should come among their people at my earliest convenience, which I intend to do as soon as I can get a new supply of books, such as the Great Supper and Divine Purpose, and works of like character, which they wish me to distribute among them. I hope that the great day will reveal that some good has been done through the feeble efforts of your unworthy servant."

THE COLPORTEUR, THE BOYS, AND THE BLIND MAN.

"This country abounds," writes a western colporteur, "with all kinds of wickedness and ignorance. I will give a few cases. In passing along one day, I came across two boys, one about sixteen, and the other about twelve years old. I asked the oldest if he could read; he said he could not. I asked the other if he could; he said not. I asked them their ages—they could not tell. I asked if their parents belonged to a church; they did not know. I then asked if they had heard that Jesus had died for sinners; they appeared astonished—said they had never heard of it before. I then gave them as plain a history of the plan of salvation as I could, and gave them a tract, the title of it "Now." I told them to give it to their father, and tell him that the man that gave it told them that he must read it, as he must soon die and give in his account; he must read it every day and pray—the boys still saying Yes, Yes, Yes. I went on about four miles farther, and saw two boys about the same age of the first described, walking smartly up a lane, each of them having a hoe on his shoulder. I had the same conversation as with the former two, and found them as ignorant in every respect. They were as much surprised on hearing about the way of salvation as the others. I asked them if they would learn to read if I would give each of them a book. They said they would. I gave one of them the tract 'Now,' and told him to tell their father that it was a message to him to meet his God; that he must pray every morning and evening, and read this little book every day. I had bought a few small Testaments, and I gave the other a New Testament, and after exhorting them some time I left them. The boys left their hoes lying on the ground, and each one with his book in hand went back down the lane as fast as they could walk, to show their books, and tell the strange things they had heard. To-day, as I rode along, I thought of the woman of Samaria leaving her water-pot, and walking off to tell about the Saviour. In passing along one day, as I was crossing a bridge over a stream, I saw a man coming down a long hill, some distance ahead. As I came closer to him, I saw something was the matter with him. I asked if he was lame. No, said he, I am blind. Still worse, said I, but if you have been in the habit of reading good books, and the Bible, you still have a great satisfaction. Are you a preacher? said he. I told him not. He said, 'About seven weeks ago, on Sabbath, a man came riding across the bridge where I was fishing. He threw down a little book. A little girl picked it up. It was the greatest thing I ever heard, and I thought you was the man.' I said not; but I said, I have good books, (It was one of my tracts I had given our preacher in M——. He had given it to another preacher in that neighbourhood, who dropped it for him). I got off my horse, and began to look for some book or tract to suit him. He was under very deep conviction. I went to his house and found his wife and three daughters. I told my business; the work was laid aside. I asked to see the book that had made such uneasiness in the family, for the old lady and three daughters were all as much concerned as the old man. I read it to them again; they all appeared in great distress. The old man was seventy-four years old, but he never had heard any thing like it before. He said he knew it was wrong to fish on Sabbath. He said he had been a very wicked man all his days. I sold him 'James' Anxious Inquirer,' and conversed with him and family."

ACTION OF THE PRESBYTERY OF HARMONY.

The Presbytery of Harmony, at its late meeting, took the following action in relation to the Board of Publication.

"The Committee, to whom was referred the Report of the Standing Committee on Colportage, would respectfully submit the following:

That we feel greatly encouraged by the success with which the Colporteurs engaged by the Committee have met, in disposing of the issues of our Board of Publication, and thus diffusing extensively a sound and orthodox literature; and that we regard it as not only warrantable, but obligatory on us, to prosecute the enterprise with more vigour and to a greater extent than has heretofore been done. But, at the same time, we are constrained deeply to deplore the continued embarrassments with which the enterprise has been trammelled, from the want of the necessary amount of funds at the disposal of the Committee, the original assessments having been at first small, and some of these never responded to by the churches: Therefore Resolved, 1*st*. That Presbytery engage with renewed energy and zeal in the prosecution of the work, and the more effectually to secure this object, and place the enterprise on a permanent basis, that in accordance with the direction of the General Assembly, collections be taken up annually in all our churches for this purpose.

Resolved, 2*d*. That in order to meet the present exigencies, and enable the Committee to carry the work at once into successful operation, our churches be immediately called upon to contribute the necessary amounts.

Resolved, 3*d*. That pursuant to the suggestion of the present Committee, the centre of operations be now changed from Sumpterville to Winnsborough—and that Ruling Elders, James R. Aiken, and A. W. Younge, and Rev. M. D. Fraser be a Committee to whom the direction of the enterprise shall be entrusted.

Resolved, 4*th*. That Presbytery memorialize our Synod to take the necessary steps for establishing, at as early a day as practicable, a depository of the publications of our Board, at some convenient point within their bounds.

Resolved, 5*th*. That we earnestly recommend to our Ministers and Churches the circulation of the Home and Foreign Record, and the Sabbath-School Visitor, in preference to other religious papers which are not of a strictly denominational character.

All which is respectfully submitted."

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

"To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ——, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

The Rev. William B. Barton of the Presbytery of Elizabethtown, departed this life on the 7th of April.

Varieties.

EDUCATION IN LIBERIA.—The republic of Liberia contains 300,000 inhabitants, of whom 7000 or 8000 may be regarded as civilized. The Christian churches in this republic contain 2000 communicants, and 1500 children are in the Sabbath-schools. On the western coast of Africa, are about 400,000 subject to British and Liberian law. Among this people are 137 schools, and 23,164 pupils. Among these schools, are at least seven high-schools. The Methodists sustain a high-school at Monrovia, and the necessary buildings have been erected at an expense of $8300. Large sums have been contributed to promote education in Liberia. The late Augustus Graham, of Brooklyn, New York, left $10,000, W. Bloomfield, of Rome, New York, $25,000. Five Missionary Boards hold property amounting to $42,000. Various persons have contributed $8,126 45 towards establishing a college. The trustees are now seeking a suitable person to go out and lay the foundation of a college. This is an object that commends itself to the friends of the African race.

OPPRESSIVE.—The Protestant pastor, Girod of Rouille, France, for a mere joke upon a government courier passing by, has been interrogated, incarcerated, and condemned without the possibility of defence or of calling a witness in his favour, to be transported to Algeria. French Republicanism!

MIAMI UNIVERSITY.—Letters from Dr. Anderson and the Rev. Mr. Worrall, the pastor of the Presbyterian church in Oxford, inform us, that a delightful revival is in progress there, and that a number of the students are anxiously inquiring.

SECESSION FROM THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—The English papers announce the secession of an English clergyman of a noble family—the Rev. William Bathurst—from the Church of England. The points on which he secedes are baptismal regeneration, the burial service, and the condemnatory clauses of the Athanasian creed. His living brought him $5100 a year.

NATIVE PREACHERS IN INDIA.—Three young men have been licensed and set apart in Calcutta to preach the gospel, by the Calcutta Presbytery of the Free Church of Scotland. They were all natives, and had for some time been employed in missionary work in connection with the schools.

IMMIGRANTS.—During the month of March, 23,175 immigrants arrived at New York. Of these, 18,532 were from England, Ireland, and Scotland; 2535 from Havre; and the remainder from other foreign countries. The number for the quarter ending the 31st of March amounts to 42,454, which is a decrease of 2914 on that of the first quarter of last year, and an increase of 17,757 on the arrivals during the first quarter of 1850. Two hundred and eighty-three vessels arrived from various foreign ports at New York last month, the aggregate tonnage of which amounted to $142,852.

AURORA BOREALIS.—Professor Olmstead, of Yale College, has in preparation a treatise on the Aurora Borealis, to which, for many years, he has paid much attention, and in regard to which he holds an original theory. His treatise is to be published by the Smithsonian Institute.

THE BIBLE IN A ROMISH COLLEGE.—Dr. Russell of Maynooth College in Ireland, made a public declaration, that each student of the College had a Bible, and that a whole recess of their library was devoted to biblical literature—which literature was the subject of their study during their five years' course. In answer to this statement of the professor, Patrick O'Brien, a converted priest, answers to the effect—that he was an alumnus of the college, and he declared, with all the solemnity of an oath, that during his six years residence in that college, in course of education for the priesthood, he had no Bible in his possession, nor was he aware that any other student had one, nor was it a class book in the divinity course, even in a dead language—and that as soon as he came to read the Bible, he renounced popery.

THE REV. DR. MCLEAN, Vice-President of Princeton College, and Professor of the Greek language and literature, preaches to a congregation of coloured people, in a neat little church, established much by his own liberality. How much to his honour, thus to imitate Him who said, "to the poor the gospel is preached."

GEORGIA.—The Savannah Bible Committee report the thorough canvassing of fifteen counties of the State by five colporteurs in their employ the past year; and they say, that in some cases one-third, and even one-half of the families visited were entirely destitute of the Bible. In one family where the wife had been a member of the church for fourteen years, they had never had any portion of the word of God in the house.

BAPTISM.—The Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, recently in session at Georgetown, D. C., resolved that the practice of private baptism, except under peculiar circumstances, ought to be discouraged.

IN LABOURS MORE ABUNDANT.—A brother in Indiana says, that between the first Sabbath in February and the first in March, he preached thirty-seven times, conducted about twenty prayer or inquiry meetings, made four temperance speeches, and rode more than two hundred miles exclusive of the distances in attending meetings in neighbourhoods. He had no ministerial help beyond one prayer, offered by a Methodist brother. This is active ministerial life in the West.

THE CHINESE AND THE ENGLISH.—The Chinese pay the British merchants fifteen millions of dollars for cotton manufactures, and forty-five millions of dollars for opium grown in the British East Indies, every year.

WAR ON THE KAFFIRS.—The war carried on for some time past by the British Government in South Africa, against the Kaffirs, is denounced bitterly by the religious press in England. It is said to have destroyed both the Moravian and Wesleyan Missions, and threatens the destruction of the French Protestant Mission.

CHINESE GOING TO CALIFORNIA.—Intelligence received from China, by way of England, represents that the emigration of Chinese to California is greatly on the increase. During the past month six vessels have sailed; ten are preparing to leave, and more are required. Many who had previously emigrated have returned with substantial proofs of their success, and the Chinese are not slow in following the example of their countrymen, when money is the inducement.

THE DOOR SHUT.

And the door was shut.—MATT. xxv. 10.

The parable from which these impressive words are taken, is designed to teach the importance of being always ready for death. The great truth which the Saviour would impress upon us is this, "Watch therefore; for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh." Matt. xxv. 13.

Even at the present day, marriage customs in some Eastern countries are very much like those alluded to in this parable. Ward, in his view of the Hindus, tells of a marriage where, as soon as the bridegroom entered the house, the door was shut, and guarded by native soldiers. Those who were ready went in; others were excluded; and the door was shut!

I. There is a door open now.

1. The door of hope is open. Man is a sinner. He is a prisoner, bound in the fetters of sin; but he is a prisoner of hope, and not of despair. There is One who came into the world to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound. Zech. ix. 12; Isa. lxi. 1—3.

2. The door of salvation is open. The Bible points sinners to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. It assures them that there is salvation through atoning blood. John i. 29; Acts xiii. 39.

3. The door of heaven is open. Thus saith the faithful and true witness—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 14, 21.

It is Jesus Christ who has opened the door of hope, of salvation, and of heaven. He has the keys of hell and of death; he has the keys of heaven too; he openeth, and no man shutteth; and he shutteth, and no man openeth. Rev. i. 18; iii. 7. He shed his blood for the remission of sins. By his death he opened the doors of our prison-house; and the doors opened by his death are kept open by his intercession; and men are urged to flee from the wrath to come. Matt. xxvi. 28; Rom. iii. 25.

II. But soon the door shall be shut.

1. The door of hope shall be shut. It is now open wide. None need despair. All are invited to Christ. But by and by it will be too late. The gospel will no longer speak in accents of mercy; the darkness of despair will settle around the sinner; the gloom of the pit cover him; the door of hope will be shut!

2. The door of salvation shall be shut. It is now open. We are invited to enter. Look and be saved! Turn, why will ye die? Isa. xlv. 22; Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

"While God invites, how blest the day!"

But soon our day will be over; the night will come, and the door of salvation will be shut!

3. The door of heaven shall be shut. It is open now; it stands wide and solicits our entrance. Its joys invite us; its blessed inhabitants beckon us; its blissful seats, its sweet music, unite their charms to draw us thitherward. But soon we shall feel no longer these wooing and constraining influences. Heaven's attractions will cease to attract us; its gates will be barred against us; the door of heaven will be shut!

How dreadful to go into eternity hoping to enter heaven, and find the door shut! Oh, to go from heaven's gate to the pit of hell, how terrific! To plunge from the regions of eternal sunshine into the blackness of darkness for ever—

"Where woe and wrath in every form
Is there the sinner's part."

Who can think of it without horror! Yet such, it is to be feared, will be the sad history of many! The parable authorizes this conclusion—Many will knock for admission, but no admission will be granted—the door is shut! Reader, shall it be so with you? Remember, the door of heaven shall be shut against all who do not enter the door of hope and salvation through Jesus Christ. There is but one way to heaven—it is a short, but a narrow way—it lies by the cross of Christ—believe, and you shall live! Delay not; flee to Jesus Christ now, and put your trust in him, for soon the door shall be shut!

"PATIENT CONTINUANCE IN WELL-DOING."

Bear the burden of the present—
Let the morrow bear its own;
If the morning sky be pleasant,
Why the coming night bemoan?

If the darkened heavens lower,
Wrap thy cloak around thy form;
Though the tempest rise in power,
God is mightier than the storm.

Steadfast faith and hope unshaken
Animate the trusting breast;
Step by step the journey's taken
Nearer to the land of rest.

All unseen, the Master walketh
By the toiling servant's side;
Comfortable words he talketh,
While his hands uphold and guide.

Grief, nor pain, nor any sorrow,
Rends thy breast, to him unknown;
He to-day, and He to-morrow,
Grace sufficient gives his own.

Holy strivings nerve and strengthen—
Long endurance wins the crown;
When the evening shadows lengthen,
Thou shalt lay the burden down.

THE DUTY OF SELF-DENIAL.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself." Matt. xvi. 24.

My dear Christian brother, do you consider it a duty to practise self-denial? And how far do you practise it in your house, your furniture, your dress, your food, your recreations or your pleasures? If you disregard this duty, and do not thus deny yourself, and give to the cause of the blessed Redeemer, should you not ask yourself, "How dwelleth the love of God in me!" That is, if this evidence is so doubtful, or wholly wanting, am I a child of God, while I so readily and constantly pervert this command—indulge myself, and deny the needy!—If this "fruit" of my life, is so sickly, or entirely blasted, how should I tremble, lest I be found at last bound with the tares, and ready for the fire!

I was delighted to hear of the resolution [given on p. 95] of a Christian brother, under a sense of duty, to abandon Tobacco. How many Christians are addicted to this costly and offensive practice! very often using it to excess—and in numerous cases, disgustingly so. It is admitted that over $1000 worth of Tobacco is consumed daily in the city of New York—about half a million per annum in that city alone—and all the land bears a due proportion to New York in this vice. If so, the people of the United States consume daily, near $50,000 in Tobacco—or the enormous sum of about $18,000,000 a year! More than one-third of the entire expense of our National Government! and nearly ten times the total amount of American benevolence, all put together!

Of this vast consumption of a costly, offensive, poisonous drug—unnecessary, and very often directly and positively hurtful—professing Christians consume a full proportion, according to numbers.

What vast numbers fail to give $1 a year to the cause of Christ, while they pay $10 a year for Tobacco! And how many almost forget to open their purse for the Redeemer, who gave his life for them; while they pay 25, 50, 100, and some 200 and 300 dollars a year for cigars!

Is this right? When "the Lord cometh" to reckon for the talents loaned to you, will this be accepted? Will it be satisfactory, either to Him or to you?—That brother alluded to, thought it would not. He felt it a duty to abandon that filthy weed, that he might the better discharge his plain duty as a Christian.

Have you ever given the matter a candid, prayerful consideration?—honestly—as if before the bar of God?—Do so at once, and see the result.—Do not flinch from it—it will soon stand before you when you cannot shrink from it;—consider it now, and follow the dictates of conscience and duty, as seen in the light of facts and of God's holy word. It is no trifling matter, and may not be delayed, or neglected—and may God give you wisdom and grace to decide and do right. C.

RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Missions, the following resolution was unanimously passed.

"Resolved, That missionaries of the Board are expected not to leave their fields of labour for the purpose of collecting funds for building houses of worship, without first referring the subject to the Executive Committee by whom they were appointed."

The bearing of the above resolution may not be apparent to all, at first glance, and yet its necessity is felt by many. It frequently happens that ministers leave their fields of labour for the purpose of making collections to build a house of worship with the belief that theirs is a peculiar case, and that it will only be necessary to make it known in our large cities, and the amount needed will soon be collected. These brethren often return home, after weeks, and even months of absence from their churches, sadly disappointed, with scarcely enough to meet their travelling expenses. Indeed, we have known instances where they were compelled to borrow the necessary funds to carry them home. Now, these failures arise often from an untimely visit, and a want of a knowledge of all the facts in the case, more than from any indisposition on the part of our more wealthy churches to render them assistance. Had these brethren been advised of the existing difficulties at the time, it would have saved them both time and expense, as well as the unpleasant, and often thankless duty which they have tried to perform. To such an extent has this matter been carried, in former years, that pastors and churches in some places have been led to adopt measures which may be regarded by some as too exclusive; and yet these very churches still give largely to this, as well as other objects. And in doing so, they certainly do no more than their duty. They ought to assist in building houses of worship not merely in our cities, but all over our own land. And there are instances, doubtless, where our missionaries may very properly act as agents for an important enterprise for a limited time, but the time and circumstances should be well chosen. And the brethren would do well to be governed in this, by facts which can thus be brought before them. This subject has frequently been suggested for the consideration of the Board, and has recently been brought before them in the form of a memorial. The importance of some such action will, we trust, be manifest to all.

We cheerfully publish the following acknowledgment from our Missionary in St. Paul, Minnesota. We scarcely know of a more important point, or of an infant-struggling Church more worthy of assistance. Our Missionary there does not wish to leave his field to solicit aid, and therefore appeals through our columns for assistance, as will be seen by reference to last Record. How many more will respond to this appeal? We will gladly receive, and forward any contributions for this object.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

I have received three dollars enclosed in the following note, from Newport, Rhode Island:

"Sir, the trifle within is to assist you in building a church. The Lord can see that it reaches its destination. A Disciple of Jesus."

How many more "Disciples of Jesus" will do likewise? How soon we could build a church if the "Disciples" would send in their tens, fives, threes, and even ones. J. G. Riheldaffer,
St. Paul, M. T.

ANNUAL REPORT.

Before this number of the Record reaches our readers, the Report of the Board of Missions will be laid before the General Assembly. We are gratified now to be able to say that the results of the year will compare favourably with that of any preceding, both as it respects funds, as well as the increase of the work in fields really missionary. Not the least gratifying feature of the whole, is the large number of churches that have become self-sustaining. Many of these were planted by this Board, and received for a time its fostering care, until having gathered sufficient strength, they felt it to be neither right nor necessary to ask further aid.

It will be remembered that by order of the General Assembly, the Board closes its accounts one month earlier than any previous year; hence the Report will embrace only eleven months, viz., from May 1st, 1851, to April 1st, 1852. This may occasion a little wider discrepancy this year between the facts published in our statistical tables, and those usually published in the Minutes of the General Assembly. We hope to be able to give an abstract of the Report in the next number of the Record.

CALIFORNIA, A PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONARY FIELD.

It is my present wish to bring to notice some of the peculiar features of California, not only as a missionary field generally, but one peculiarly inviting to the Presbyterian Church.

The large population already congregated on these shores, the many permanent towns and settlements already sprung up, and the gradual and rapid increase of numbers, make on these accounts a forcible and sufficiently loud appeal for the founding, amid an interesting and growing people, of the institutions of the gospel.

But besides the want which has been thus created for Christian institutions, the desire for them among our people generally, has been no less marked and manifest. Of Californians it may be truly and emphatically said, they have desired among them the presence and influence of the ameliorating influences of the Gospel. This feature of society was brought early to the writer's notice. Among his fellow-voyagers to California, at a time, too, in which many were sneeringly describing all adventurers to this land as mere gold hunters, whose ruling and all-absorbing passion was a sordid lust of gold, he well remembers from the lips of many of his associates in travel strong expressions of gratification, that ministers of the gospel were sharing with them the trials of their enterprise, and would be found among them, in the land of their destination, to administer in their need the aids and consolations of religion. The same trait of character has continued to exhibit itself in all the history of succeeding adventurers and their sojourning in this land.

Added to this desire for the institutions of the gospel, has been also a marked disposition to support them with a justly commendable liberality. This fact has existed notwithstanding there has been much personal indifference to the duties and services of religion, with even neglect and a "turning away" on the part of many. But still, the test of an appreciation of gospel privileges has been most favourably and commendably met, when the call has been made to contribute to their sustentation. The large amount of funds contributed directly for the founding and support of churches, will ever be an honour and praise to the spirit of liberality of early Californians.

The promise of the present and future is also most encouraging. In the growth of society, and especially in the increase of the number and stability of its communities, the need of permanent religious instrumentalities has been more and more impressed upon the public mind, and developed in expressed wishes and corresponding efforts. Indeed, until the present time, religious enterprises were wanting, as to the State at large, in a feature which ever adds greatly to their interest and the gratification of those who embark in them—the knowledge of a fitness in circumstances, and maturity in preparation, as well as general timeliness in the opportunity for introducing the ever-blessed instruments of gospel truth and grace.

This field is also peculiar in the strongly marked intellectual character of its population. Generally, the people of California are men of strong minds, with a high order of cultivation, vigour, and activity. With such a people it is interesting to associate. Their intelligence and enterprise in schemes of secular interest, become elements of efficient usefulness, under the controlling and sanctifying power of divine truth. Enlarged views and energetic action will be the characteristics of their religious efforts; their pious zeal will be intelligent and warm; and far-reaching as well as happy will be the fruit of their beneficent endeavours. Such a population, capable of these noble aims and ends, is now in California.

To this field the attention and active zeal of the Presbyterian Church is invited. Our own beloved Zion is called to share in the glorious labour and reward of directing, in a religious channel, the energies of this enterprising people. Upon them we are invoked to bestow the culture of Christian doctrine; in them to seek to develope the full proportions of a mature Christianity. The field is one prepared to receive the cultivation of such labourers as the Presbyterian Church is capable of bestowing. The soil is one fitted to receive the seed which our labourers in the gospel of Christ are accustomed to sow. The men of California possess the mind, and have attained the skill, of making them capable of comprehending and appreciating the system of religious instruction which it is the peculiarity of the Presbyterian ministry to bestow. Besides, here is also a distinct sphere of usefulness, in the educational interests of the country, for which the agencies of our Church are peculiarly adapted, and in the line of which it has ever been her habit and distinction to bear a conspicuous part. The educated ministry in connection with the laity of the Presbyterian church has now a most favourable opportunity for embarking anew in this highly useful and important work. This service, with the more exclusive labours of the ministry of the word, will find California an open and a most encouraging field for their employment.

Beyond these general reasons, which we are warranted in assuming as providential indications of the obligations resting upon our beloved Church, to engage in the work of rearing Christian institutions in this land, there are of course other and more intelligible calls from California upon the Presbyterian ministry. No inconsiderable proportion of the population of this State are of Presbyterian origin and association. These have come not only from different portions of our Union, but also from the united kingdom of Great Britain, its provinces and colonies, as well as from Continental Europe. They are here with their strong preferences for the simple rites and ordinances, the forms of doctrine, and order of church government, under the influence of which they have been trained. It is natural that they should desire, as thus also they express themselves, to be followed by their accustomed, cherished church privileges, embalmed as they are in their most sacred recollections and affections. They desire in their midst the church of their sires, venerable and endeared in its worship and observances; this only is wanting to enkindle in their bosoms at once a home-interest in this the land of their adoption; and impart to its foreign features, in natural scenery, and habits of society, a familiar, home-like face. The planting of this church among them they ask; at its altars they desire the ministry of their choice to serve; to such a ministry they are ready to extend a cordial welcome, and an affectionate respect and attachment; to its support they will contribute of their "temporal things," and to its authority will yield all due submission in the Lord. Will such a ministry enter into this open door of usefulness? Shall such a ministry be sent?

An early commencement was made in the planting of Presbyterian churches on these Pacific shores. We were not a whit behind any branch of the Church in early, zealous efforts to unfold here the banner of the truth. The first two Protestant churches organized in California were those of our own order. But it must be confessed we have not maintained the same forwardness in the subsequent history of our missionary operations in this country. We have suffered other denominations far to exceed us in zeal to supply these wide-spread religious destitutions. The number of our ministers have remained stationary, while at the same time the demand for an increase has been continually augmenting. We who are in the field have not organized congregations as we might, for the want of ministers to become their pastors. Our hands have been tied in the cause of education, because there have been none who could be spared to devote themselves especially to the labour of teaching and the founding of literary institutions. It cannot be that our small representation will continue unassisted to meet the responsibilities of its burden of duty in this land. Is it not an authorized, a divine impression which re-applies to the Presbyterian Church in the present emergency, the ancient prophetic call, WHOM SHALL I SEND? AND WHO WILL GO FOR US? A. W.

San Francisco, March 1852.

The following extracts from letters recently received from a few of our missionaries, among the many in our office, present very clearly the lights and shadows of a missionary life. They speak for themselves. But few have any just conception of the trials and discouragements of many of our missionaries. The fields of their labour are chiefly in new and frontier settlements, and always in comparatively weak and feeble churches. Many of these communities are composed of those who have but little of this world's goods, and can therefore do but little toward the erection of houses of worship or the support of the gospel. And many among them are lamentably indifferent to the whole subject of religion, and its advancement, in the community in which they live. One of the trials of our missionaries, and by no means the least, is the indifference manifested by those who ought to be active in endeavouring to uphold them in their arduous work, and particularly those who are members of our Church, or professedly attached to its doctrines and order. Here and there, we find those who come nobly up to the work, and determine, with God's blessing, to accomplish it; and the blessing of God generally accompanies these efforts. The case immediately below sets forth some of the trials and encouragements of these devoted men.

Michigan.

I have been so disheartened for a month, that I feel almost ashamed to write. There have been many things to work against us, aside from the wickedness of men and the machinations of Satan. The winter has been unusually severe. Our house of worship exceedingly uncomfortable, and scarcely a family but has been visited with sickness in some form or other—and there have been many deaths. All these things conspire to make our congregation small, and attendance irregular. My own health has been so poor that I could with difficulty perform my Sabbath duties; yet with the exception of two Sabbaths when I omitted one service, these duties have been performed.

There have been a series of excitements here, arising from a variety of causes which has almost destroyed the hope of the outpouring of God's Spirit. The foolish opposition of a minister of this place, the excitement in reference to our schools, and the "spiritual rappings," &c., all turn the attention away from the truth. * * *

I commenced writing this report more than a week ago, and laid it aside to visit my people, and the result is a rejoicing of heart which I did not expect. God's blessing disappointed me. I found a feeling among my people truly gratifying. Many are inquiring the way, and some seem to have set their faces Zionward in earnest, whom I did scarcely hope for. Our communion came yesterday, and we received seven additions, four by letter and three by profession. Two of these latter were children of the church, and the third I baptized. Our services were exceedingly solemn. The whole house seemed melted to tears. On Saturday I baptized three children, presented by a widow who entered with us by profession three months ago. I have commenced an effort to build a house of worship, and the first day procured six hundred dollars. This is my plan; I have four subscriptions, 1st of $100, payable if ten subscribers can be found; 2d, $50 payable on the same conditions; 3d, of $25 with the same, and then balance of all amounts that persons may feel able to give. You perceive that by the first three we will get $1750, and by the last we hope to get at least $150 more. The house which is demanded will cost at least two thousand dollars; and we must trust to friends abroad to finish it. Our members have come up nobly to the work. Each male member who possibly can do so has subscribed $100, and some with great self-denial. We are determined to make it go if possible, and I trust we have the love of Christ's kingdom at heart. Another thing which cheers me is the kind expression of good feeling I meet with everywhere. Rejoice with us and pray for us. We cease not to make mention of you before God, that he may sustain your hands and strengthen you by his Spirit with might in the inner man.

Pastoral Visitation—Bible Class Instruction.

Ohio.

I have visited about eighty families this winter, and my custom has been to have personal conversation with every adult person in every family, (and also with every child). I have endeavoured to make my inquiries, instructions, and warnings, as pointed as possible, often having spent from thirty minutes to an hour in conversation, and then followed it with a short prayer. I have left a whole family bathed in tears. This kind of labour I find very profitable to myself.

Besides three or four classes of the larger children accustomed to meet with our Sabbath-school, we have two Bible classes, one composed of young ladies, the other of young men. I meet with the class of young ladies once in two weeks, and have made it my business to make pointed applications of the truths contained in the lesson, and I have frequently found that it produced a deep feeling. This kind of labour I also find interesting and profitable. R.

Concert of Prayer by the Members of a Church.

Pennsylvania.

The most encouraging thing about the spiritual interests of this church is, that we feel deeply our spiritual deadness. We have a monthly meeting of our session for prayer and conversation. We have tried almost every means, again and again. We have now resolved to hold a union prayer-meeting in our closets on Saturday evening at seven o'clock to wrestle with God for an outpouring of his Spirit, and a revival of pure religion. I have also engaged all the church members in the same. On Sabbath evenings I preach mostly on the subject of prayer. We know not what the result will be. B.

Discouragements.—Want of early Religious Training.

New York.

The state of the Presbyterian Church in this valley, particularly the New School branch of it, is low and discouraging—they do not prosper, and can scarcely conceive what the evil is which is gnawing at the root. Some of them are looking toward our connection as their probable home, at no distant day. We are sorry that we cannot see more that is encouraging in our churches. The truth is, we are all labouring, more or less, under the influence of the same great evil, viz:—the want of a thorough training of the young in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. For it cannot be denied that a great proportion of the youth in our region are the most profoundly ignorant of the gospel, the most devoid of religious principle, and perhaps the most self-confident of any that preceded them, since the first settlement of the country. It will take a generation of hard labour to bring the youth into as good a state in this respect, as they were before this part of God's fair heritage was "burnt over." Neither branch of the church are sufficiently awake to the cause of the evil, or sufficiently prompt to apply the remedy. It is not sufficiently felt that the work of reformation should begin in the family. Those tendencies which prostrated many a family altar, and closed the lips of the mother, who else had learned her little one to lisp the cradle hymn, and evening prayer, are still existent; and are sometimes visibly active in many of those persons, under the shade of whose influence some of our youths must grow up, at least for a time. Some persons of this description, who came out with us in our exodus a few years ago, carry in them some sad effects of their education in the house of bondage, and are strangers to that power, and distinctness of moral preception—that fixedness of conviction, and that form of character, which those persons discover who had not been over-heated, and over-strained, and which are elements of efficiency in the training up the youth for God. Yes, innovation and heresy connected with high bewildering excitement have produced results upon our church which it is feared she cannot recover from during the present generation—let the witnesses "cry and sigh," labour and suffer as they may. "This," you will say, "is a gloomy representation!" So it is. But, brethren, we have to deal with the matter as it is. It is perhaps not enough that you too are deceived. If Israel, having "sinned a great sin," are therefore under judicial anger, perhaps it ought to be told them. Would it not have a tendency to humble us?—allay many a murmur, forestall and stifle many a desponding (sceptical) suggestion, (as if the gospel had proved a failure); and dispose the church more earnestly to pray, "Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants—oh, satisfy us early with thy goodness. Let the work appear unto thy servants, and the glory to their children."

Faithful Exposition of the Scriptures.—His truth effectual.

During this quarter, the manner of my preaching was almost entirely expository, and chiefly upon the 10th chapter of the Gospel of John. I gave notice that I would search that portion of Scripture in their presence—sustain, exhibit, and enforce whatever sentiments should be found clearly revealed therein. This notice awakened the attention of the people, and numbers of them turned their attention to a diligent search of the word of God. As might be expected, there were all manner of feelings and sentiments manifested. Some heard the word of God with gladness of heart. Some assented to the truth, but questioned the expediency of its presentation in such plainness. Some doubted, and some hated and opposed, while a few became serious minded, and we have reason to hope that there have been several conversions. * * * * It was really amusing to hear the comments and opinions that were thrown out. Such, for instance, as "Mr. —— has used himself up for this place"—"He will not be sustained here another year."—"Such sentiments are from the pit."—"Such doctrines serve no other purpose than to make infidels."—"The people will not hear such doctrines," &c. But the people did hear. The congregation still increased, and we have no evidence that any were kept away from the Saviour—on the contrary, we have good evidence—blessed be God—that some were brought experimentally to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. To his name be the praise. H.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE NUMBER OF CANDIDATES.

The great fact, characterizing the department of ministerial education for the last year, is the decline in the number of candidates for the office of the gospel ministry. The statistics of the Church, so far as they are accessible, prove that in the last ten years there has been no perceptible increase among our theological students, and that the number during the last year has been rather under than over that of some of the preceding years.

The Board are very solicitous to keep before the Church, in all its magnitude, solemnity, and responsibility, the fact that our theological students are not increasing in the ratio answering to our providential position in the ranks of the evangelical host.

The following is a view of the number of candidates, the stages of their preparatory studies, the number licensed, &c., for the last ecclesiastical year.

The number of candidates received during the year has been—New, 67, restored, 2; total		69
Making in all from the beginning,		2029

During the year forty-eight candidates are known to have finished their course of study. Six have withdrawn from the aid of the Board. Eleven have abandoned study: six of them on account of ill health. Four have died. Four have been dropped for not reporting for more than a year. Four have withdrawn from the list by marrying. Seven have been discontinued for various reasons, involving, on the part of some, mental or moral qualifications.

GOD'S SOVEREIGNTY AND MAN'S SINFULNESS IN THE DECLINE OF CANDIDATES.

Among the reasons which may be assigned to account for the want of increase in the candidates of our Church, there is too great a disposition to neglect our dependence upon God, and to leave out of view our own short-comings.

1. In the first place, the sovereign good pleasure of God is not only a doctrine of theology, but a practical truth, to be religiously and solemnly acknowledged in all our approaches towards the arcana of this awful subject. God reserves to himself the inalienable right of exercising his sovereign will in bringing sinners into his kingdom and in appointing them to its offices of responsibility and trust. His own glorious and absolute dominion is the foundation of Zion's hope. He knows her wants, and establishes her times and her seasons. Her name is engraved upon the palms of his hands, and all her destiny is arranged in the counsels of infinite knowledge. It is therefore a solemn duty and a precious privilege for the Church to feel her deep, abiding and all-pervading subjection to the King of kings throughout the administration of her system of means and measures. Nor is there any one point where the absolute authority of her great Head is more distinctly to be recognized than in designating those, whom he will, to the sacred office. In the midst, therefore, of all our wants and destitutions, it is the Church's sacred duty to exalt the divine prerogative in the perpetuation of the ministry. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The humble and adoring ascription of sovereignty to the King of saints, which is a part of the praises of the kingdom of glory, should be a sober, heart-felt, practical element in all our meditations and discussions respecting the ministry and the Church.

2. But God permits his people to interpret his adverse providences as a rebuke upon their own short-comings and sins; and in giving to him all glory, to take unto themselves guilt and condemnation. No calculation of the instrumental causes which have prevented the larger increase of our theological students can safely leave out of view the sins of the Church. Few severer trials can afflict a Church than the inadequate supply of her ministerial resources; and this very fact may well awaken the inquiry, if God has not a controversy with us. It is certain that judgment is sometimes appointed in this general line of direction. "Repent, and do thy first works: or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, unless thou repent." The threatened removal of gospel ordinances in the Church of Ephesus, on account of its sins, may be to our own Church a key to the interpretation of God's dealings in the shortcomings of our ministerial power. Has our Church done her full duty in preaching the Gospel to the poor, in occupying the waste places of our own land, and in proclaiming far and wide to the heathen the message of eternal life? Our sins in these few particulars may be sufficient to provoke divine judgment from Him who walketh in the midst of the golden candlesticks. But whilst we are not called upon to specify the individual sins which, to the eye of Christian discernment, seem not unlikely, at least in part, to affect the issue now under consideration, it may be safely affirmed, in the general, that there are sins enough throughout our borders to invite the displeasure of the Redeemer. And farther, it is not unscriptural to believe that the diminution of ministerial strength may be one of the forms in which that displeasure may be expressed. It is certain that the humble acknowledgment of sin before God, accompanied by "repentance and the doing of first works" is in accordance with our present obligations.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

HOME, THE GREAT TRAINING PLACE.

"Everything that is moral in a nation, and holy, worthy, and useful in the Church, if not actually formed, is fostered and cherished before the household fire."

1. One of the great advantages of home for the inculcation of religion is, that its instructions begin early. Long before the teacher or the minister can gain access, the parent is in daily contact with God's immortal gift. Though our nature is corrupt, even unto death, the arrangement of Providence, which gives a faithful parent the opportunity to bring God, and truth, and duty before the dawning mind, is a most precious and weighty compensation. A great deal can be done by early training to secure spiritual blessings. The promises of God, like the angels who welcomed the infant Redeemer, are a heavenly host, bright-shining, and glorious witnesses of the fulfilment of the covenant. God has connected the means with the end. Whilst the blessing is with his Spirit, the agency is with his people. That agency primarily consists in home nurture, early and piously at work, resting upon divine promises, and therefore industrious in elaborating the comprehensive and mysterious means. "I will be a God to thee, and to thy seed after thee:" "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." The raising of the seed is God's stipulation in the covenant; and the promise for the man is in the training of the child. The early nurture of home is of unspeakable advantage in maturing the true ends of education. The mysterious power of a right beginning is never more clearly exemplified than in the great work of training the human soul for "glory, honour, and immortality."

2. Home, also, has peculiar opportunities of illustrating by example. Divine truth exemplified in the consistent lives of parents, makes a deep impression upon the youthful mind. A child in whose presence religion is daily acted out in all the familiarities of the social circle, is highly favoured of the Lord. Before he understands doctrine, he is made acquainted with practice, and is thus insensibly led on in the way everlasting. The power of godly example, utterly insufficient in itself to counteract natural depravity, is sanctified by Divine grace in the salvation of children and of children's children.

3. Another of the elements which characterize home nurture, is its facilities of training. To teach, to give a good example, and to train, are three distinct parts of the work of education. It is important to communicate divine knowledge early, and to illustrate it by example; but it is also important to see that the child applies the knowledge he thus acquires. A parent has constant opportunities at home of forming correct habits in children, of directing and restraining their impulses, of superintending their whole conduct, of training them to act out what is right. By means of watchful supervision, seasonable counsel and discipline, vicious ways can be in a good degree anticipated or broken up, and habits of rectitude early cultivated.

4. Then, too, there is a direct power in the parental and filial relation itself to give efficacy to home instruction. The tie which binds parent and child is among the sweetest attachments of life. The natural authority of the parent is acquiesced in with deference and affection; and the instructions of a father and mother possess greater influence than those which flow through any other channel.

5. Nor must be omitted among the advantages of home, the fact that its nurture is carried on amidst the seclusions of domestic life, comparatively free from the temptations, the turmoil, and the interruptions of the world. God has separated the home-kingdom from invasion by natural boundaries better defined and more authoritative than mountain landmark, or civil and political division.

Considerations like these give to home-instruction a prominence among the means that sway the destiny of our race. Religion claims the advantages of the domestic circle as her own covenant right. She says, "Fathers! mothers! bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Receive them, as God's gracious gifts, for his glory! Their salvation is closely connected with your faithful endeavours. The promise is to you, and to your children; to those children whom you have so often nursed in infancy, kissed with tenderest love, and whose very curls and smiles are grateful to your heart. The promise of immortal life is to you and to them; but it is a promise linked with active duties on your part." "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart. And thou shalt diligently teach them unto thy children, ... and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." "That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born, who should arise and declare them to their children."

It is a true remark, that "although grace does not come by succession, it commonly comes in succession." The destiny of children is in a great measure decided by household influences; and Christianity has ever vindicated and honoured home as the scene of her triumphs, the favoured retreat of enlightening and gracious instructions made efficacious by the Divine Spirit.

PRESBYTERIAN INSTITUTE OF THE PRESBYTERY OF PHILADELPHIA.

We present to our readers the "Annual Announcement and Report of the Trustees of the Classical and Mathematical Institute of the Presbytery of Philadelphia."

PRESBYTERIAN INSTITUTE.

This Institution in its design and organization harmonizes with the system of Parochial School education, which, by the urgent recommendation of the General Assembly, has been extensively and successfully adopted by the churches in connection with this body. Its appropriate position in this system of education, is intermediate between that of the Primary School and Presbyterial College, embracing many of the advantages of the latter. Neither sectarian nor exclusive in its character, it receives the patronage of several religious denominations, and invites it from all who would withdraw their sons from those corrupt communications which are inseperable from any system of public education, and provide for them the means of moral and religious instruction more characteristic and efficient than is compatible with public sentiment on this subject. The religious instructions which are given in the Institute are in harmony with the religious sentiments of that denomination by which it was established. In this sense only is it denominational. With these views, the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly and the Scriptures are the subject of daily attention and recitation.

The supervision and control of the Institute is vested in a Board of Trustees, appointed by the Presbytery of Philadelphia, under a charter from the State. A Committee of Visitors is also appointed by the Trustees from their own body, and others, whose duty it is at stated intervals, to visit the Institute, to observe the diligence and proficiency of the pupils, the ability and fidelity of the teachers, and to consult for the encouragement and welfare of both.

The course of instruction comprehends the several branches of an English and classical education usually pursued in similar institutions, preparatory either for the active pursuits of life, or for admission to any class in College. Particular attention is paid to the mental habits of the pupils, to elementary principles, and to the rudiments of the English language —too frequently neglected in the variety of studies that are often crowded prematurely and indiscreetly upon the attention of a young child.

The discipline of the school is intended to be kind and parental, but decided; in which the co-operation of parents and guardians is earnestly sought. For this purpose both the deportment and proficiency of their sons or wards are faithfully reported to them from week to week.

As a check upon parental indulgence in permitting needless absences from school, the lessons omitted in this manner are to be recited on the return of the pupil. But the patrons of the Institute are respectfully reminded that occasional absences greatly retard the progress of the child; and, when frequent, exonerate the instructors from all responsibility respecting his improvement.

The Institute is provided with the large and convenient rooms lately occupied by the Protestant Episcopal Academy, No. 341 Market street, three doors above Ninth, Philadelphia.

The academical year is divided into two terms of five months each, beginning on the first Monday of September and of February respectively.

The tuition is sixty dollars per annum—to be paid semi-annually at the middle of each term.

Pupils to be received into any of the organized classes in the Institute, must have made good proficiency in the first rudiments of an English education, reading, orthography, writing, oral and written arithmetic, and geography, and in all cases will be subjected to examination. A primary department is provided to receive and forward pupils that are not prepared for any of the organized classes.

REPORT OF THE TRUSTEES.

It is scarcely two months since the Trustees of the Institute entered upon their duties. They found its affairs in a desponding, but by no means discouraging condition. Like every child whom the Father receiveth, it had been subjected to trials, painful and mortifying, but in these very trials a lively faith could discern the seal of a divine adoption. The Board are confident in their convictions, that the enterprise has proved successful, and in comparison with most efforts of a kindred nature, cheeringly so. When it is considered that it has toiled under unusual disadvantages of location, competition and straitness, there cannot be mistaken in its present hopeful condition, the divine hand that is with it, not only encouraging but directing our duty.

In the Treasurer's Report it will be observed that the Institute is relieved from all financial embarrassment. The assets up to the present time are adequate to its liabilities.

That this gratifying position has been secured with but little pecuniary aid from the churches, must appear a subject of surprise to all. The instances are exceedingly rare in the experience of all successful institutions, literary or religious, that so inconsiderable a sum has been required to sustain the struggles of their infancy. It is two years since this enterprise was commenced; and it should be observed, that of all the deficiency of income which has occurred, the less proportion belongs to the second year; which exhibits an encouraging financial gain upon the first, and promise for the future.

Having repeatedly visited the school and examined the classes, the Trustees are unhesitatingly of opinion, that the pupils will favourably compare in proficiency, with those of any similar institution in our city.

It is with pleasure the Board are able to announce that decided improvements have been recently secured for the future facilities of the school. Other rooms have been obtained far more commodious than those which have been occupied. Another teacher has been added to the corps of instructors, which increases the number to four.

And, further, what has been long desirable, the requirements of pupils for admission have been elevated to a standard that will enable the teachers to concentrate their efforts to much greater effect.

That the Institute should have succeeded in attaining its present efficiency and character while destitute of these advantages, reflects the highest credit upon the principal and his associates. It is in itself a pledge, that, with these added facilities, it must in a still more eminent degree fulfil the design of its foundation.

Asking leave to recall briefly the attention of the Presbytery to one or two of the principles upon which this enterprise was undertaken, the Board respectfully submit this report.

First, a thorough mental discipline to the children of the Church.

It is a principle established by all experience, that the only efficient means as well as important end of all education, is discipline of mind—the training of an intellectual gymnasium, which developes and strengthens the faculties, not so much for present exhibition as for future power—the power to wield vigorously and skilfully the materials of practical life. Any system of instruction, therefore, which does not secure this end, must be regarded a dissipation and waste, whose tendency is to make our youth mountebanks instead of men—to enervate and make them less efficient than their fathers for responsibilities that will be greater than their fathers have incurred. That a superficial and unhealthy training, for purposes of mere exhibition, is, at the present day, substituted for a severe discipline, and solid, though perhaps slower attainment, and that it characterizes a large proportion of our schools, is glaringly and painfully obvious. This is believed to be not so much an intentional fraud as a necessity, arising from great competition for pupils, and from blind and mistaken views of parents as to what is true progress in the education of their children. It is from this increasing evil we seek protection, where alone we believe it can be found—in an Institute under our own supervision, and established upon such a basis of independence as is afforded by the interest and patronage of a large denomination.

A second principle is that of duty to our church.

No Christian will deny that every man is responsible for the propagation of the truth as he believes it. If Presbyterianism is our faith, we are under obligations to inculcate and extend it, by every lawful means in our power. If it is not our faith, sincerity requires us to abandon it. It is universally conceded that denominational education is an essential and eminently efficient power in the policy of all vigorous church extension. It is also conceded that it is educated mind which exerts the most effective influence either for error or for truth. To these principles is allowed the force of common maxims; and therefore, though the Presbyterian element enters largely into the learned professions, we cannot innocently become indifferent to the duty of maintaining this advantage of professional influence, or to the dangers which threaten it. We may not shut our eyes to the fact, that the schools of other denominations are absorbing material belonging to our own, and moulding it for themselves. With a false liberality, as weak and treacherous as false, we are leaving the education of our youth to the ever-ready care of others, who baptize them into their own faith and draw them into their own folds. An Institute of our own, therefore, is a necessary measure of self-consistency and defence. If it has the appearance, or even the reality of sectarianism, it is because the aggressive policy of all others admits of no alternative. There is, in the nature of the case, no neutral or undenominational ground we can occupy if we would. While all denominations of Christians are acting aggressively upon each other, and an infidel world is seeking whom it may devour, we must either secure ourselves by our own walls and act under our own banners, or we must naturally become a common prey to all. Liberal or illiberal, a necessity is laid upon us. We are shut up to the alternative of educating our children in our own schools for Presbyterianism, or of seeing them educated for a different faith, or for absolute infidelity. What gathers not with us, scatters abroad.

Fidelity, therefore, to our own peculiar mission as a church; to the faith written on our hearts by the Spirit of God; to the wise policy of our fathers, which has made us what we are; fidelity to our children, who demand from us that careful discipline of mind which alone can make them adequate to the trust we bequeath them; fidelity to the stern injunctions and conditions of the covenant of our hopes, that we teach this gospel as we believe it, diligently to our children, not only on the Sabbath, but whenever and wherever they go out and come in, writing it upon the door-posts of our houses and our gates, baptizing with it all their attainments and powers; sincerity in our professions, confidence in our efforts and prayers, reverence and love for that pure gospel we are set to witness and defend—all require that we rally around the standards and institutions of our own Church, or that we be subjected to the reproach of weakness, treachery, and sin.

Believing our Presbyterian Institute eminently adapted to carry into effect these principles, the Board would congratulate the Presbytery upon the favourable auspices with which the school will enter upon another year. They are happy to declare their conviction, formed upon careful and candid inquiry, that in faithfulness and efficiency of instruction, it is inferior to no other school in this city. The Trustees co-operating with the distinguished gentleman they are so fortunate as to retain at the head of the Institute, are determined to spare no effort or expense to secure its excellence; so that it shall no longer ask, but, by its own inherent merits, command, the confidence and praise of all the churches. In executing this resolve, the Presbytery may apprehend no application for aid other than their counsel, their countenance, and prayers.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, May 12, 1852.

China.—Letters have been received from Canton, February 26; Shanghai, February 16; Ningpo, February 4. One of the church members at Ningpo, who had fallen under censure some mouths ago, expressed penitence for his sin. Several persons were applicants for baptism, one of them the wife of a member of the church. Of others, Mr. Quarterman writes, "The three now in the school, who desire to be baptized, give us much anxiety. They seem to be sincere; they are enlightened in a good degree; they are blameless in their deportment, and diligent in their studies. But they may be looking out for situations in after-life, thinking that we may give them employment; and such is the danger on this point, that we fear deception practised on themselves and on us." At Shanghai, the missionaries had succeeded in purchasing an eligible lot, outside of the South gate, at a moderate price.

Siam.—A letter has reached us from the Rev. S. Mattoon, of February 12. The affairs of the Mission were in their usual state. Mr. Mattoon says, "The government still continues friendly. The king has lately broken through all former custom, and sent for the 'foreign doctors' to treat one of his wives."

India.—Letters have been received from Allahabad, March 3; Lodiana, February 21; Saharunpur, March 6; Lahor, March 1. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, and Mr. and Mrs. Ullman had passed Allahabad, on their way to their stations at Mynpoorie and Futtehgurh. Mr. Forman writes thus from Lahor: "Our work here goes on as usual. I preach every afternoon at one of the gates of the city, or in the bazár, teach five hours in the school, and give away many books. But still no fruit is gathered. If I could only see a blade, it would be encouraging." A public examination of the school at that station was held near the end of February, which gave much satisfaction to the European and native gentlemen present.

Missionaries to China.—The Rev. John Byers and his wife, and Miss Juana M. Knight, sailed in the ship Nestorian for Shanghai, from this port on the 29th of April. Mr. Byers was lately ordained by the Presbytery of New York, and is appointed to the Shanghai Mission. Miss Knight will be associated with her sister, Mrs. Henry V. Rankin, in the instruction of the female boarding-school at Ningpo. We would ask for these missionary friends the prayers of our readers.

Close of the Financial Year.—We have room but for a few lines on a subject of deep practical moment. Our readers will be grateful to learn, that notwithstanding the heavy pecuniary pressure during a part of the year on the business movements of the country, and notwithstanding the urgent claims of other important objects, the income of the Board for the year ending on the 1st of May was larger than during any former year. Upwards of $8000 from the members of our churches, were contributed over the donations from the same source during the preceding year. A less amount was received from some quarters outside of the churches, but the whole amount is greater. We give thanks to God for this. We give thanks to him also for the general encouragement attending the Missions. No former Report of the Board, we think, will be found to contain more marked proofs of the blessing of the Most High upon the missionary work of his people.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. H. V. RANKIN.

Visit to a Budhist Temple—a Devotee.

Oct. 17th.—Messrs. Syle, Quarterman, and myself have just returned from a pleasant trip to Téen-tong, a much visited Budhist temple, several miles from Ningpo. We went by canal and chairs, having left Ningpo last night. This famous place has been so often described that I will not now attempt it. The priests connected with it are numerous, and the ground and buildings spacious, though there is no marked splendour. The chief attraction is in the scenery, which there and at various points on the road is very beautiful. The idols, as usual, are prodigious in size, and the bell which they use is very large, the largest indeed that I have seen in China. It is beaten on the outside by a wooden mallet. With one of the senior priests, we visited the cave, where dwelt the oldest of the band, who for some years has given himself up to abstraction. He finds it sometimes necessary, however, to attend to his bodily wants, and to-day he was not within, having gone up to Ningpo for food. In a dark fissure in the damp rock, his straw bed was laid, and a little below was his fireplace for cooking. Near by was a small straw and bamboo house, in which was his devotional straw chair, and around the coarse walls were hung Budhistic pictures. Here this poor devotee to a most forbidding error, sits alone, day after day, looking forward to some mysterious absorption of essence.

Our guide told us about a species of baptism by fire, which the neophite receives upon his forehead when admitted into the regular priesthood; and which he informed us would take place upon the first day of the twelfth month. It is a remarkable and general fact that the priests of this error are made so, either from being brought there in childhood, or because they are too poor to do any thing else.

In returning this afternoon, we went out of our way to visit "the lakes," another place of interest. We had only time, however, to ascend the highest hill in the vicinity, from which we had in prospect an extended landscape. The whole Ningpo plain was laid open before us, extending in two directions about thirty miles, covered in with the second crop of rice, and thoroughly interlaced by numerous canals. This plain is very fertile and populous, but here, alas, is Satan's seat, and this multitudinous people are his willing slaves!

Translation of the Scriptures into the Colloquial.

October 31st.—Our own mission, together with the members of the Church Mission, met in my study this afternoon, according to previous agreement, to deliberate upon the translation of the word into the colloquial language of this people. After prayer and some discussion, those who were present formed themselves into a committee for this purpose, and agreed to meet every Thursday for translation, at which times a draft previously prepared by a subcommittee of two, representing each mission, is to form the basis of our work. Every month, what has been gone over is to be revised. The gospel by Luke was the portion of Scripture agreed upon to commence with. I hail this work with peculiar joy. As yet almost nothing has been done for the people in their own tongue, and as so few can read the Chinese characters understandingly, the mass are shut out from any portion of Scripture in their own familiar language. In preaching in our chapels or elsewhere, in quoting from the word of God, we have been obliged to use extemporaneous translations, in which perhaps no two men would present exactly the same rendering; now we shall have a version which we all—Presbyterians and Episcopalians—can and will constantly use. The children in our schools also will necessarily derive benefit from a common version of the Scriptures, and our native church-members having the truth in their own language, cannot fail, through the blessing of God, to grow thereby. The experience and knowledge of some among us well qualify them for taking a prominent part in this work, and to the youngest the exercise will be necessarily profitable.

Marriage of a Pupil.

Nov. 4th.—A-jing was married this afternoon to the young man to whom she has been betrothed for several years. The ceremony was performed in the English and Chinese chapel by the pastor of the church. According to their custom, one of the women, who are always employed in this business, has been engaged most of the morning in preparing her "as a bride adorned for her husband." Many of the garments and ornaments which had been hired by her friends, and used upon this occasion, strikingly called to mind scriptural descriptions. With two of her school-mates, we accompanied her to her new home, and she parted from us with many tears. From Christian friends, this young follower of the Saviour, has, only a month after being connected with the church, gone among heathen relatives, where she will be exposed to such temptations and trials as one at home can hardly conceive. We can only commit her into the hands of the great Shepherd, whose care of his own flock is far greater than ours can be. It is a great mercy to her, that God inclined the hearts of her husband and other friends so cordially to consent to Christian rites at her marriage, for she has thus been spared the necessity of resisting them in their otherwise natural endeavours to have her bow in idolatrous worship. For the first few months she will, according to Chinese custom, be much confined at home, but we hope ere long to have her nearer to us, and more directly under our influence.

Meeting of Presbytery—Death of Missionaries.

Nov. 6th.—The Ningpo Presbytery met yesterday, and was opened with a sermon, from John xx. 21, on the "encouragements of the missionary in his work." Mr. Way was elected Moderator. This evening the narrative of religion was read, which presented a more favourable aspect than at the regular meeting a year ago. Messrs. S. and W. Martin were received from the New Albany Presbytery.

Dec. 1st.—We recently heard that Mr. Richards of the American Board for Fuh-Chaw, died at sea on his way home; and yesterday we learned that Mrs. Shuck of the S. Bap. Convention was called away ten days since, after a short illness. She left a very pleasing remembrance among us, after her visit to Ningpo last summer, but we then little realized that we should see her no more. She herself, however, had anticipated the sad event, and with a sweet confidence in her Redeemer, breathed her last, enjoying to the latest moment that blessed legacy of our Saviour to his disciples, a peace which the world can neither give nor take away.

The British brig of war "Contest" came up the river yesterday. She will remain here a few days, and then proceed to the Loo-Choo Islands, to look after Dr. Bettleheim, the indefatigable missionary of whom I wrote more fully a year ago. As a British subject, that government is bound to protect him, and it is to be hoped that the frequent visits necessarily made to that jealous people will tend to open not only those islands, but Japan also, with which they are closely connected.

The people seem greatly alarmed just now, in consequence of a supposed piratical fleet outside, which has been laying tribute on several islands and towns along the coast, and which is now lying not many miles south of Chinhae. Their fleet are called "grasshopper vessels," from their green colour and their imagined resemblance in form to those insects. They are known to be well armed, and manned by a set of men of more daring and skill than most of their countrymen. Application has been made by the Chinese officers for foreign vessels to protect them, and they hail the arrival of the "Contest" with much satisfaction. Their own fleet does not amount to much.

Baptism of Native Converts—Mercy Drops.

Dec. 28th.—Our little church has been increased to-day in numbers, by the baptism at Chinese service this afternoon of two young females, Paou-shen and A-san. The former I have already referred to as the oldest member of the female boarding school belonging to our mission. Ever since the attack of cholera which she experienced three months ago, she has been earnestly desirous to be received into church fellowship, and her every-day conduct has shown the sincerity of her desire. In the female school report, fifteen months ago, I alluded to her and her fellow disciple A-jing, as giving great promise, and now God has graciously permitted us to see them both the professed followers of the Lamb. The case of A-san is also highly interesting. She is an orphan girl under Miss Aldersey's charge. Her father was accidentally killed during the war, at Shanghai, and her mother, who was at that time poor and very sick, gave her into the charge of the lamented John R. Morrison, then one of the principal interpreters, and whom she saw endeavouring to relieve the distresses of those who had been called to suffer at that fearful time. He immediately received the trust, and had her taken care of by one of the Hindú followers whose wife was with him at Chusan. When Miss Aldersey reached that island

A-san was given into her charge by Mr. Morrison, and has ever since been in her school. She was at that time about eight years old. During the years that have intervened she has made good progress, both in Chinese and English studies, and has for some time taken part in instructing the younger girls. But from the very first she has shown an unhappy temper, and much impatience under the influence of Christian instruction. She has till recently listened to all appeals to her conscience with the utmost stoicism. Indeed, she has generally preferred the society of the servants to that of her teachers and more serious companions. Her case has thus for seven years been a very unfavourable one; but at last the Holy Spirit touched her unfeeling heart. Her conduct has, in every respect, greatly changed, so as to excite remark among the little children, and a few weeks since she applied for baptism. She appears to be very decided, and we can but hope that she will make a truly useful Christian.

A few mercy-drops are thus descending upon this part of the garden of our Lord. And how refreshing to Christian missionaries thus to see the members of our families sitting with us at the communion table of our Saviour! We hope and pray for more abundant blessings. Another school girl of about eleven years old interests us much. In conversing with her to-night she answered very freely and with much intelligence. Her heart seems very tender. This, with her continued habit for some time past of secret prayer, and her studious and correct deportment, are hopeful signs in one so young as she is. She has no mother, nor brother, nor sister, and her father is a bad man. Mrs. Rankin has a Sabbath class of four women, all of whom are attentive, and one or two of them apparently interested in divine truth. A-jing is now with us upon a visit of eight or ten days, that she may enjoy with us our Sabbath and communion privileges. Her character seems not to have been at all affected unfavourably by the trial she has as yet been called to undergo among heathen friends. We have recently employed her aunt, who has most influence with her, and who is a highly sensible woman, as matron in the school, in place of the one who died.

Monday, Jan. 5th, 1852.—This day, according to usual custom, has been observed by all the missionaries with fasting and prayer. Rev. Mr. Goddard, of the Baptist mission, preached an excellent discourse in the morning from the text "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." In the afternoon we observed the usual monthly concert.

Jan. 8th.—The cold has been intense for the last day or two, and several persons have been seen frozen to death. I have never known the ice thicker in China; the thermometer has been lower than any year since 1845.

Proficiency in the Colloquial Dialect.

Mr. Russell told me an exceedingly interesting circumstance of one of their church members, who is a tailor by trade. He has for a few months, after a very little instruction, been employing his leisure moments in learning to read and write the Ningpo colloquial, in the Romanized system lately introduced among us, and he has already attained to such proficiency as to take down, with a good deal of minuteness of detail, the sermons that he hears, which he afterwards carefully writes out. In conversing with Mr. Russell's teacher, he urged upon him the merits of the Christian religion, and then referred to his own blessed experience in about the following language: "I was blind before, but now I see. I was blindly following false objects of worship, but now I know the true God and have faith through Christ. Before I could not read, but now I can read the word of God and write understandingly." Those of us who have been teaching an alphabetic system of writing the Ningpo spoken dialect, are greatly encouraged by such facts as this. More than a hundred persons can already read through this medium, some of whom knew nothing of letters a few months since, and several teachers are being employed part of the time in translating books into their own colloquial with Roman letters, whose power they in a few days learn to use. The resources of the colloquial language are thus being drawn out, and we greatly hope in the permanent good which will be effected. At Amoy the brethren are equally interested and hopeful in the success of teaching the people under their influence, in their own spoken dialect through their system of Romanized colloquial, and have likewise printed books. Almost all the printing that has been done at this port, has been from blocks on which the Roman letters have been cut by the Chinese with admirable skill. They bear a very fair comparison with work executed at the press. Letters of the size of the great primer are cut in blocks at the rate of eighteen for one cent, and before long they will be much cheaper. The cost of paper and printing is also comparatively small. From these blocks a thousand good impressions could be stricken off, and for present use this is quite enough; though we hope the time is not far distant when, through this or some modified form of writing, the spoken language of the Ningpo people will extensively prevail. It cannot fail to break asunder many of the chains imposed by old established superstitions. Not till the mass of the people begin to read understandingly the truth, will knowledge extensively prevail. But past experience, as well as the nature of their written language, convince me that this can never be done by these hieroglyphics, splendid though the system be, but that it must be done through an alphabetic language.

SHANGHAI MISSION.

SHANGHAI AS A MISSIONARY STATION.

The Rev. J. K. Wight thus presents the growing importance of Shanghai as a missionary post. This city appears likely soon to become the New York of China:

The population of Shanghai, at the opening of the port, was not usually estimated at more than 200,000. Its chief importance consists in its position as a commercial city. In this respect it seems destined to become the chief city in the empire. The value of the exports has been constantly increasing, and in 1850 nearly equalled Canton, and will probably exceed it this. The value exported in British ships alone, last year, was over eight millions of dollars. It also holds an important position as the connecting point with the opposite coast of America. Formerly we looked westward to the home of civilization and Christianity. Now, we look east, and our own native land appears within thirty days' sail. Gladly do we welcome the approach, as we hope it will bring the truth to bear more brightly and powerfully on this benighted land.

The importance of Shanghai consists, however, not so much in its convenience of approach outwardly, as its connexion with the interior, and especially with the tea and silk districts. From these districts the Chinese come in all directions to Shanghai. Many of them remain here several months, and then return. Others, attracted by the advantages for business which the place affords, take up their abode permanently. It is difficult to estimate the exact number of those here from other places, but some of the intelligent Chinese estimate the number at 100,000, or one-third of the whole population, which they state at 300,000. Others make the estimate much higher, believing that more than one-half are from other places. The facility for spreading abroad the knowledge of the truth thus afforded cannot be easily over-estimated. The more earnestly and faithfully the gospel is preached here, the more wide-spread will be its effects throughout the empire. Morally, though not literally, this will be like a city set on a hill. The avenues which serve for leading up hither, will also serve for conducting forth the truth. And as the strangers which were in Jerusalem at Pentecostal times could relate, when they returned, what they saw of the wonderful works of God, so may we hope that those who gather here, shall, if the Lord bless us with times of refreshing, be also able to return to their countrymen, bearing the news of salvation.

But there is not merely a wide and distant field which we can operate on; there is a large one close at hand. We are here in the midst of a fertile valley, teeming not merely with towns and villages, but with large cities. These cities might to some extent be visited now, notwithstanding the greater restrictions under which we lie since the commencement of the present Emperor's reign; and all of them, so far as accessible from here, ought to be considered as embraced within our missionary field. And had we well-qualified native evangelists, they could go without restraint to preach the gospel in ten or fifteen large cities, where this dialect is spoken with but very slight alterations. Suchau, situated on the Grand Canal, whose population is estimated at two* millions, and is reckoned among the first cities of the empire, in point of wealth, population, and literature, is only distant eighty or ninety miles.

Such, in a few words, is the field that lies before us.

* See Williams' Mid. Kingdom, I. p. 84.

What has been done towards occupying Shanghai as a Missionary Station.

It is now nine years since this port was opened. Missionary operations were commenced soon after. At present there are twenty-one† male missionaries, including three from other ports, who are engaged on the committee for translating the Old Testament. They are all able, however, to do more or less other missionary work. Five chapels have been built within the city walls, besides which there are four or five other stated places for preaching. There are three boarding-schools for boys, containing in all about seventy-five pupils. There are also three for girls, but only one of them fully in operation—pupils in all between thirty and forty. There are also four or five day schools—none of them large—less than twenty in each. These are the principal means in use, and all in the infancy of their operations. The number of converts is still very small—of whom nearly one-half are natives of another province, (Fohkeen.) I have not the means of ascertaining the exact number of all the converts, but they do not exceed thirty. There is one native evangelist.

These are some of the tangible results. There are others which cannot be expressed by numbers, but which in the present stage of missionary operations ought to be considered as more important. We cannot expect fruit before the land is cleared, and the seed planted; so men, imbued with superstitions, and bowing down to idols, must first be convinced of the folly of such a system, and be instructed to some extent in the truths of a better, before we can expect them to turn to God with full purpose of heart. Something has been done in this preparatory work. Many know of Jesus whom we preach. Many will acknowledge, at least outwardly, that their idols are of no avail; but still few among the mass understand the real nature of the Christian system. To be saved by trusting to the merits of another, is so foreign to their apprehension that they count it foolishness. It is only by dwelling often on the fact, and by frequent repetition and explanation, that the gospel method is understood even intellectually. To communicate this truth is our work, aided, as we trust, by the Holy Spirit, who alone can effectually remove the darkness, and cause the light of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord to shine into their hearts.

It will readily be seen that there remains much to be done. If we have crossed the Jordan in our efforts for this people, the whole land still remains before us, to be possessed. No Jericho has yet fallen, and very few of the Lord's people have come to shout around its walls. Where are they who should bear the ark of the covenant? Verily, in these last days, the Church has either abundant faith or little zeal—faith to suppose the Lord will save by few and not by many, or little zeal to come forth and assist in this great work.

But how many missionaries does the Church at home suppose are needed? To supply China with ministers in the same proportion to her population as at present exists in the United States, would require at least 370,000. But it is estimated that in our own country there are only 25,000. So that if we would, we could not supply this destitution. But it is not my object to set up an amount of destitution, which it is clearly impossible for the Church, by any effort, at once to supply. But there is a work which we feel that the Church is called at once to enter upon, and that is to preach the gospel to those who are at present accessible, and to prepare the way for more extensive inroads upon the kingdom of darkness. We do moreover consider it necessary to prepare for a great work, embracing mighty results. We wish to lay our plans with the obligation resting upon us to preach the gospel to every creature; and with the distinct expectation that the millions of this heathen Empire are all to be made acquainted with the truth, and that this people is to become a Christian people, in the same sense with any other Christian nation. We ought then to lay our plans not merely with reference to the city in which we dwell, but with reference to the whole Empire—we ought to lay them not only for the present, and what the present opens to our view, but for the future, for the wide door which I suppose every Christian believes will one day be opened to us, by the great Head of the Church, who has all power in his hands, and will overrule all things for the good of his people and the glory of his name.

Different departments of the Missionary work at Shanghai.

In order to prepare for the work which at present lies before us, let us look at some of the different departments of missionary labour which ought to be carried forward.

1st. Preaching. For this work we have constant opportunities and a wide field. The simplest truths of Christianity are as yet understood but by few. The present missionary force are only able in their ministrations to reach a small portion even of the inhabitants of this city. And were there men, immediate attention might be given without any restriction from the officers, to preaching in large villages in the vicinity.

2d. Connected with preaching, there ought to be more or less visiting from house to house. Few females, and scarcely any of the better class, ever come to our places of worship. We need also to visit families, in order to secure any regular and continued attendance upon the preaching of the word.

3d. Preparation and distribution of books. In order to prepare suitable books, no little study of this difficult language is required. A missionary cannot sit down upon his arrival, and write a tract, as he might do in his native tongue. It must be remembered also, that there is much to be done in this department. No Christian or scientific literature exists. It all remains to be prepared—books for schools—books for the family—books which will elevate and instruct the nation.

4th. Another department of missionary labour is education, we need this, (1st.) Because we wish to begin early to root out error and superstition, and to plant instead the principles of truth and righteousness, and (2d.) because we wish to train up those who will become teachers of others. The more rapid and permanent will be our conquests, the sooner we are prepared to bring a well qualified native agency to assist in carrying the gospel to their countrymen. We shall need one day a vast army of labourers; and God in his providence will have ready work for them to do, long before the Church has them ready to go forth. And we know that even now they might be widely and usefully employed. Roman Catholics have them, and they go all over the Empire. We are, it is true, restricted by treaty, which the European Romanists do not respect; but there is no treaty to limit the free declaration of the gospel by native converts. In fact, the limit which restrains us, calls upon us more earnestly to train up those who shall not be affected by it.

It will, I trust, be acknowledged that no department of labour here mentioned can properly be neglected, and that to carry them on efficiently will require the labour of many hands. Education alone, in its different departments, needs the entire care and attention of two or three; and no one at home would think of entrusting a course of instruction to so few—and then we must not neglect other departments of labour.

Work enough to be done—The grace of God needed.

Let the Church then know that there is work enough to be done. Most earnestly ought we to prepare for a contest, in which we cannot rest till this whole empire is brought into subjection to him whose right it is to reign. We need not excuse ourselves because so small a portion of the empire is yet open. We have room enough in the space which we already possess to reach the remotest portions of it. Let the truth be firmly planted here, and the leaven of its influence will speedily pass beyond the limits to which we are restricted. We know too, from the history of God's providential dealings, and also from his promises, that he passes on before his people preparing for them a way, and we feel assured that efforts made with ultimate reference to the establishment of his kingdom throughout the whole of this empire will be more than seconded by his overruling providence and the added influences of his Holy Spirit.

We have only to express our earnest desire, in conclusion, that God would, of his infinite grace, put it into the hearts of his people to labour with the same zeal and liberality which characterize the worldly plans of the present age; or rather that, taking courage from the manifest workings of God's providence in preparing a highway among the Gentiles, by bringing Protestant nations into closer proximity to heathen, that they would enter upon the course thus marked out, with the zeal which such a cause, and such an object, and such a leader, and I may add, such leading providences, demand, assured that he who points out the way will abundantly bless their efforts.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. J. M. JAMIESON.

Another rainy night and its discomfort—Government bungalows.

January 10*th.*—About 8 o'clock last night, a heavy rain commenced, which continued the whole night. Our sleeping tents were completely soaked, and the ground underneath our beds flooded. I had an embankment of earth thrown up all around the tent, but it soon gave way to the violence of the water. The wind caused our little canvass houses to flap so much against, and over our beds, that they became quite wet. Happily for us, we were encamped near a staging bungalow; in this we took shelter as soon as it was light enough to move; and here we shall have to remain until the weather clears up. These bungalows are erected by the British Government, for the accommodation of European travellers. They are found on all the high roads, about sixteen miles apart. They usually contain two large rooms, and four small ones—are well built and comfortable. To each bungalow are attached a cook, a water-carrier, and sweeper. The former supplies the traveller with curry and rice, wheaten cakes, and tea, at his own prices. For the use of the bungalow alone, the travellers pay one rupee each, for every twenty-four hours, or any part of that time. This is carried to the credit of Government. The rain has continued to pour down so hard all day, we have not been able to do any missionary work. All our children have taken bad colds, in consequence of the wetting we got last night, and some of them are quite ill. I have spent the most of the day in reading the life of the celebrated Fletcher. He was a burning and shining light in his day. Oh for more of his zeal and love!

A sermon preached, giving rise to a discussion with Mohammedans.

January 11*th.*—The weather is still unsettled, but has been favourable the most of the day. Spent from 11 to 2 o'clock in the bazár. Preached from Jer. xvii. 9, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it." With the exception of a few interruptions, I was heard attentively throughout my discourse, which lasted nearly an hour.

The Mohammedan quotes a New Testament prediction—A powerful argument!

But, said he, there is still a prophecy concerning our prophet, in the fourteenth chapter of John, sixteenth verse—"He shall give you another Comforter," and this had reference to Mohammed. That interpretation, I said, could easily be shown to be incorrect. To whom did our Saviour make that promise? It was to his own disciples; to Christians. Now, I ask, in what sense Mohammed ever comforted Christians? He and his followers persecuted them unto death, and they are yet, in Mohammedan countries, comforted with the name of dog. Besides, the Comforter was to remain with the followers of Christ always. But where is Mohammed?

Another man then presented himself, and vociferated that Mohammed had split the moon, and that the dark spots on its disk were thus caused, to be a standing evidence of his power. The truth of this I denied, and said the only authority he had for that assertion was an obscure sentence in the Korán, viz: a'goi wah ghori, amphat goya chóud, (the hour came, and the moon was split). This probably refers to the end of the world, and was borrowed from our Saviour's description of the last day.

"Every man's religion is best for him;"—how answered.

After the discussion was ended, I went to another part of the bazár, and preached to a congregation of Hindus, from a part of the sixth chapter of Matthew, and gave away some books in Hindu, and Panjábi. A Brahman said, "Your religion is very good, but it is not for us, we have one of our own. All religions were given by God, and are equally true. Every man, however, thinks his own the best, just as every person prefers his own country. A man who was born in a cold country, likes the cold; and he who is a native of a warmer climate, likes the heat. So every man's religion is best for him." I told him his reasoning was not sound. God had furnished the globe with various climates for wise purposes, but had only given one religion to man, as a king gives one law for all his subjects. It was impossible that two religions, so contrary as the Hindu and Christian, could both be true; one of them must be false. A counterfeit rupee cannot be genuine. There are false religions in the world, just as there is spurious coin. As, therefore, you try your rupees so carefully to avoid imposition, examine your religion with the same care. Falsity can as easily be detected in religion, as alloy in silver or gold. For instance, your Shastras state that Ceylon is inhabited by demons—that the houses are all built of gold, and that no man can approach the island; I have been there myself, and seen with my own eyes the falsehood of this statement. Ceylon is inhabited by Hindus and Mohammedans, and is under British rule. In this your Shastras are wrong; so they are with regard to the seven oceans of milk, ghee, &c., and Mount Samera, which is said to be many thousands of miles higher than the whole diameter of the earth is in length. Although the earth has been circumnavigated again and again, and every country traversed, no man has ever discovered these wonders. If, then, your Shastras are so mistaken in temporal things, how can they be correct in spiritual? But here is a religion—the religion of the Bible—of the true God, which is truth itself. It fears no investigation, and asks no easy credence. Examine it for yourself. It points out the only way of salvation, through Christ the Saviour of the world.

The Brahman takes Pantheistic ground;—how driven from it.

Brahman—Where is Christ?

Missionary—At the right hand of God in the heavens.

Brahman—No. God is every where. He is in you, in me, in water, and in every thing he has made. It is he who speaks through our mouths—thinks in our hearts. When we do good or evil, it is God who does it.

Pulling out my watch, I held it to the Brahman, and asked him if he heard its tick. Was the watchmaker in the watch, and speaking through it? No, he was beyond the seas, if not beyond the grave. He gave to the watch the power of moving and ticking, and sent it off. So God has endowed man with the faculty of thought, and speech, and left him to act for himself, but still holds him accountable. He sits enthroned in the heavens, and beholdeth all things. Your sight extends to the opposite side of the street, and your hearing to those within a few yards of you—they are finite, but extend these senses to infinity, and you would see and hear all things. Thus God is infinite in all his attributes, and although in heaven, is, in this sense, omnipresent and omniscient. Besides, your theory would make God the author of sin, and man would be a mere machine. It would be God who would utter falsehood, speak deceit and profanity. It would be God who would become angry, and quarrel with himself in the shape of another man. But such an idea is too absurd and wicked to contemplate. Give up such grovelling thoughts of God, and worship him in spirit and in truth.

Sabbath services—Mohammedanism has no Saviour—How books are sometimes treated.

Sabbath, 12*th.*—Owing to our tents still being wet, the weather unsettled, and our children unwell, we thought it best to remain in this place until Monday. Went out to preach as usual. Had a large audience. Preached from John iii. 16—"For God so loved the world," &c. Some Mohammedans objected to Christ being called the Son of God—that God was holy and had no son. I explained to him what was meant by the term, Son of God—that it must be understood spiritually and not carnally. Referred to Christ's supernatural birth as recorded in the first chapter of Matthew. The same old story was repeated about the Bible being abrogated by the Koran. I inquired which of the ten commandments, or of the precepts of the gospel, were abrogated, and where such a statement was written—certainly not in the Korán. Showed the necessity of a Saviour, such as Jesus, for sinners—one who was God and man, the friend of both. Mohammedanism had no Saviour, no perfect example of righteousness. Mohammed was a bad man, and left a bad example for his followers, the effect of which was seen in all Mohammedan countries. There falsehood, treachery, robberies and murders every where prevailed; all of which showed their religion was a bad one.

A few books were given away; we distribute sparingly, because we are certain many of them are destroyed. I used to hear in America, that Mohammedans never destroyed a bit of printed paper, lest the name of God should be on it. I am sorry to say they are not so conscientious in India. I have known them to burn our Scriptures, and to make kites of them. But both they and the Hindus, when they do not preserve them, usually sell them to grocers and apothecaries for wrapping paper, at about four cents a pound.

A noisy Cashmerian—The Argument from Fate—Almost a Mob.

13*th.*—Still detained by the rain. Preached in the bazár to a large crowd. Afterwards while Lalla was reading aloud a chapter in the Hindú Testament, a noisy Cashmerian pushed himself forward, and called out there was no God but one, and Mohammed was his prophet—Islamism had spread over the whole world, and a follower of the prophet had slain at one time all the Christians except one woman! and that from her the remnant of Christians, who now inhabit a small island in the ocean, have sprung. He then turned to Lalla, and asked him why he had become a Nasóra (Nazarene). He replied by asking him why Mohammed left the religion and idols of his fathers, and became a Musalmán. By God's command, was the reply. So, said Lalla, I became a Christian by God's command, and now invite you to follow me. No, said he, you became a kafir because it was written in your fate that you would be destroyed. I inquired what he meant by fate. He replied, That which God has written on every man's forehead. God wrote all bad actions, as well as good, in every man's fate, otherwise, how would hell be filled? To this I said in reply, Did God make hell merely to fill it with his creatures? Does any government build jails and workhouses for the purpose of filling them with its subjects, and then command them to transgress its laws in order to condemn them? If God has written in every man's fate that he must do evil, why does he forbid evil in his word? You say God is the author both of his word and fate, but they are contradictory. One commands to do evil, the other forbids it. Which shall we obey? No, my friend, we have nothing to do with fate; our duty is to obey the revealed word of God. That is sufficient for us to know. This bothered our vociferous friend, but he became more noisy, and stirred up the people against us, until they, with one voice, cried out, "Beat the kafirs, beat the kafirs." A rush was made towards us, but when they saw us stand our ground, they made a halt. I then read to them the 10th, 11th, and 12th verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew. This firmness quelled the tumult, and we passed away untouched.

Inconveniences—An African—The plea of good works.

14*th.*—Sent off our sleeping tents and bedding this morning, six miles to Chanál Ghár, and intended to follow them in the evening, but have not been able to leave on account of the rain. We shall, therefore, have to sleep without our beds to-night, some on the floor, and some on bare bedsteads. There are chairs, tables, and bedsteads belonging to the bungalow, but no beds. Have been confined to the house all day by the inclemency of the weather. It is very unusual to have so much rain at this season of the year, but we must not complain. He who controls the seasons does all things well.

15*th.*—Sent a man this morning to bring back our tents and beds, but owing to the swollen state of a small stream between us and them, the cart was not able to return. He, however, procured a camel, on which he brought our beds. He crossed himself on a raft made of a bedstead placed on inverted earthen jars. The rain continues to pour down. Spent the most of the day in reading brother J. C. Rankin's tract on the Mohammedan controversy. It contains a great deal of matter ready for discussion, and is one of the best we have for distribution among the Mohammedans.

16*th.*—The rain has ceased, but as our tents are all soaked with water, and the roads flooded, we have been obliged to halt to-day also. Preached in the bazár; had a large number of hearers, among whom was an African, as woolly-headed and as black as any of his brethren in America. I felt towards him as a countryman, and addressed myself to him, but was disappointed when I found he was a bigotted Musalmán. There are very few of these sons of Ham in India, and they are generally eunuchs in the service of wealthy Mohammedans. My subject was the necessity of a Saviour. One man said he had done many meritorious works, by which he hoped to be saved; that as a washerman cleanses defiled clothes, so merit purifies the soul. I replied, we are all unprofitable servants. A thief who steals but one rupee cannot escape from the disgrace of it by paying any amount of money; he must pay the penalty of the law. So with a sinner, he cannot purchase the pardon of one of his sins; he must have a sufficient Saviour, or be lost. Such a Saviour is Christ.

Another man replied, God had made three religions, by which all would be saved, viz: the Hindu, Mohammedan and Christian. Each sect would be saved in its own religion. This error I exposed as before.

Ruins of an extensive Inn—Interview with three wandering "saints"—Hindu villages—Return to Amballa.

Near where we preached, there was a large brick Sarai (inn), in a very dilapidated state. Its walls are some forty feet high, and eight or ten in thickness. On each corner is a tower, more than twice the height of the walls, and sufficiently large to hold a hundred men; battlements extend around all the walls. The gate-ways resemble those of a strong fort. The whole covers an area of about twenty acres, and was intended to give shelter to some thousands of men at once. This Sarai is one of many which the celebrated Ahkbár, emperor of Delhi, had built for his troops, while marching between his capital and Lahor. The distance is about two hundred and fifty miles, and there was formerly one every ten miles. Many of them, time has levelled to the earth, and some of them, like the glory of their builder, have disappeared altogether. He also erected conical pillars every two miles, some thirty feet high, and ten at the base, of solid masonry, and, it is said, rows of splendid trees lined both sides of the road, the whole distance.

17*th.*—Went out with Lalla, two miles, to visit a village, and found nearly all the inhabitants assembled to hear the wonderful stories of three wandering ascetics. I inquired of them who they were. One of them replied we are saut (saints), or pure-hearted. I told them I had been in search of purity of heart for years, but had searched in vain, and would therefore be glad if they would tell me how they attained to it. The same man replied, We were born such. From this I dissented, and told him we were all born in sin, and all sin in thought, word, and deed. He confessed he did sometimes sin, but, said he, who can help it in the kul jug? (dark age). Lalla read a chapter in Hindi, and explained it to them, after which I preached to them Paul's sermon to the Athenians on Mars' Hill. They all confessed that idolatry was absurd, but said it was their religion, "and we cannot forsake it." The villagers all over India are chiefly the original inhabitants and Hindus. They are a simple-minded people, and much more likely to become Christians sooner than bigotted, depraved, residents of cities and towns.

It was a pleasure to preach to our audience to-day, compared with preaching to the noisy people of Shahbád. But God by his grace can overcome the most rebellious, as easily as the simple-minded.

On our return to the bungalow, we found our sleeping tent-cart had come back from Chanál Ghor. The road, and rivers, were reported to be quite impassable, in the direction we intended to go, and that they would not be passable for many days, in consequence of so much rain. We have therefore concluded to make our way back to-morrow.

18*th.*—Returned to our station this afternoon, and found our friends all well, and everything as usual. May the Lord bless the seed sown in Shahbád, and by the way-side.

For the Home and Foreign Record.

ON MISSION SCHOOLS IN INDIA.

BY THE REV. W. H. MACAULEY.

In order to understand the character and influence of our mission schools in India, it is necessary to say a few words concerning the state of learning among the people of that land. In the first place, it is known to most of your readers that a large portion of India is subject to the Government of the English in that country. This makes it an object of the highest importance, to every aspiring youth, to acquire a thorough knowledge of the English language, that he may secure those offices of Government, which are open to the most successful candidate—and there are also many young men, who are looking forward to an education in their own languages, as a means of support, or for the purpose of increasing their respectability. These considerations bring into the field a large number of young men, who are anxious to acquire a good education; and as they find, by experience, that the Mission Schools are usually more faithfully taught than any other schools in the country, multitudes attend these schools, even in those cases where, at the commencement, there is a strong prejudice against the Christian religion.—In the second place, the state of learning among the natives, and its close connection with their religious systems, give these schools an importance, or afford means for removing error, and planting the seeds of truth, which are seldom possessed by the schools of any other land. For the learning of the Hindus, and to a very considerable extent, that of the Mohammedans also, is taught by professedly inspired books;—and that of the Hindus especially, is so interwoven with their religion, that they must stand or fall together. Let these young men be convinced, that what these professedly inspired books have taught, in science, is false, and they will necessarily reject, as equally false, that which they have taught on the subject of religion. But in making an attack on this point of their citadel, the Missionary does not meet the same strong opposition, or the same amount of prejudice, which he does in approaching their religion itself—he does not array religion against religion, or inspiration against inspiration—he is merely bringing their science to the test of reason—he is directing his forces against an outerwall—but when the victory is here gained, he is placed on an eminence from which his forces will play upon the very heart of the citadel, with the certainty of a complete overthrow. The certainty and ease with which this outerwall is taken, may be seen by a momentary glance at the state of science among them. The Hindus have much correct knowledge in Mathematics, some correct ideas in Astronomy, and much that is deeply interesting in Poetry. But nearly all which their sacred books teach, concerning geography, chemistry, and natural philosophy, and in all of the natural sciences, is false—and much of it is childishly absurd and foolish.

The state of learning among them, with a few exceptions, is nearly what it was with us previous to the time of Lord Bacon. But they have not been blessed with a Bacon to lay down the rules for investigating the laws of the natural world, nor with a Newton to apply those laws to the system of the universe—among their inspired books on science, they have not not found a Novum Organum or a Principia. Nor have the Mohammedans surpassed their neighbours in this respect. For although the Mohammedans, by their intercourse with Bagdad, have introduced much of the Grecian literature into India—it has been too much like the efforts of the schoolmen in Europe—labour without progress—toil, without any permanently good effect. They have not enjoyed the advantages of the telescope, to gaze on a new heavens,—nor the microscope, to see new beauties on the earth around them—nor have they beheld the powers of the galvanic battery, in laying open the elements of which that world is composed. Add to these facts, their method of instructing youth, and we may see something of the field of usefulness made ready for the operation of our Mission Schools. In the Native Schools, every thing is learned by rote, without any effort to cultivate the intellect, or to make the pupil understand the facts and principles taught; and if the inquiring youth should wish to know the reasons for that which is taught, the only reason he obtains from his native instructor—who is usually as ignorant as himself on these points—is a "thus saith the inspired word"—or "thus saith the Profound Philosopher." When, therefore, the Missionary commences his labours—even in the more secular department and elementary branches of his work—his first efforts are directed to making his pupils comprehend the facts and principles taught, and the reasons on which these are based. This leads them to think and reason for themselves, and when they learn from geography that the earth is round, and moves round the sun, and are made to understand these facts, it is easy for them to compare these facts with the statements they have learned from their own sacred books—for although a few Sidantic Philosophers understand the true shape of the earth, the great mass of the people believe the statements of the Márkandá Purán, the Bhágwat and other sacred books, that the earth is an extended plain—that it is surrounded by seven different seas—one of salt water—one of sugar cane juice—one of milk—one of melted butter, &c. &c. They also state that this earth rests upon the head of an elephant, a turtle, or the great serpent—some of them making seven successive steps in this direction also—and teach that there is a mountain in the centre of the earth which reaches the height of 600,000 miles, with trees growing upon it 8,800 miles high, with other similarly absurd statements—and when the mere child carries out this comparison, he readily sees the folly of their system and the correctness of ours. In the high departments of learning, the principles of sound philosophy, without parade, or needless formality, are continually applied, and made the test of every fact which is laid before them. In some of the best schools in the country, the Novum Organum, by Bacon, is made a text book; and where this has not been done, the principles which it has laid down, as well as those of the Principia, by Newton, are the guiding principles in the interpretation of Nature; for some of the best modern works on the Natural Sciences have been translated into their native languages, and are used in our schools. These, with the telescope, the microscope, the galvanic battery, and other instruments of a regular Chemical and Philosophical Apparatus—all lend their aid in teaching true science, and in overturning that which is false; and at the same time, in undermining their system of idolatry. These consequences follow, even where religion is not brought to bear on the subject in the least degree. For in the government schools, where the Bible and the Christian religion are excluded, the youth taught are almost universally convinced of the folly and absurdity of idolatry. But we are sorry to say, this Government system of education is increasing infidelity nearly as fast as it is destroying idolatry—for if you take away a man's idols, and give him nothing better in their place, from the very tendency of the human mind, you leave him to run into the wildest infidelity; and among the Professors in these Government Colleges are too often found those who aid these deluded youth in this downward change. In the Mission schools, this secular department is merely preparatory to the more important work of teaching the Bible; and as these deeply interesting youth are withdrawn from the fall of their decaying temple, they are directed to one which "hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The Bible is made a text book, which is carefully studied from the beginning to the end of the course. And when the pupils read the simple account of the creation, as given by Moses, and the sound maxims of duty to God and man, as they are recorded in the book of Proverbs and other parts of the Old Testament, and as they read the holy aspirations of the sweet singer of Israel, and compare these things with the meagre and often childish records of similar subjects, in their own sacred books, the impression in favour of truth is most happy. And as they open the New Testament, and read the clear and striking illustrations of truth and duty from the teachings of our blessed Saviour himself—as they become acquainted with his spotless life—with the miracles which he wrought,—and especially with his death, and the cause of that death—and compare these facts with that which is related of their own most popular incarnations of their Deity, especially with the lives of Krishnu and Rám, who were vile in the lowest degree—who, according to their books, came not for the purpose of saving, but to destroy sinners—the effect is almost universally, to make them reject idolatry and at the same time to convince them of the truth of Christianity. Many of these young men, who have not broken caste, are exerting a very considerable influence in favour of the Christian religion, by carrying its truths into the midst of their families and among their friends and associates, who have not enjoyed similar advantages; and in many cases they have been known to defend the doctrines and practices of the Christian religion, with the most happy consequences; and where God's Spirit breathes upon them, and changes their hearts, they make our most efficient and energetic Christians. Most of our Christian teachers and native ministers have been brought to Christ, chiefly through the instrumentality of these schools. The missionaries of the Free Church of Scotland, with Dr. Duff at their head, have taken the lead in this department of missionary labour, and their institutions in Calcutta and other parts of India are not inferior to the best institutions for the training of youth in Europe and America, and all the other missionary bodies in India are extensively cultivating this deeply interesting field. In Calcutta alone, there are about eight thousand young men under this system of training; while Bombay, Madras, Agra, Benares, Allahabad and a large number of other important cities, are following in her footsteps. According to the last reports which I have received, there are now in course of training in Mission schools in India and Ceylon, about one hundred thousand young men, and about twelve or thirteen thousand females.

When, therefore, we remember the number of scientific and religious books which these schools are introducing into the country—when we remember that these schools combine all of the excellencies of the secular and Sabbath schools of our own land—that youth is the time to remove error and plant the seeds of eternal truth; and that many of these young men will obtain stations of power and influence, where their principles will tell upon the destinies of 150,000,000 of their fellow men; and when we also recollect that more than twenty regularly ordained natives have entered the gospel ministry, and nearly five hundred Christian teachers, who are labouring successfully among their countrymen, have been brought in through this channel, and that the hopes of the rising church in India must be directed to these schools for a future and permanent ministry of the gospel—I think we cannot help realizing that these schools are one of the mighty engines which God will bless, in overturning idolatry, and establishing the gospel in that land. To these efforts every intelligent Christian should direct his attention, accompanied by his prayers to Almighty God, for his blessing to rest upon them now and for ever.

OBITUARY.

JAMES RICHARDSON.

The name of this Christian man appears in the present number of the Home and Foreign Record, in connection with bequests to our Boards of Foreign and Domestic Missions, and a short narrative of his life may not be without its use. Mr. Richardson was born in the town of Wellington, Tolland county, Connecticut, on the 26th of June, 1766. At a very early age, he was left an orphan, and being left without worldly means, he was entirely dependent upon his friends and his own exertions. In consequence, his early opportunities were very limited. He often told the writer of this sketch, that he never attended school regularly more than three months in his life, and that was a common district school, with such facilities of common-school education as were furnished seventy-five years ago. But with this limited opportunity for acquiring knowledge, and by dint of his personal endeavours, he made himself capable of transacting ordinary business with promptness and accuracy.

Mr. Richardson was married in the year 1791, to Miss Aurelia Crocker, with whom he lived till his death, December 13th, 1850. The year of their marriage they removed from their native place to what was then the town of Cambridge, now North White Creek, Washington county, New York; and so straitened was Mr. Richardson in worldly circumstances at this period, that he engaged in the winter in shoemaking from house to house. When he began house-keeping, and for some time afterwards, he had but two chairs; the top of a chest served for a table, and wooden trenchers were used instead of plates: yet though in these humble circumstances, by their united industry and frugality, they soon began to accumulate property, and after a few years Mr. Richardson was the owner of a good farm, and his property continued to increase, until the time of his death. He was always a plain, careful, and frugal man; nor was he known for his benevolence till in the latter part of his life.

Having been hopefully converted, Mr. and Mrs. Richardson united with the First United Presbyterian Church of Cambridge, in the year 1798, about a year after the organization of the church, of which church he continued an exemplary member, until death released him, to join the spirits of the just made perfect. The companion of his vows, that stood up with him before the altar of God, still remains a worthy member. It may be said of this excellent man, that he was always during his after life, a constant and regular supporter of the church, and of religious institutions; and he was attached to the doctrines and order of the Presbyterian Church, and ever prayed for its peace and prosperity.

In the last part of his life, he was very liberal in his support of the institutions of the gospel, and the great schemes of benevolence. After his death it was found by his will that he had bequeathed considerable sums to different objects, and that he had not forgotten the church and congregation of which he was so long a valuable member. Besides liberal bequests to some other benevolent Institutions, amounting to $2700, he left to the Trustees and Elders of the church of which he was a member, the sum of $1400, of which $500 are for the poor of the church and congregation; to the Presbyterian Board of Domestic Missions $600; and to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions $500.

This is what the poor orphan boy has done for the cause of Christ at his death. While his life and faithful stewardship are examples of what men, in the more humble walks of life, may accomplish for the glory of God, and the good of man; so that "he being dead, yet speaketh."

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

PUBLICATION ROOMS,

No. 265 Chestnut st., Philadelphia.

Letters relating to agencies, colportage, and the general interests of the Board, to be addressed to Rev. JOHN LEYBURN, D.D., Corresponding Secretary and General Agent.

Orders for books, and letters relating to the business of the Depository, to be addressed to Mr. JOSEPH P. ENGLES, Publishing Agent.

Letters relating to manuscripts and books offered for publication, to be addressed to the Rev. W. M. ENGLES, D.D., Editor of the Board.

Donations to be remitted to A. W. MITCHELL, M.D. Treasurer.

A CALVINISTIC LITERATURE.

Whilst other and collateral objects have not been forgotten or neglected, a leading object of this Board has been to furnish to the churches a thoroughly sound Calvinistic literature. In this department the Board of Publication stands to a considerable extent in a position unique. Other institutions profess to furnish reading of an evangelical, religious character; to this Board, more than to any other organization, seems to be committed the duty and privilege of giving to the Church and the world, a literature saturated with the system of doctrines of the great Genevan, or rather with the principles which the mighty Genevan hewed out of the solid rock of the oracles of God.

That the Presbyterian Church should essay to do such a work need not occasion surprise. Her standards teach a distinct system of doctrines, her ministers and elders are ordained upon professing their belief in them, her separate existence as an organized branch of the Church of God, is owing to these peculiarities. Why should she not teach them through the press as well as through the pulpit? Why muzzle this, which is the second power in the Christian estate, any more than the pulpit, which is first? What right have we to ignore any portion of the truths which God himself has taught, and which we have so solemnly professed to believe? Where is our authority for agreeing, by deliberate compact, that we will not teach any portion of that which God himself teaches, and all of which he has pronounced profitable? Who has assured us that sinners can be saved, souls sanctified, and Christ's kingdom established by a part of the truth, better than the whole of it? When we find ourselves putting asunder things which God has joined together, is there not reason to fear lest we have sought out human devices, and are taking counsel of a short-sighted worldly policy?

Just as surely as there is either sound philosophy, or the teaching of experience, just so surely will it be found, that the religion begotten and fostered on the mere elementary principles of the gospel is different from that which is nurtured and strengthened upon the whole truth which the Bible inculcates. Quite possible it may be to rear a child on milk, until he shall have reached the stature of manhood, but after all he will show the marks of his milk-diet, in his pallidness and languor. He will not be the stalwart man of iron nerve and vigour which he might have been, had there been much strong meat in his feeding. Nor is this, unhappily, mere matter of speculation. The experiment has been tried on a scale sufficiently extended, and for a time long enough, as one might think, to satisfy the most incredulous. There have been times and places where God's ministers have feared to preach his whole counsel; where they have regarded it as better, all things considered, to keep back the strong meat, from fear of men From this beginning of omissions of the truth, they have proceeded to still further and weightier suppressions, until the very essence of the gospel is forgotten, until Christ's deity is ignored, until Christ's crown is taken from his head. One of the most insidious methods by which the fatal work of denying the truth can be perfected, is by simple suppressions. They are hardest to detect, and yet in their full development are pregnant with the saddest results. Times there have been, and places too, where although no such appalling evil as the dethronement of a divine Saviour has been reached, yet the whole truth has been kept back in the pulpit and by the press, until when heresies have arisen, good and great men in Israel have cried out in alarm, that as they had taught the people nothing distinctive, so the people had nothing distinctive whereon to rally in this the time of their danger.

Great and unfounded prejudices have been fostered in the minds of not a few, against whatever may be distinctive either in doctrine or polity. They shrink away from particular tenets with horror, although these are clearly written in God's word. They will favour nothing which distinguishes their own from any other denomination—abjuring all denominationalism as at war with a true Christian charity.

Such views are obviously narrow and ill-advised. To affirm that because one believes the system of truth taught in his own branch of the church to be more in conformity with Scripture than other systems, and so believing, maintains, and, if need be, defends it, therefore he cannot love his brethren who think differently, is bad both as regards its logic and its piety. We have yet to learn that a thorough theologian is a less loving Christian than one who but lisps the alphabet of things divine. The more truth the soul receives and adheres to, provided it be God's truth and in its right proportions, the more will that soul advance in sanctification, grace thereto being given; and thus advancing, the more thoroughly will be opened up the well-spring of love, both towards God and man. To maintain the contrary, is as much as to say that ignorance in religion is more to be desired than knowledge.

Nor does a thorough education of church-members in the tenets of their own peculiar system, in any way hinder the efficiency of that branch of the Church, but on the contrary greatly tends to its advancement. It secures a oneness of heart and purpose, it leads all to aim at one thing and in one way, and thus concentrates the energies of the whole body for a common class of objects. It fulfils the proverb, "union is strength." It avoids the evils incident to a divided, distracted house. A denominational feeling, indeed, would seem almost an innate principle. It is kindred in its nature to love of country, love of one's birth-place, love of home. It arises from a variety of causes, such as early associations and instruction; veneration for the opinions and preferences of one's ancestry; attachment to things with which we have become familiar, and for the forms of truth from which we have derived most comfort. These, and nameless other causes, serve to bind the soul by easy, natural, and yet powerful cords to the particular division of the one Church of Christ with which we may be associated. Then, when in addition to this, from faithful investigation he is convinced that the peculiar features of his denomination are sanctioned by the Bible, how can it be otherwise than that he should find within himself a special attachment to that which is his own? If he allows this specific attachment to override his general love for all who love Christ, this is his sin. It is the smallness of his piety, and not his attachment to his church, which has wrought the mischief.

Under these views, instruction in the peculiar doctrines and polity of the Presbyterian Church has been a cardinal point, in the ends for which the Board has been all along labouring. In so doing, it has taught the common Calvinism of many other Christians, and secured their co-operation; and in so doing it has seen many and blessed fruits, in the increased intelligence and efficiency of our Zion. Whilst there is great reason to lament the absence of God's Spirit in his reviving influences throughout the Church, there is also abundant evidence, that at no period of her history has the Presbyterian Church been so thoroughly organized for her sublime and glorious work; or when she has more generally and heartily elicited the respect and confidence of the Christian world. The Board will continue to teach practical godliness through its publications as heretofore, but it will be also as heretofore, a practical godliness founded on a sound and complete system of theology—a theology which will give substance and richness to its fruits.

LIBRARIES IN PRESBYTERIAN SABBATH-SCHOOLS.

BY A LATE COLPORTEUR.

A good Sabbath-School is an important auxiliary in the religious instruction of children and youth. The systematic study of the Holy Scriptures is in great danger of being neglected by youth, unless connected with Sabbath-School or Bible-class recitations. Here the church trains up her sons, like Timothy, familiar, from childhood, with that book which is able to make them wise unto salvation; and her daughters in that knowledge, which, when sealed upon their hearts by the Holy Spirit, produces the "faith unfeigned" of Lois and Eunice. Here the faithful followers of Christ may prove their love to Him by complying with his charge to Peter, to feed his lambs. Sound instruction, by the prayerful teacher, together with books of the proper kind, has been eminently blessed by the Good Shepherd, in gathering in the young of his fold. As the importance of the latter influence is, I fear, greatly underrated in many of our churches, I propose suggesting a few hints to church-members and those engaged in Sabbath-School instruction generally.

A Sabbath-School library should include a variety of books adapted to the capacity of every pupil in the school. The more advanced scholars will not read books prepared for those less advanced, nor will the youngest pupils derive profit from books that they do not understand.

They should be adapted to leave serious impressions on the mind. Many Sabbath-School books are written in a trivial style, disagreeable, and in some instances disgusting to intelligent youth. Others are written in an exaggerated style, and are not believed, although, in the main, true; whilst too many are not only in appearance, but in reality fictitious, and will be either thrown aside as worthless, or will instil a love of fiction, and thus sow seed which will too often bring forth fruit unto death. In addition to these classes of improper works, may be mentioned another, which I have seen with surprise and regret in many libraries. These are works such as the "Life of Bonaparte," and "Life of Washington," &c. which are as unfit for Sabbath reading as any merely historical works with occasional serious remarks or reflections would be. It is to be regretted that many of our Sabbath-Schools, especially in the country churches, yet retain libraries with books of these objectionable classes, which were purchased before the Board of Publication of our own Church was prepared to furnish a sufficient variety for an extensive library. Our Board is now furnishing a Sabbath-School library of great variety, and of no ordinary excellence, containing an extensive assortment of biography, amongst which are Memoirs of Newton, Martyn, Buchanan, John Knox, and Melancthon, of Mary Jane Graham, Sarah Ball, Mrs. Andrew, John Barr, and many other persons who were distinguished for eminent piety and usefulness, which are well adapted to interest the more advanced members of Sabbath-Schools and Bible-classes. The books designed for children comprise many memoirs of youthful piety, some of them from the pen of McCheyne and other eminent Scottish Presbyterian writers; while all are from able authors, and their great object is never lost sight of even in their embellishments. In works pertaining to the missionary cause, the library of our own

Board is unusually rich. Narratives of missionaries and of converted heathen, written especially for children, are calculated to enlighten our youth and awaken a lively interest in the missionary cause, and prepare them for taking an active part in labouring for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom in future life. They inculcate the doctrines contained in that form of sound words prepared by the Westminster Assembly, which has been like oil to the flame of piety in the hearts of each succeeding generation of those that love Presbyterianism in its primitive purity; and must be to the present and each succeeding generation, as long as those doctrines are perpetuated in the Church. They are here presented, interwoven with the narrative of eminent Christians, in their conversations and correspondence, in the accounts of their conversion and their dying sayings, and are thus adapted to make stronger impressions on youthful minds than if read in a doctrinal treatise. If it is essential that our youth should learn those doctrines in the Catechism; it is equally essential that such an important means as the Sabbath-School Library shall exert its influence to the same end. By supplying our Sabbath-Schools from our own Board, we will secure the attachment of our children to the institutions of the Presbyterian Church, in early life, preserve them from erroneous impressions, train them not only as Presbyterians, but as intelligent advocates of her doctrines and church order, and secure their influence as hearty supporters of her benevolent operations at home and abroad; and thus prepare them for aiding in the work of sending the pure gospel of the Son of God, to those that are sitting in the dark shadows of spiritual death, that they also may rejoice in its light; and that thus the Man of sorrows "may see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied."

P. S. The number of volumes in the Sabbath-School Library is one hundred, and the cost, at cash prices, is $20, or in cheaper binding $16.50.

SELF-DENIAL.

One of our agents writes: "One gentleman had conditionally bought a watch, to cost $30, but after hearing the subject (of our publications and colportage) presented, he preferred to return the watch and give the $30 to constitute his wife an honorary member, and thus aid the Board. Another brother resolved to quit the use of TOBACCO, that he might save the means to aid the Board, and purchase the books of our publication."

LEGACIES TO BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

William B. Kelly, a member of the Presbyterian Church of Lewistown, Illinois, who died on the 20th August, 1851, after making liberal provision for his family, and bequests to other relatives, specifies the following objects of benevolence in his will.

American Bible Society,	$1000 00
American Sunday-School Union,	500 00
Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions,	500 00
Presbyterian Board of Education,	500 00
Presbyterian Board of Publication, for the purpose of aiding the Colporteur enterprise in distributing religious books	2000 00
	$4500 00

For the purpose of erecting a church edifice, the First Presbyterian Church of Lewistown, Illinois, is made his residuary legatee.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE PRESBYTERIAN PSALMODIST; a collection of Tunes adapted to the Psalms and Hymns of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Approved by the General Assembly. Edited by Thomas Hastings. 368 pp. containing 485 tunes, with a number of set pieces, anthems and chants, and eight pages of blank ruled music paper. Price 75 cents single, or eighteen copies for $10, if purchased at one time in Philadelphia, for cash.

It has been edited with much care and labour by Thomas Hastings, Esq. of New York, whose reputation is a sufficient guaranty as to the scientific character of the work. It contains a very large collection of the old favourite airs, as well as many of the more popular tunes of modern date. It promises to be very acceptable to the Church. Though out but two weeks, a second edition of 3000 copies has just been ordered to be printed.

THE FLOWER TRANSPLANTED.—THE BLIND BOY, AND LITTLE GEORGE. 32mo, pp. 64, with an engraving. Price 10 and 14 cents.

Sweet memorials of infant piety, peculiarly attractive to youthful readers, and gratifying to the advanced Christian, as exhibiting the tender care of the Good Shepherd for the lambs of the flock.

THE SHORT PRAYER AND THE TEXT OF EASY WORDS. 32mo, pp. 64, with an engraving. Price 10 and 14 cents.

Two interesting narratives, exhibiting the power of divine grace, and the peculiar methods by which souls are sometimes brought under its influence.

TRACTS.

Tract No. 143, pp. 16. THE DAY OF JUDGMENT. Written for the Board of Publication.

A very solemn subject handled in a becoming manner, by an experienced pen.

Tract No. 144. ON WORLDLY CONFORMITY. By the Rev. James M. Brown. pp. 16.

This tract exhibits in a very striking light the importance of consistency of conduct in the professor of religion, and the evils of conformity to the maxims and habits of a sinful world.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

DEATHS.

The Rev. Giles Manwaring, Principal of the Raymond Collegiate Institute, departed this life on the 11th of May, at Carmel, Putnam co., N. Y., aged 38 years.

Varieties.

A Meeting-going People.—By accurate estimates made recently, it is ascertained that one quarter of the whole population of South Boston attended church in one forenoon, reckoning the number of inhabitants at 14,000.

Change of Circumstances.—Within the last fifty years, a benevolent person offered to the trustees of one of the Lutheran churches of New York city, a present of about six acres of land near Canal street and Broadway. They passed a resolution that it was inexpedient to accept the gift, "inasmuch as the land was not worth fencing in." The land is now worth millions of dollars.

Education and Religion in Indiana.—There are in the State, among all denominations, 1900 houses of worship. Number of communicants in all evangelical churches, about 124,000—1 professed Christian to every 8 of the population. 1 in 7 of the adult population can neither read nor write; 1 in 8 of the families is without the Bible; 1 in 75 die annually.

Singular Recovery of Speech.—A few days since, a singular and pleasing incident occurred at the Mint in Philadelphia. A number of young females are employed there, one of whom had been deaf and dumb for ten years, an affliction resulting from scarlet fever. While engaged at her occupation, judge of the surprise of her companions to hear her exclaim, "Oh, I believe I can speak!" So great was the astonishment, that one of the females swooned, and the most of them were strangely affected. Since then the female has entirely recovered her speech.

The Vestiges of Creation.—A writer in the Southern Presbyterian Review, speaking of the ephemeral popularity of this infidel work says:—"That book is now the jest of men of science. Among them all, there is not one, who could acknowledge its paternity without blushing. Indeed, it is destitute of an enlarged and thorough view of knowledge. A witty writer remarked of it, that its author had been at a geological feast, and had run away with the scraps. It is rather curious, that one of its main doctrines was exploded before the book was well dry from the press. It based a portion of its claims on the nebular hypothesis. But Lord Rosse, about that time, turned his wonder-working telescope upon these nebular embryo worlds, and in an instant this theory was dissipated into thin air."

The Cedars of Lebanon.—Messrs. Lansing and Burnett, American missionaries at Damascus, visited this region last summer, and carefully counted the cedars, both old and young. They also made some measurements of a very interesting character. The entire grove, according to their estimate, consists of four hundred trees; the average circumference of the original twelve is about twenty-five feet, and one was found to measure upwards of thirty. The trunks of the more ancient cedars do not rise to any great height before they branch out into enormous limbs, commencing ten or fifteen feet from the ground, some perhaps twenty feet. The branches are very crooked and tortuous, partly decayed as before stated, and gnarled with the frosts and tempests of ages. It is said that no other specimens of the kind are found in any part of the world, except such as have been transplanted from the grove; but Messrs. Lansing and Burnett ascertained to their entire satisfaction that other cedars of the same species do exist in the mountains of Syria. The wood is white and has a pleasant perfume; and to this odour reference is made in the Scriptures. It is not stronger, however, than the scent of the ordinary red cedar, perhaps less apparent.

Religious Statistics of Ireland.—The remarkable movement in Ireland, which promises to uproot and expel Popery from the beautiful island it has cursed for ages, gives interest to whatever relates to her religious condition. The Romanists.—There are in Ireland the following Roman Catholic priests—Prelates and arch-prelates, 28; parish priests, 989; curates, 1430; other ecclesiastics, 322; total, 2769. There is one Roman Catholic priest to every 1755 Roman Catholics.—The Episcopal Church. With regard to the Episcopal church in Ireland, there are 2261 clergymen, supported by what is called "church property."—Presbyterians and Methodists. There are 662 Presbyterian and 238 Methodist ministers. The total number of Protestant ministers, exclusive of Unitarians, is 3224. Thus it will be seen that the Protestant ministers outnumbered the Roman Catholic priests by 445. With reference to secessions from Roman Catholicism, his grace, the bishop of Tuam, stated that during the past year no fewer than 10,000 persons had forsaken the Roman Catholic communion in his diocess alone!

Kossuth, in a speech lately delivered at Boston, corrected the current impression that the Turk had set a price upon his protection in the proposition to renounce Christianity and embrace Islamism. It was indeed suggested to him by the Grand Vizier and other ministers of the private council of the Sultan, that if he esteemed life more than honour, he could save his life by abandoning his religion. But the next day the Sultan, when hearing of the matter, rose from his seat, and lifting his hands to God, said, "I will never divert the sufferings of war from my country by staining the honour of my empire. If I am doomed to perish with my people, let it be done in honour. I never will surrender these men."

Apology for the Pope.—The Republican World, an Irish Catholic paper in this city, offers the following apology for the act of his infallible highness, Pope Pius IX., in granting his benediction on the usurpation of Louis Napoleon.

"The Pope was made to believe that the villany of the 2d December was a providential delivery from imminent evils of the most alarming and fatal character. And, finally, the act of his holiness was his own, and not the Church's, and it is binding on the conscience of no one in the Catholic world. The Catholic in France, highest in character and next in rank to the Pope, had nothing for Napoleon but his curse."

What is the use of having a Pope at all, if his blessing and his curse can carry no more weight than this, and if his decrees bind the conscience of no Catholic?

JOHN CALVIN.

We have the pleasure of presenting to our readers the following spirited, life-like sketch of the great Genevan Reformer, extracted from the opening sermon of the Rev. Dr. Humphrey, before the General Assembly of our Church. It will be read with interest, and will be a suitable accompaniment to the beautiful engraved portrait of Calvin, prepared for the forthcoming Family Almanac for 1853.

"John Calvin was twenty years of age before he was converted from Rome to Christ. When, soon afterwards, our theology struck its forces into his mind, it roused him to the utmost stretch of thought. It was like a fire in his bones. So vital was the new life within him, that at the age of twenty-six he had deduced our entire system of doctrine from the Word of God, adjusted its elements into a masterpiece of logical coherence, and published it to the world in his immortal Institutes. The twenty-eight years of life that remained to him, were laden with affliction both of mind and body. Physical infirmities multiplied upon him, until no less than seven distinct maladies laid siege to his attenuated frame. He suffered also every private grief, even that domestic bereavement which he styled 'an acute and burning wound.'

"It is impossible to look, without wonder, at the labours he prosecuted amidst all this weariness and painfulness. The products of his pen exist in nine huge folios of printed matter, besides several hundred letters, and more than two thousand sermons and theological treatises yet unpublished. He prepared a copious commentary on most of the Scriptures; he edited a French translation of the word of God; he disputed, by tongue and pen, with Bolzec, on the doctrine of predestination, with Westphal and Hesshus on the sacraments, with Welsius on free will, with Pighius on free grace, and Servetus on the Trinity. He wrote against relics and astrology, the Anabaptists, the Libertines, and the Pelagians. He employed his wit and sarcasm in assailing the Sorbonne, his powers of argumentation in confuting the Tridentine Decrees, and his noble eloquence in behalf of the Emperor against the Pope. He corresponded incessantly with his contemporaries —Farel, Viret, Beza, Melancthon, Knox, Cranmer, and the Kings of Sweden, Poland, and Navarre; projecting, by his long and masterly letters, his own intellectual and spiritual life into the leading minds of Europe. With an asthmatical cough upon him, he lectured three days in the week on theology, and preached daily on every alternate week. He presided every Thursday at the Court of Morals, attended the frequent assembly of the clergy, assisted in settling the civil and ecclesiastical affairs of Geneva; he founded there a seminary of liberal learning, and when the city was threatened with siege, laboured at the fortifications. He educated preachers of the gospel; performed many journeys; was consulted on all important subjects; occupied the pulpits of his brethren in their absence: and did not neglect pastoral labour in the congregation. Besides all these things, he composed the dissensions which perplexed the reformers, and the strifes which afflicted the churches; and aided in settling the affairs of the Reformation in Poland, France, Germany, Scotland, and England. At last, being compelled by mortal disease to relinquish public duties, he received in his chamber all who sought his advice, and wore out his amanuenses by dictating to them his works and letters. When his shortening breath and failing voice terminated these labours, his kindling eye and heaving breast indicated that he was in constant prayer. On a beautiful evening in May, seven days later in the month than this, the day of our solemn convocation, just as the setting sun was irradiating, with its purple light, the waters of Leman and the Rhone, the Jura mountains and the more distant glaciers of the Alps, this great man rested from his labours. He gave directions that his body should be buried without the slightest pomp, and that his grave should be marked by neither monument nor headstone. His commands were obeyed, and 'no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.'"

Christ is a path, if any be misled;
He is a robe, if any naked be;
If any chance to hunger, he is bread;
If any be but weak, how strong is he!
To dead men, life he is; to sick men health;
To blind men sight; and to the needy wealth;
A pleasure without loss; a treasure without stealth.

WESTERN ASIA AS A FIELD FOR CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

The contemplation of this region, in connection with the North-eastern part of Africa, is calculated to awaken the profoundest interest in every heart engaged in the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. Here was the human family placed at the creation. Here were saved righteous Noah and his family, from the flood of divine vengeance which overwhelmed the world of the ungodly. Here wandered forth Abraham, at God's command, a stranger and a pilgrim from his father's house; and here, though a pilgrim abiding in tents, was his heart made glad by the vision of the Messiah's day, beheld with the eye of faith. Here dwelt Isaac, the child of promise, rescued from the altar of sacrifice, in type of the redemption of God's elect. Here, in the wilderness, the tribes of Jacob marched in the protection of the fiery pillar, or reposed in the shade of the pillar of cloud, till they reached, in triumph, the promised land.

Here fought and sung the valiant and pious David. Here flourished the magnificent kingdom of Solomon. Here too, upon the sins of Judah and Israel has been visited the avenging arm of Jehovah, which was oft extended in their defence. Here arose, and flourished, and fell, the mighty empires of Assyria, and Babylon, the Medo-Persian and the Macedonian. Upon these plains and seas, have met in bloody contest, the bands of freemen and the legions of the despot. Here have flowed rivers of blood in vindication of human liberty; and in maintenance of tyranny and oppression. Here science first saw the light; and here, amid catacombs and pyramids, she lies embalmed. Here first dawned the radiance of God's saving truth—and here, for a long season, "darkness hath covered the earth and gross darkness the people." Here taught and testified prophets, and apostles, and martyrs. Here lived, and laboured, and suffered—"Immanuel—God with us." Hence he arose in triumph from the grave, "leading captivity captive." And hither, it is written, shall he return in glory, to reign with his saints a thousand years! How grand a field for missionary enterprise! Murat, narrating the battle of Mt. Tabor, gained by Napoleon against the Turks, exclaims—"In the hottest of this terrible fight I thought of Christ, and his transfiguration upon this very spot, two thousand years ago, and the reflection inspired me with tenfold courage and strength." With how much greater propriety may the Christian missionary take courage from such reflections, as he gives himself with invincible ardour to the glorious work of proclaiming to the remnant of Israel, the glad tiding of Messiah's cross; the washing of regeneration, to the superstitious and bigoted Greek; mercy, to the relentless Moslem; and to the benighted and debased sons of Ham, the purity and exaltation of the gospel! If "the world is the field," this portion of it is the garden of the Lord! Where are the labourers for this vineyard?

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS,

Presented to the General Assembly, May 25th, 1852.

In fulfilment of the promise made in the last number of the Home and Foreign Record, we now give an abstract of the Annual Report of the Board of Missions, presented to the General Assembly, May 25th, in Charleston, South Carolina. The Report will be put to press very shortly, and be distributed in the month of July.

I. The State of the Treasury.

It has been a year of embarrassment, owing to the fact that the loss and disbursements of the preceding year absorbed its entire income, with the exception of a very small balance. The increase of that year being but $3769; whereas, to meet the enlarged and enlarging operations of the Board, the increase should have been between $10,000 and $15,000. The debt of the Board in August last was over $10,000, and in November over $15,000. But the year closes much more favourably than we at one time anticipated.

Total receipts from all sources for eleven months: (the present Report owing to a change in closing the year extends over eleven months only,) is $81,748 98
Amount paid out for same time $78,883 89
Drafts drawn and not presented,
April 1, 623 80
79,507 69
Leaving a balance in favour of the Board in all the Treasuries, of $2241 29

Against this, is a note in Bank, and appropriations to missionaries due and unpaid on the 1st of April about $7141 78; which leaves the Board in debt on the 1st of April 1852, $4900 49; or we may say $5000. The estimate may be too low.

We have, then, for eleven months, $81,748 98.

Against twelve months, the last year, $82,818 51. We are, consequently, short $1,069 53. Should the receipts for April, 1852, equal the receipts for April, 1851, we shall be ahead of the income last year, but not sufficiently so to pay our debt of $5000, and make the Treasury easy; and unless the churches come up more liberally than heretofore in the summer and autumn, we have no other prospect than that of continued embarrassment; and, in that event, the expenses of the Board must necessarily be reduced, to clear itself of a debt agreeably to the rule of the General Assembly. We hope, however, for better things, in God's mercy, and in his people's fidelity.

II. Operations of the Year.

The number of missionaries in commission are given for one year from April 1, 1851, to April 1 1852, and compared with the previous year, from April 1, 1850, to April 1, 1851. In commission April 1, 1851, 341; added to April 1, 1852, 197;—making a total of 538, and fifty-three less than the year before.

There are a number of names on the registers, that should not be there at all, as they serve churches abundantly able to support them without assistance. The Board is endeavouring to relieve the registers of these names as fast as possible. We cannot expand without doing this just work. A diminution of our lists, therefore, under these circumstances, will argue no diminution of our missionaries. The Board is glad to report between forty-five and fifty churches gone off to sustain themselves the past eleven months. We wish we could report five times the number. The more off in this way, the better.

The number of churches and missionary stations wholly or in part supplied, has been, as far as reported, 1101, newly organized churches 49, admissions on examination 1919, on certificate 1665, making a total of admissions of 3584; number in communion with churches connected with the Board 24,082, Sabbath-Schools 643, teachers 4356, scholars 27,637, baptisms 2367, houses of worship erected or finished 79; of 538 missionaries in commission 121 sent in no special report! These are the returns for eleven months, and while the additions to the churches and the aggregate in communion do not equal the 12 months of the preceding year, yet the number of Sabbath-schools, and of scholars and teachers, and the number of baptisms and houses of worship erected, are in excess. The results are gratifying, and while we have had no general outpouring of the Spirit of God, yet we have been cheered with revivals from time to time, and the seal of God of 1919 conversions shows that his favour abides upon us. This is the seal above all others desired by the Assembly; and it fills the hearts of our zealous and laborious and devoted brethren in the field, with joy.

Although a year of embarrassment, yet the Board has kept steadily in view the wishes of the Assembly, and have appropriated all their savings to the reinforcement and enlargement of the Church. Two ministers were sent as a reinforcement to Texas: one to California, and one to Oregon. The Presbytery of Oregon was constituted in Nov. 1851, and the General Assembly at its present meeting ordered the constitution of Three new Synods! The Synod of the Pacific, the Synod of Iowa, and the Synod of Arkansas; all owing their existence mainly to the Domestic Missionary operations of the Assembly. Here is expansion! We have reached the shores of the Pacific and constituted a Synod there! Let the whole Church arise and give thanks to God!

We have also planted our first missionary in Minnesota. We are straitened in all the western and south-western States for want of men and means.

The Religious Instruction of the Coloured Population has been kept prominently before the Board, and much progress is made in this good work. Our most promising efforts on their behalf are in the Southern states.

A few missionaries have been employed among the Germans. The foreign population calls loudly on American Christians for sympathy and aid. Many of our large cities present fields of as pure missionary labour as are to be found anywhere.

The usual amount of clothing has been contributed by our benevolent females, for the supply and comfort of our missionaries.

The scheme of Church Extension deserves to be again seriously urged upon the attention and support of the churches. It has been eight years in existence. Amount contributed by the churches, $10,922, or only $1365 annually!! Amount disbursed by the Church Extension Committee in the same time, $41,923, leaving a balance unsupplied by the churches of $31,001!! How has this large sum been made up? By Individual Donors! How have the churches fallen short!

This fund was in debt for appropriations in Nov. 1850, $8460. No new appropriations have been made since that time. We are happy to report the Church Extension Fund free of debt on the 1st of April, 1852, within $303.12. This balance has since been paid. The receipts for 11 months $7101.40, of which $2876.60 were contributed by the churches, and $4,224.80 by individuals. Sixteen houses of worship were aided to completion, and thirteen received assistance by special donations sent through the committee for the purpose.

Is there a necessity for this scheme? Let facts speak! Every Synod (22) in our church has applied for and received aid from the Church Extension Fund! Of 129 Presbyteries, (5 foreign not counted) 97 have applied for aid; and 86, or two-thirds of the whole number have received it! What means this almost universal application for aid, if there be no necessity?

Is the scheme feasible? Nothing to impede its progress but want of support.

Has it been successful? 281 houses of worship aided to completion, demonstrates its success.

What are its benefits? It awakens numerous organized churches to the duty of building houses of public worship for themselves. Gives firm establishment and success to newly organized churches in new and missionary fields; promotes the temporal welfare of communities, and gives them permanency—honours and advances the church—and secures conveniently the great design we have in view, the salvation of souls and the edification of the body of Christ.

Our Church has lost ground, and is now losing ground, for want of more aid in this good work! How can Synods and Presbyteries expect the scheme to live—and themselves to be benefited by it, if they all draw out more than they put in? What we do as a Church, we must sustain as a Church. No other principle of action will do. Our dependence for all our schemes must be on the contributions of the churches, and not upon individual donations and legacies.

Agencies.—There have been no agents employed on the Atlantic slope—the Board has found it extremely difficult to obtain suitable agents. They are needed. The domestic missionary work in which the Assembly is engaged was presented before eleven Synods during the year. The Rev. B. T. Lacy was agent for Church Extension in the Synod of Virginia for 6 months. The Rev. J. F. McLaren has been employed during the year in the Synods of Ohio, Wheeling, and Pittsburgh. The Rev. C. Sturdevant and Rev. C. Leavenworth were employed by the Western Executive Committee, one for the whole, the other for a part of the year. Rev. D. L. Gray was exploring and missionary agent in the Synods of Memphis and Mississippi; and Rev. J. D. Mason a part of the year in Iowa. All have done much good.

The Western Executive Committee have conducted the affairs of the Board intrusted to it, with promptness, ability, and energy during the year; especially have they been energetic in carrying out the resolutions of the Board for reducing improper appropriations, and getting rid of churches that ought to draw nothing from the missionary funds of the Church. We look forward to the day when this Committee will be able to sustain all the missions within the field assigned it, without being dependent for aid upon any other part of the Church. The Lord hasten it in his time.

III. The Third division of the Report, of very special value and importance, embracing a brief review of the mode of carrying on the domestic missionary work by the Church, from its first establishment in the country to the present time; the principles upon which the General Assembly has conducted the work, and the evils which have incidentally appeared in the Presbyteries and churches, and the Board itself, in the progress of the work, cannot well admit of an abstract; and we must refer our readers to the Report itself. We, however, give so much as relates to the principles upon which the Assembly conducts the great work.

The great work undertaken for so long a time by the Assembly, is the expansion and full establishment of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by his own Spirit and power over all our vast country. And it is purely a missionary work, missionary in this respect—that ministers are sent out by the Assembly, and means furnished for their support in whole or in part, while they are preaching the gospel and gathering and establishing churches. So soon as individual churches or groupes of churches are established, and are able to support all the institutions of the gospel for themselves, they are no longer missionary in character, but immediately cease their connection with the Board, and fall into line with the great body of self-sustaining and contributing churches, and go to add to the solid material and power of the Presbyterian Church.

Now the principles upon which the General Assembly conducts its domestic missionary work, gathered from its own official acts and declarations as reviewed, are these:

1. It is in the sense defined a missionary work.

2. The funds contributed for it are missionary funds.

3. The men employed preaching the gospel are, in their fields, missionary men.

4. All the churches and fields aided and supplied, are missionary churches and fields.

5. The funds supplied, are funds for temporary assistance, and not for entire, nor permanent support. The people aided are to help themselves, be it ever so little, from the beginning, and are to go on to independence.

6. The grand end and aim of the Assembly, is to establish self-sustaining churches and fields, as fast and as far as possible; and so to increase the solid material and power of the Church, and accumulate strength to go forward expanding.

7. Ministers and means are to be distributed according to the relative importance and promise of different fields, and in view of the necessities of the whole field, that there may be equality, and no partiality.

8. The Assembly conducts this work through a Com- mittee or Board, responsible to itself alone, under its advice and control, and which Board is required to exercise its sound discretion and judgment in deciding upon, and in conducting the business intrusted to it.

9. No debt to be incurred in carrying forward the missionary work. The Assembly always acted upon this just and only safe principle: and a principle which will always be adhered to by our Church. And in the Assembly of 1803, the following resolution was passed—"That there ought to be no anticipation of the funds in future: or, in other words, that appropriations ought not to be made in any year, beyond the amount which the funds arising in that year will be sufficient to satisfy." p. 280.

10, and finally: Agents for visiting the churches and collecting funds for the work, may be employed by the Board.

IV. Conclusion. The year has witnessed a growing interest in the work of Domestic Missions, evidenced in the acts and doings of Synods and Presbyteries, and by the increased contributions of the churches. The conviction is deepening, that it underlies the growth and establishment of our Church: the purity, prosperity, and happiness of our country. And for the conduct of this work, our Church possesses peculiar advantages: such as, our ecclesiastical organization, and action through a central committee; unity of views and feelings; mutual confidence and warm affection pervading the whole Church; general intelligence; no anti-missionary spirit; soundness in doctrines; the confidence of the people; and, up to the present time, the smile and approbation of the God of missions—we have been prospered.

Our obligations are manifold and great to sustain and advance the work. We are under obligations as disciples and ministers of the Lord Jesus Christ; and we are under obligations to the branch of the Church with which we are connected, and also to the Church general and militant. Let us not be found wanting; but, by the help of God, we will gird on our armour, and quit ourselves like men.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ON THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

By reference to the action of the late General Assembly on the Annual Report of the Board of Missions, which we publish below, it will be seen that it is both clear and decided. The policy of the Board, which has always been the same, is here reiterated in a way not to be misunderstood. It is, in fact, a collection and condensation of the principles as set forth from time to time, through a long series of years, by our General Assemblies. The Board, which is but the creature of the Assembly, and to which it is responsible, has endeavoured faithfully to carry out the principles as here set forth, and in all cases, as far as possible to meet the wishes of our whole Church. In a work like this, in a country so vast, and in a Church so large and scattered as ours, it is not to be wondered at, that occasionally there may be honest differences of opinion as to the application of these principles in certain given cases. We say the application, for we now take it for granted, that the principles and policy so repeatedly set forth by the Assembly is the expressed opinion of our Church. We do not, therefore, refer to the principle so much as to its universal application. In carrying on this great work, there must be some general rules by which the Board shall be governed. Without this, the work could not be efficiently prosecuted. And yet no rule can be adopted, however correct it may be, which may not have its exceptions. And it is more upon these exceptions that differences of opinion arise, than anything else. These "peculiar cases" often create peculiar difficulties, because seen from different points, and in a very different light. We commend the zeal which leads to great activity on the part of our brethren to supply any one portion of our country with the preached word. Our destitutions are so great in almost all our land, that it becomes all parts of it to put forth far greater efforts to supply and build up our waste places. But may it not sometimes happen that this local zeal may get the better of sober judgment in this very thing? Is it not the fact, that some of our good brethren sometimes become restless, and are disposed to complain when men and means cannot be afforded for the particular field in which they are so much interested? Or when, perhaps, that very church had for many years drawn largely from the funds of the Board, and when it was perfectly clear that under the same influence it never would be any better, and therefore neither so inviting, nor half so important as many other destitute fields that were begging for the Word of Life through the living ministry! Would that the Board had at its disposal both men and means to meet promptly every demand! But when such is not the case, it is unreasonable to expect that this can be done. The appropriations can only be in proportion to the actual receipts.

And never, perhaps, in the whole history of our country, have we had presented to us a field so wide and encouraging, and one that called so loudly for purely missionary work, as the present. In the opening providence of God, a vast field is spread out before us, such as is not presented to, or in which no other nation on the face of the earth is so deeply interested. God will hold us responsible for the manner in which we cultivate it. To meet this demand, our means are wholly inadequate; but by faithfully adhering to the principles as set forth in the following resolutions, and which are here reiterated by the Assembly, we may be able, with the blessing of God upon our feeble efforts, to accomplish something for his kingdom and glory.

The Committee on the Annual Report of the Board of Missions presented the following report, which was adopted:

Resolved, 1. That the General Assembly has heard, with high gratification, the report of the Board of Missions, and acknowledges, with devout gratitude, the successes of the past year, and the good hand of God yet mercifully resting upon this important branch of the Church's operations.

Resolved, 2. That the churches be urged to contribute more liberally to the funds, in order that the present liabilities of the Board may be met, and the Board enabled to go forward in supplying the destitute fields in our widely-extended country.

Resolved, 3. That the Assembly would re-affirm all the principles upon which it has heretofore carried on its Domestic Missions—principles which have been exhibited in a review of all the published minutes, acts, and doings of the Church in her highest judicatories from the beginning, and which are drawn up and set forth in order, in the report of the Board of Missions.

Resolved, 4. That the great work, undertaken for so long a time by the Assembly, is the expansion and full establishment of the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, by his own Spirit and power, over all our vast country. And it is purely a missionary work—missionary in this respect, that ministers are sent out by the Assembly, and means furnished for their support, in whole or in part, while they are preaching the gospel, and gathering and establishing churches. So soon as individual churches, or groups of churches, are established, and are able to support all the institutions of the gospel for themselves, they are no longer missionaries in character, but immediately cease their connection with the Board, and fall into line with the great body of self-sustaining and contributing churches, and go to add to the solid material and power of the Presbyterian Church. Now, the principles upon which the General Assembly conducts its domestic missionary work are these: 1. It is, in the sense defined, a missionary work. 2. The funds contributed for it are missionary funds. 3. The men employed in preaching the gospel are, in their fields, missionary men. 4. All the churches and fields aided and supported are missionary churches and fields. 5. The funds supplied are funds for temporary assistance, and not for permanent support. The people aided, are to help themselves, be it ever so little, from the beginning, and to go on to independence. 6. The grand end and aim is to establish self-sustaining churches or fields of labour as fast and as far as possible, and so to increase the solid material and power of the Church, and accumulate strength to go forward expanding. 7. Ministers and means are to be distributed according to the relative importance and promise of different fields, and in view of the necessities of the whole field, that there may be equality and no partiality. 8. The Assembly conducts the work through a Committee of the Board, responsible to itself alone, under its advice and control, and which Board is required to exercise its sound discretion and judgment in deciding upon, and in conducting the business intrusted to it. 9. No debt is to be incurred in carrying forward the missionary work. The Assembly always acted on this first and only safe principle, which will always be adhered to in our Church; and in the Assembly of 1803, the following resolution was passed—"That there ought to be no anticipations of the funds in future; or in other words, that appropriations ought not to be made in any year beyond the amount which the funds arising in that year will be sufficient to satisfy."—Minutes, p. 280. 10. And finally, agents for visiting the churches and collecting funds for the work may be employed by the Board.

Resolved, 5. That the Board be directed to go forward and conduct the work intrusted to its care on these principles as heretofore, and that they be commended to the attention and observance of all Presbyteries and churches in their applications for aid; and that the Board be recommended, as heretofore, to pay due regard to the recommendations of Presbyteries; that all pastors and stated supplies be requested to take pains to circulate the Report when published, and diffuse more information on the subject of Domestic Missions among their people.

Resolved, 6. That the warmest thanks of this Assembly are due to the Rev. C. C. Jones, D. D. and the Board of Missions, for the energy, zeal, and good judgment with which their whole work has been prosecuted during the past year; and the Assembly would further express its special gratification with the enlarged and liberal views of this great subject presented in the Annual Report.

ANSWER OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY TO AN OVERTURE.

We call attention to the following Overture, which was presented to the General Assembly in Charleston, S. C., as well as the answer thereunto. The Board of Missions are always thankful to the Presbyteries for the information communicated, and pay every possible respect to their requests. At the same time they must be governed by the circumstances alluded to by the Assembly.

Overture No. 13, is a memorial from the Presbytery of Logansport, desiring the Assembly to say whether the Board of Missions has the power to reduce the amounts recommended to be given in aid to any churches, under care of any Presbytery, without consulting such Presbytery; and if so, whether the Board has not equal right to take away the whole amount so recommended, in any case? It was

Resolved, That while the Assembly expect the Board of Missions to pay great respect to the advice of the Presbyteries touching Missionaries labouring within their bounds, yet, in the distribution of its funds, the action of the Board must be controlled by the state of its treasury, and the relative importance of the various missionary fields under its care.

LETTERS FROM MISSIONARIES.

The extracts from our correspondence in this number of the Record have particular reference to the separation of our Missionaries from the service of the Board, either by removals to other fields of labour, or by arrangements of the churches to sustain the gospel themselves, without further aid. There is no class of men in our Church who manifest a more noble spirit in this respect, and who stand ready to relieve the Board as far as they possibly can, than the missionaries of this Board. These extracts speak for themselves.

From a Missionary in Ohio.

Our Presbytery and Synod have been so burdensome to you that we feel like cutting loose and trying to stand alone at the earliest moment. If we catch a few falls, I hope the Lord will enable us to rise again.

I hereby resign the commission I have the honour to hold, as a missionary of your body, dated July 14th, 1851, promising $100 for the year ending July 1st, 1852. This resignation to take effect from the 31st day of December, 1851, up to which time my compensation from the Board has been received in full.

In withdrawing from my position as a recipient of the funds of the Board, I must be allowed to express the warmest thanks for my people and myself, for the aid you have extended us in our early struggles. When I "stopped" here in May, 1846, I found an infant church of seven members. They could not raise $100 a year for me. Your Board have sustained me in part ever since.

My heart swells and softens with grateful and fraternal feelings, as I review these years. We now number fifty-seven communicants, and can raise $25 for Domestic Missions, instead of $3 or $4. I can be useful in teaching, and still supply our little church, if God bless, and the church and myself combining our exertions, can support my family. Should my health fail under double duties, we may be compelled to knock at your door again. But we hope the best; and will try to stand alone without further material aid. Let this aid now go to the more destitute.

From an Itinerant Missionary in North Carolina.

After ten and a half year's service as a missionary in the mountains, I now bid the Board farewell, in obedience to a unanimous invitation from —— Church, which I have decided it was my duty to accept.

My trials there were many and peculiar, but, if I live ten years longer, and have as many evidences of the Lord's favour as I have had for the ten past, I shall have cause for much thankfulness. The work, above all others that I had before my mind, in that very interesting field, was foundation work. In such a community, the building up of a church is not the work of a day, or of a year. The Lord has every year furnished me with some precious material to build upon the foundation that I had attempted to lay in His name. In ten years, between forty and fifty have been received upon examination into the church. Some of these are now pillars in the Lord's house; others are valuable private members of both sexes—and some dear souls, as I trust, have been invited up higher, to become inhabitants of that house not made with hands. I now feel that the sweetest of my remembrances, both in this world and in the world to come, may be those connected with my missionary labours in Macon and Cherokee counties.

From another in the Pines of New Jersey.

In taking my leave of the service of the Board, to resume the charge of a much-beloved congregation in Kentucky. I would say that I consider these two years of missionary labour as among the most instructive and profitable of my life. Not a few discouragements, difficulties, and trials have I been called to meet, and by the grace of God, enabled to surmount. If my poor advice could reach the ears of those dear brethren who are seeking in vain for what shall seem to them "a suitable field" of labour, I would earnestly exhort them to seize upon the first opportunity that is granted them of going to work in God's vineyard, leaving the care of themselves to His Providence, and remembering that the harder the field the better its discipline.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of money may be made to Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer, Mechanics Bank, Philadelphia.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE LOW STATE OF RELIGION A CAUSE OF DECLINE IN THE NUMBER OF CANDIDATES.

One of the causes operating to deter young men from the ministry, is the low state of religion in the Church.

The office of ambassador of Jesus Christ requires piety as its first and essential qualification, and piety of a high order. The earnest outgoings of a renewed heart towards the Lord of life adapt it to pursue his glory, wherever Providence may guide. In a high condition of religious prosperity, a Church may always hope to see her sons dedicating themselves to the ministry. The motions of piety then investigate all questions of duty, and the cry is often heard, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" But when religion languishes, her higher aims become obscured, the spiritual discernment of her disciples impaired, and worldliness intrudes with a deceptive and conquering fascination. Few young men enter the ministry in a lukewarm Church. And the present state of religion within our bounds, although not obnoxious to the charge of any particular defection, is, nevertheless, justly chargeable with some of the results of our ministerial decline. Revivals have not been numerous during the year. Some precious outpourings of the Divine Spirit have been, indeed, experienced in various portions of the vineyard of the Lord; but general vigour of Christian life has not been a characteristic of our annual history. Until a higher standard of piety is adopted in the churches, and more earnest efforts are made for the salvation of sinners in the means of God's appointment, few of our present youth will enter the ministry, and the prospect of the accession of others is proportionably hopeless.

THE MINISTRY SUFFERS FROM IMPERFECT HOUSEHOLD TRAINING.

Imperfect attention to household dedication and the training of the youth of the Church, is another of the more obvious causes of a ministry of impeded growth. The household arrangement, including parental authority, family ties, reciprocal affection, the dependence of children, &c., is one of the most hopeful reliances of Christianity. God has ordained blessings for the world through the benign influences of Christian homes. How few of the ministers of the Presbyterian Church have not felt the constraining energy of parental consecration and training, in the formation of character, and in the choice of their profession! Pious fathers and mothers, with the earnest solicitude of Christian zeal, have been the instruments in the hands of Providence in giving a scriptural direction to the habits and aims of their children, which God has afterwards sanctified, by bringing many of them into the ministry.

Any considerable improvement, either in the number or character of our ministry, must depend upon the increased cultivation of the opportunities afforded by Divine Providence for household nurture. Here is one of the great defects of our Church. Children are too frequently allowed to grow up without a religious bias; with minds too unimbued with the spirit and principles of Christ; and even where a religious education has been systematically carried forward, there is too often cherished on the part of parents, a disinclination towards the sacred profession. The true power of family training on the increase of the ministry has never yet been fully realized. It will be a glorious day in Zion when fathers and mothers shall imbibe the spirit of holy Hannah, and early consecrate their offspring to the Lord of the harvest; when every Christian home shall endeavour to obtain for the Church the blessing of a Christian minister, and when the real resources of the family shall be developed in all the richness of evangelical faith, and in all the abundance of sanctified education.

MORTALITY AMONG MINISTERS.

Another fact, having a close connection with the want of increase in our candidates, is the large mortality with which God has seen fit to visit the Church during the past year. No fewer than thirty-six standard-bearers have been summoned to their rest, since the meeting of the last Assembly.

These departed servants of the Lord have been taken away at every period of life. The youthful soldier, who just commenced his work in the armies of the living God, has been buried by the side of the aged warrior, who bore the toil of many a conflict, and the reward of many a victory.

Their fields of labour have been as various as the periods of their service. Alexander, and Graham, and Davis, and Chamberlain, and McConaughy, were engaged in the sacred duty of directing the education of youth. Others were employed in preaching the word at the East, at the South, and at the West. One was a missionary to the heathen. One for many years superintended with eminent abilities the domestic missionary operations of the General Assembly; and one was a distinguished leader in the cause of Christ at the West.

Death found some at home; others away from relatives and friends. One was laid in the deep; others in the western prairies; others by our great water-courses; others in the soil of the sunny South.

The average character, talent, and service of the dead of 1852 are believed to be greater than that of those who remain. Some of the choicest spirits of our Zion have been removed to "the spirits of just men made perfect," to the general assembly and Church of the first born, and to Jesus the Mediator.

The loss of so many, and of such men, occurs under circumstances of solemn interest. The departure from earth of these thirty-six takes away nearly one-half of the increase of new labourers, and in quality, the diminution of ministerial power is beyond computation. It becomes the Church, however, to rejoice, that God is raising up other servants to fill the places of his departed ones, some of whom may hereafter attain by his grace to equal eminence of service. Of the new licentiates this year, about fifty have been sent forth by the parental kindness of the Church, displayed through the Board of Education.

The melancholy fact, however, exists, that whilst "the harvest truly is plenteous, the labourers are few." And never was there a period of the world when prayer to "the Lord of the harvest" was more earnestly demanded, in connection with the other active instrumentalities ordained of God to supply his Church with faithful preachers of the word.

ACTION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The following is the action of the General Assembly on the Annual Report of the Board of Education, presented on May 22d.

1. Resolved, That the claims of the home and foreign field demand a large increase in the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, and that a time when the candidates seem to be decreasing instead of increasing in number, and death to be multiplying its ravages in the ministerial ranks, it is especially incumbent on the Church to use all scriptural means, to train up her youth with more direct reference to the preaching of the everlasting gospel.

2. Resolved, That the Assembly recognise with gratitude the goodness of God in pouring out his grace upon several of our institutions of learning during the past year; and whilst the churches are invoked to pray without ceasing to the Lord of the harvest for the continuance of his favour, the last Thursday of February next is recommended for general observance as a day of special prayer for the Divine blessing upon the youth of our land, who are pursuing their studies in literary institutions, and especially that many of them may be called, and qualified by the grace of God, for the work of the ministry.

3. Resolved, That this Assembly re-affirms its testimony in regard to the importance of establishing education upon a religious basis, as recommended by preceding Assemblies, and viewing the Church as a party interested in education within its sphere, it invites its judicatories, according to their wisdom under their various circumstances, to see that the youth within their bounds have access to institutions of learning, where the truths and duties of religion shall be assiduously inculcated.

4. Resolved, That the Board of Education in its important departments of benevolent operation be recommended to the patronage of our churches, and that the Presbyteries and Synods endeavour to have its objects annually presented in such manner as may be deemed expedient with a view to increasing the means of educating pious young men for the ministry.

THE MINISTRY THE DIVINE PLAN OF BUILDING UP THE KINGDOM.

It is important, in the prosecution of the cause of ministerial education, to remember that its fundamental principle is established by the wisdom of God. The divine plan is to save men by the preaching of the cross. The living minister is the appointed instrumentality of unfolding the measures of redemption and of bringing a guilty world back to God.

The early adoption of a priesthood or ministry for the propagation and defence of the truth, and as the means of preserving the knowledge of God among men, is a fact clearly indicating the divine preference of this mode of administration. In patriarchal times, there were preachers of righteousness, raised up of God to testify in his behalf against the wickedness of the world. Enoch and Noah and the godly patriarchs all exercised this office. At the more formal organization of the Jewish dispensation, a whole tribe was solemnly set apart and consecrated to the service of God. Under the Old Testament was an extensive system of religious ceremonies and observances, in the administration of which the high priest, the priests and Levites had their appointed functions. The principle was transferred to the new dispensation. Our Lord exercised much care in the selection and training of his disciples. "When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. And he gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers." No ordinance of religion rests more emphatically upon divine authority than the arrangement of building up the Redeemer's kingdom through the agency of living ministers.

The wisdom of this divine plan is pre-eminently set forth by the assumption of the office of preacher by the Lord Jesus Christ. The prophetical is one of the offices which he executed, as the Redeemer of God's elect. The work of enlightening and teaching belongs to the infinite dignity of his nature and to the glory of his mediatorial person. When he was upon earth, a chief part of his office was to preach the gospel of the kingdom. Throughout Galilee, Samaria, and Judea he was known as the prophet of Heaven, who spake with authority and not as the scribes. The true spirit of the ministerial work was manifested in the love and labours of the life of Christ. Whenever there was a sinner ready to hear, there was a teacher ready to instruct. Whether by the well-side, or way-side, in the harvest field, on the mountain, in the desert, on the lake, in the synagogue, in the houses of publicans, or at the temple gates, the Lord of glory was the condescending prophet to unfold the truth of God to dying men. He thus magnified in his own person the office of the gospel ministry, and imparted a peculiar dignity to his ascension gifts which he bequeathed as the hope of "every creature."

AMERICAN EDUCATION SOCIETY.

Receipts of the Society and its auxiliaries, $27,376. Disbursements, $32,066.

The whole number of young men aided during the past year by the Parent Society and its auxiliaries, allowing 25 (about the usual number) for the Society at Auburn, from which we have no definite report, is 438. Of these, the Parent Society assisted 294; of whom 131 were engaged in the study of theology, and 163 were in college. Of the 294 assisted by the Parent Society, 168 were from New England, 44 were from the Middle States, 74 from the Western States, 3 from Canada, and 2 from Constantinople. 61 new applicants have been admitted to the patronage of the Society during the past year, and 31 have completed their course of theological study. The number aided by the Parent Society has been gradually on the increase for several years.

In 1845,	218
In 1846,	238
In 1847,	246
In 1848,	275
In 1849,	285
In 1850,	294
In 1851,	277
In 1852,	294

Many of the auxiliaries on the field of the Parent Society have for some time been quite deficient. Maine has received in appropriations to students within her institutions the past year, $1700. She has returned in contributions and legacies, only $274.32. Vermont has received in the same way, $560. She has returned $279.22. Connecticut has received $3110. She has returned $1081.21. New Hampshire the past year has more than paid, which has not occurred before for some years.

The amount of earnings by the beneficiaries of the Parent Society during the past year is $15,345, showing that a sum almost equal to that which we have sent out to these young men in appropriations has been earned by themselves.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

THE CHURCH A PARTY TO EDUCATION.

In the first place, the Church is a party to education, because the TRUE OBJECTS and NATURE OF EDUCATION NECESSARILY INCLUDE THE INCULCATION OF RELIGION.

The idea of training up an immortal being with no higher aim than to qualify him for certain duties in this life, is one of the false and popular maxims of the day. Education, in its true aim, takes a wider range than the life that now is, and comprehends both the mortal and the immortal destiny of its subjects.

The true object of education includes religion. The training work has reference to all the powers capable of being trained, whether intellectual, moral, or physical. The mind is not the only part of the complex being which is to be subjected to the influences of education; but the feelings, and especially the moral feelings and discernments, claim the right of culture as inherent and essential elements of humanity. True philosophy acknowledges the conscience as an important department in the constitution of the human soul; not an appendage, to be neglected or not according to circumstances, but a constituent of the nature of man, susceptible of cultivation, and greatly needing it under all the exigencies of human depravity. Under no circumstances, then, can religion be properly excluded from a system of education. It enters into the training system as naturally and lawfully as any other branch of knowledge; and if its importance be taken into view, it is the last branch of instruction that ought to be undervalued. Indeed, it can only be banished from institutions of learning on principles which are as unfounded in true philosophy as in genuine piety, and which, by degrading man to a mere creature of intellect, cast indignity upon his moral and immortal powers.

The right of religion to form a part in the course of instruction is further evident when the nature of education is carefully considered. Education is an enlightening process. It adds to the stores of knowledge. It delivers from ignorance, and enriches with instruction. It developes the mind, and, in the process of developing, it furnishes materials of thought and prepares it for an increase of acquisitions. Now shall education enlighten the human soul on all branches of knowledge, except those which relate to divine truth? Does not the very fact that the training is an enlightening system prove that religious, the highest kind of all knowledge, ought to be included among its lasting and precious results?

But education also secures the discipline and strengthening of the faculties. This is no insubordinate but a prominent result. A thorough course of instruction always invigorates and disciplines, as well as enlightens. The mind acquires a self-control, a readiness to use its powers, a capacity of enlargement, which cannot be over-estimated. And is it right, under circumstances of such advantage, to omit the discipline of the moral faculties, to pass over the subjection of the conscience and of the will to the law of God and to the gospel of Christ? No considerations of worldly policy can justify the neglect of opportunities which can never be recovered, for strengthening the immortal part of our nature.

Again: Education, in its nature, is a moulding process. It forms character, and gives direction to destiny. It has the elements of power. It controls the life, and sends forth its influences into eternity. No human being can undergo the processes of a course of education without receiving impressions for good or evil, which pass on with his years. There is a formative energy which works throughout the soul. The absence of religion in such a process leaves human nature to its own corruption, and destroys any well-grounded hope of moral and religious development, which is "the chief end of man." Education without religion is one of the most dangerous and heaven-daring experiments ever devised by man. It is not necessary that the course of instruction should be pervaded by an irreligious spirit, in order to render it hazardous in its moulding influences. The mere absence of religion, like the withholding of the good seed, insures the growth of weeds and thistles on the human soil. Negation of good is in all ordinary circumstances the very presence of evil.

If education enlightens, invigorates, and moulds, then religion must participate with its divine and holy truth in giving light, vigour, and direction throughout the whole course of instruction. And if the claims of religion are so prominent and authoritative in the educational work, as indicated by the objects and nature of education, it is clear that the Church, which is the guardian of the former, is one of the parties to take an interest in the latter.

METHODIST INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING.

Whatever doubt there may be in the minds of some in our Church, about the policy of religious education under the Church's care, there is no doubt that other denominations of Christians are acting on this principle with increasing vigour, and that they will carry it into execution just as fast and as extensively as Providence may seem to indicate. Let us see what the Methodists are doing in this country, in the matter of education.

A report on education, made to the late General Convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Boston, gives a tabular view of the literary institutions which have come into existence in that connection. There are no less than eight colleges, with property and funds amounting to $494,063. The oldest of them, at Middletown, was founded in 1830. There are forty-six academies and seminaries, the oldest of which is that at Wilbraham, founded 1829, under the auspices of the lamented Wilbur Fisk. In twenty-nine of these there are 4936 students, an average of 170 to each. The committee, of which Professor Whedon was chairman, say well in their report:

"Our work is not done when we have constructed a system of academies, and crowned them with colleges. We are not only to bring these advantages within reach of our young men, but we are to bring our young men into the actual use of these advantages. We must take hold of our young men, recall them to a sense of duty to the Church and to God; they must be directed to the great importance of intellectual and moral cultivation; and if, under proper inquiry, they give proof of being moved by the Holy Ghost, and inspired by the sense of duty, let them assume the sacred calling; and we may hope thus to possess a ministry for the times. If, however, the intimations of Providence require their occupying a secular position, they will bless the Church scarcely less, by filling the ranks of a cultivated Christian laity."

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL OF APPLE CREEK CHURCH, MISSOURI.

Dear Sir—I am requested by the session of this church to make the second semi-annual report of our Parochial School.

The number of scholars during the last half of the year has, as well as during the first half, been small, averaging from fifteen to twenty scholars, though forty different ones have been connected with the school within the last six months. The attendance of the pupils has been greatly interrupted by sickness. Twice the school has been nearly broken up. So far as we know, there has been universal satisfaction with the progress of the pupils in their studies. The school has been regularly opened with reading the Scriptures by all that were able to read them and with prayer, and closed with singing. The Shorter Catechism has all been committed by most of the pupils and reviewed two or three times by those who have attended school regularly. The Catechism for Young Children, published by the Board of Publication has also been studied by some of the small scholars.

The most interesting item that we have to report, is the religious interest which has been manifest in the school. During the year there have been five hopeful conversions in the school; of these, three since our last report. Besides these, others have been deeply impressed upon the subject of religion, and at least one other indulged hope in Christ, just after leaving the school. Ten of the other pupils were members of the church. Four of those who have been the longest time connected with the school are now engaged in teaching. Two of them open their schools with prayer and close with singing. In regard to the others I am not informed, but I hope they do the same. I hope we shall be able to sustain the school, and that it will prove to the Church, as I trust it has already been, a nursery of true piety. By order of Session,

A. MUNSON, Moderator.

In addition to the above report, I would say that I find one great difficulty in sustaining a parochial school here, arises from this, that the people have been in the habit of having district schools kept up about three months in the year, or just enough to consume the public money, and as soon as that is gone, the school stops by general consent. All would be delighted with a parochial school, if there were public funds to sustain it, but comparatively few think they can afford to pay for more than a quarter's tuition at a time. They are, to be sure, poorly enough able to pay much for the education of their children, but the greatest part of the difficulty arises from the formation of a bad habit. This must be overcome by degrees. A change of feeling in regard to this matter is gradually taking place. I hope that the Church, at least, will soon learn that training the intellect, while neglecting the heart, is poor policy. I feel deeply interested in the scheme of Christian education that has been entered upon by our church. And had "the school and the kirk" always existed together, no doubt the Church would have been in a much healthier state than it is now. I hoped we should not have occasion to ask any further aid from the Board for the support of our school, but we are obliged to do it. I have, from the beginning employed one teacher upon my own responsibility, as the session were afraid to assume it. With the aid derived from the Board, I have kept from becoming involved, and I have just made another engagement with the teacher to go on with the school the coming year. I have given a good deal of my own time and attention to the school the past year, and expect to do so in time to come. We ask the Board for an appropriation of forty dollars for the coming year. I send an extract from the minutes of Presbytery at their late meeting.

EDUCATIONAL TRUTHS.

TRUE AIM OF EDUCATION.—Education ought to agree with our two-fold destination: it ought to prepare a child for two successive states of existence: he is, at the same time, a weak creature, sent into the world to suffer and die, and an immortal spirit that is to pass away into eternity. We are so constituted, that our nature harmonizes with both these vocations. The soul is endowed with some faculties which relate only to its sojourn on earth, and with others which carry its hopes and views beyond this world. Both ought to be cultivated by education. Since God has not thought fit to call us directly to himself, but has obliged us to seek him by the path of human life, it becomes the strict duty of an instructor to furnish his pupil with every thing necessary for his journey.

THE BIBLE IN EDUCATION.—If my opinion will be of any use, I give it most cheerfully in favour of making the Bible a text-book in the school, the academy, the college, and the university. To say nothing of its literature, which, in my judgment, is unrivalled, it contains not only the purest system of morals, but the soundest maxims of political economy, and the most exact delineations of human nature, to be found on earth. There is more in it to make a man great as well as good, than there is in any other volume. Men cannot be well educated without the Bible. It ought, therefore, to hold the chief place in every institution of learning throughout Christendom; and I do not know of a higher service that could be rendered to this republic, than the bringing about this desirable result.—Dr. Nott.

DR. WAUGH'S MODE WITH HIS CHILDREN.—There are some parents, who, in their eagerness to make doctrinal points plain to their children, debase them by vulgar phrases and familiar allusions; but this he never did: and while some by excessive softness encourage children to trifle with their religious exercises, and to deem it of little consequence how they acquit themselves to them in such a task, there was no point of paternal duty to which he was more strictly attentive; well knowing that piety to God is the only soil in which the social virtues can be securely planted in the human heart. He was partial to the Catechisms of his native country, for the soundness of their sentiments, and for the conciseness and accuracy of their expressions, and because they recalled so tenderly to his mind the period when he used to repeat them, standing beside his father's knee, and when his mother drew from them the counsels by which she laboured to make him wise unto salvation. In his work of catechising and instructing his children, he never suffered anything to interfere. An hour every Saturday evening was devoted to this purpose; and amidst all the multiplicity of his public avocations, the incessant calls on his time by private applicants, and his preparations for the ministerial services of the ensuing Sabbath, this duty was never neglected.—Life of Dr. Waugh.

EARLY RELIGIOUS TRAINING.—None but such as have closely watched the effect of early religious training, can estimate its powerful effect upon the whole of the after life. The members of our churches thus trained, other things being equal, are worth almost double as much in efficiency and consistency as those who were not. A minister in one of our Presbyteries in a Presbyterian sermon stated, "that one of the churches connected with the Presbytery had, some years since, added about one hundred and sixty persons as the fruit of a revival of religion, and out of eighteen cases of discipline that had occurred, of that number, not one had enjoyed in youth the advantages of a religious education."

PROTESTANT FOLLY.—Much is said of Popish follies and absurdities—with very good reason, too; but it may be doubted, whether any Popish folly or absurdity surpasses that of Protestants, when they give their money to build Romish churches and cathedrals, when they send their sons and daughters to Romish schools and convents, when they employ Romish nurses and domestics who refuse to come to the family altar, and when they rely on the Protestant atmosphere of the country to convert Catholics, while the divinely appointed means of conversion are neglected.

RELIGION IN EDUCATION.—The Rev. Thomas H. Gallaudet says: "I am more and more confirmed in my views, not only from the perusal of the sacred Scriptures, from the observation of my own heart, and from the study of human nature.

"I am no friend of metaphysical subtleties, or of straining points in theology—above all, in the education of youth. I would labour to present the truths of the gospel in their simplest, plainest, and most attractive forms. Especially would I endeavour to make them intelligible to the youthful mind.

"I have been toiling for more than seven years to teach the human mind in its most unsophisticated state, and I must unhesitatingly say, as the result of my experience, that what are usually called 'evangelical doctrines,' are the best adapted to the spiritual wants of man, and best calculated to lead him into the paths of piety, of peace, and of solid happiness."

WISDOM FOR THE YOUNG.—Confucius asked the fowlers, busy with snares, if they caught the young birds. "No," said they, "not while the old birds are with them. If these were away, we could easily catch the young." "True," responded Confucius, "it is so with all: take away the wisdom of ages, and we are easily ensnared."

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, June 14, 1852.

China.—Letters have been received from Ningpo, March 10; Shanghai, March 18; Canton, March 27. The missionaries at Ningpo felt strongly the importance of forming a station at Chinhai, a city at the mouth of the Ningpo river. We hope to find room in our next number for their letter, giving their views of this measure. At Shanghai, a school of twelve girls as boarders, and nine day scholars, conducted by Mrs. Bridgeman, of the American Board of Missions, was placed under the care of Mrs. Wight, during the absence of Dr. and Mrs. Bridgeman on a visit to this country for health.

India.—Our last letters are dated at Lahor, March 22; Lodiáná, April 7; Saharunpur, April 6; Futtehgurh, April 8; Mynpurie, April 10; Agra, April 7; Allahabad, April 3. The schools at Lahor contained about 130 boys. Mr. and Mrs. Porter had just returned from a missionary tour of nearly six weeks in the Panjáb. Messrs. Campbell, Caldwell, Morrison, and Orbison, with three native assistants, were attending the mela at Hardwar. Mr. and Mrs. Ullman had reached their station at Futtehgurh; and Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, at Mynpurie. One of the church members at Futtehgurh had been called to her rest, sweetly supported in her last hours by the same grace which had shone in her daily life as a Christian. One of the young men had fallen before temptation. Two others were received as members of the Church. One of the brethren writes, "There are discouraging events, but there are others that cheer and encourage us. What we want is, more prayer, prayer for a rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon us, our Christians, and the heathen. We pray for this. Ask the churches to help us." At Agra a school has been opened for boys of Anglo-Indian parentage. The number of persons of this class is considerable and increasing. Allied to both the European and the native population, and speaking commonly both the English and the native languages, they are destined to become a more and more influential part of the inhabitants of India. They are of course inured to the climate, and acquainted with the customs of the country which is their home. They have already furnished some valuable labourers in the missionary field. It is hoped that many more may be prepared amongst them for great usefulness. Our missionaries have always regarded this portion of the inhabitants with much interest, and have at length been enabled, with the sanction of the Executive Committee, to commence an institution intended specially for their benefit. It is with pleasure we learn that its prospects of success are most favourable. A more extended account of this matter will be given hereafter. At Allahabad, Mr. Owen has made some missionary excursions during the vacation, and some of the native assistants and older students were sent out two and two for the purpose of distributing tracts.

Africa.—Advices have been received from Monrovia to the 12th of April, and from Corisco to the 13th of February. Miss Isabel Sweeny had safely arrived at Corisco. The health of the missionaries was good, and their labours were continued without interruption. Mr. Mackey says, "There is immediate and urgent need for three or four missionary families here. . . . A short time ago one of the principal men from the opposite side of this island called on me, to know the reason why I did not go and preach at his town. He said he wanted to hear this word that I declared to the people, and he wanted me to preach to his own people. Were I to attempt to meet all the calls that are made on me to see the sick, to attend palavers, and to preach the gospel, I would soon sink under it. Why is it that so few of the young brethren are willing to set their faces towards Africa?"

Omaha and Otoe Mission.—A letter of the Rev. E. McKinney, of May 20th, says, "We hope and pray that the Committee will succeed in getting us some help."

THE ANNUAL REPORT.

Under the present Postage Laws, the postage on this document must be paid in advance. In order to diminish this expense on copies sent by mail, it has been considered expedient to strike off a part of the edition on paper of a lighter kind than usual. They will present a fair and good appearance, and be suitable for distribution. Those who wish to preserve the Report for binding and permanent reference, will be supplied with duplicate copies on better paper by remitting the postage, which is seven cents under 500 miles, and fourteen cents over that distance. We hope this notice will lead to an extended circulation of the Report.

A BRIEF ABSTRACT

OF THE FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS: MAY 1, 1852.

Finances: The receipts from all sources were,	$144,922,90
Add balance of last year,	136,16
	145,059,06
The expenditures were,	144,472,48
Leaving a balance in the Treasury, of	$586,58

Publications: The Board has continued to occupy a part of the Home and Foreign Record, and to publish The Foreign Missionary—of which 21,500 copies are issued monthly. Of the Fourteenth Annual Report, 4300 copies were published, and a number of missionary tracts.

Agencies: The Rev. H. R. Wilson has acted as Agent in the Synods of Pittsburgh, Wheeling, and Ohio; the Rev. W. S. Rogers, chiefly in the Synods of Cincinnati, Indiana, Northern Indiana, and Memphis; the Rev. R. L. Breck, for ten months, in the Synods of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri; the Rev. F. P. Monfort, for five months, in the Synods of Indiana, Northern Indiana, and Illinois; and the Rev. W. H. McAuley, for ten months, in the Synod of Alabama.

Missionaries sent out: Thirty persons were sent forth as missionaries and assistant missionaries during the year—some of whom were returning to their fields of labour.

Indian Missions: Among the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles, Iowas and Sacs, Omahas and Ottoes, Chippewas and Ottawas—the Rev. Messrs. A. Reid, H. Balentine, J. Edwards, A. M. Watson, R. M. Loughridge, J. R. Ramsay, W. H. Templeton, W. Hamilton, S. M. Irvin, E. McKinney, and P. Dougherty; Messrs. J. G. Turner, G. Ainslie, J. E. Dwight, J. S. Betz, T. Judson, J. S. Allan, L. W. Davies, J. McCarter, W. S. Robertson, J. G. Junkin, M. D., J. B. Junkin, J. Lilley, J. D. Bemo, D. E. Read, J. K. Whiteside, D. Rodd, and A. Porter; twenty-eight females, teachers, and the wives of missionaries and assistant missionaries. Four of these labourers are natives. The Rev. A. W. Loomis and wife, of the Ningpo Mission, will be connected for the present with the Creek Mission. In the schools, 368—of whom 325 are boarded and clothed by the missions. Church members reported 93. Most of these missions are in an encouraging condition. More laymen are urgently needed at several stations, as teachers and other assistants.

African Missions: In Liberia, three stations, among the Kroos, and on the island of Corisco, near the equator:—the Rev. Messrs. D. A. Wilson, J. M. Priest, and J. L. Mackey; Messrs. B. V. R. James, H. W. Erskine, and W. McDonough; three females, teachers, and the wife of a missionary; scholars, 163—of whom six are boarders; church members reported, 96. The Rev. G. W. Simpson and wife, of the Corisco Mission, were called suddenly to their rest, while on a short voyage, the vessel being lost in a tornado. The Rev. H. W. Ellis is no longer connected with the mission in Liberia. The Alexander High School has been opened with favourable prospects under the Rev. D. A. Wilson. The Corisco Mission continues to present a most important and inviting field of labour, and more labourers are greatly needed.

India Missions: Lodiana, Furrukhabad, and Allahabad—with ten stations; the Rev. Messrs. J. Newton, C. W. Forman, Golok Nath, J. Porter, L. Janvier, A. Rudolph, J. H. Orbison, J. R. Campbell, J. Caldwell, J. S. Woodside, J. M. Jamieson, J. H. Morrison, J. J. Walsh, A. H. Seeley, J. F. Ullman, D. E. Campbell, Gopeenath Nundy, J. E. Freeman, J. Wilson, J. L. Scott, R. S. Fullerton, J. Warren, J. Owen, R. M. Munnis, L. G. Hay, and H. W. Shaw; twenty-one females, the wives of missionaries; twenty-one native assistants; church members reported, 231; scholars, chiefly in schools of a high grade, 1914—of whom 117 are boarded and clothed by the missions. Issues of the press, 4,797,160 pages. An extended system of stated and itinerant preaching, Christian teaching in schools of various kinds, translating, printing and distributing the sacred Scriptures and other religious books, &c., is steadily carried forward. More labourers are needed. The work is great, but the signs of progress are cheering.

Siam Mission: At Bangkok, the Rev. Messrs. S. Mattoon and S. Bush; S. R. House, M. D.; Mrs. Mattoon; one native assistant. Mrs. Bush was called to her rest in July. The prospects of this mission have become full of encouragement, and more labourers are urgently called for.

China Missions: Canton, Ningpo, and Shanghai; the Rev. Messrs. A. P. Happer, J. B. French, R. Q. Way, J. W. Quarterman, H. V. Rankin, S. N. D. Martin, W. A. P. Martin, M. S. Culbertson, J. K. Wight, and J. Byers; Messrs. D. B. McCartee, M. D., and M. S. Coulter; eleven females; a teacher, and the wives of missionaries; church members reported, 19; in the schools, 206 pupils—of whom 87 are boarders; issues of the press, 2,808,160 pages. These missions are also attended with marked encouragement and call for additional labourers.

European Missions: among Romanists, in Hungary, Italy, France and Belgium. Moneys have been remitted as in former years for the support of native ministers and colporteurs. The sum of $4500 was thus expended last year.

Mission to the Jews: At New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, the Rev. Messrs. J. Neander and B. Steinthal, and Mr. F. J. Neuhaus, a licentiate preacher, have continued to labour among their kinsmen according to the flesh. The health of the Rev. M. R. Miller having become impaired, he has resigned his appointment in this mission.

Particular details of these Missions cannot be given in this brief abstract; but their general condition is undoubtedly cheering to the friends of the missionary work. Notwithstanding some severe afflictions, the favour of God's providence is manifested towards them, in a marked degree. What appears now most to be required is the outpouring of the Spirit of grace on our missionary brethren, their congregations and schools, so that the work of conversion may be witnessed in a still more remarkable degree. For this object, the prayers of the churches should be offered without ceasing.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

LETTERS FROM A MISSIONARY IN INDIA TO HIS CHILDREN IN AMERICA.—NO. IX.

Hindu Chronology.

The Hindus divide time into four ages, denominated Jugs or Yugs. Of these there are the Satya, the Treta, the Dwápor, and the Kálá Yug. They are said by the Hindus, to comprise four million, three hundred and twenty thousand years—the age they have assigned to the world. Three of these ages are supposed to have passed since the creation; and of the fourth, which is the present, and is to consist of four hundred and thirty-two thousand years, four thousand nine hundred and fifty-two have elapsed. At the expiration of this age, all things terrestrial are to be destroyed. In the Satya Yug, or Golden Age, vice was unknown. White-robed innocence associated with the virtuous sons and daughters of men unsullied. Celestial spirits rejoiced to leave their regions of light and glory, to tabernacle on earth. Such was the pristine state of the world for one million and seven hundred and twenty-eight thousand years. To this succeeded the Treta Yug, comprising one million two hundred and ninety-six thousand years. Then the Dwápor, consisting of eight hundred and sixty-four thousand. The present is the Kálá Yug—an age fruitful of all wickedness, in which virtue can nowhere thrive, and from which truth has taken a long flight. The sages are no longer revered, nor the gods propitiated. The sceptre has fallen from the hands of the Solar and Lunar races, and the sons of Brahma are thrust aside by the unclean Sudar. The white-faced descendants of the demon Ráwaná, who waged war with Ram, for the empire of Ceylon, have sprung up from behind the black water, and brought into subjection the land of the gods. The heaven-descended and deified Ganges is ploughed by the infernal fire-boat, and its sacred waters withdrawn to supply the canals of the unclean. Magical wires transmit news from the ocean to Calcutta with the rapidity of lightning, and will soon enable the north, and south, and east, and west, to converse as face to face. The Smoke Waggon is beginning to traverse the plains of India, and usurp the place of the elephant and camel. All is innovation in the Kálá Yug. The periods of the world are divided in proportion as virtue is supposed to have decreased in the golden, silver, copper, and iron ages. This division the Hindus believe to have been made by the gods. But it appears to be merely astronomical.

In the Institutes of Menu it is written, "A month is a day and a night of the patriarchs, and is divided into the light and dark of the moon."

A complete revolution of the nodes and apsides forms a Kalpa, or day of Brahma, consisting of 4,320,000,000 years. But it is more probable that the Brahmans, in order to aggrandize themselves, and make their antiquity appear greater than that of any other nation, knowingly extended their chronology far beyond the truth. It does not bear the least resemblance to either nature or reason. Like the most of their sciences, it is mere assertion, and seems to have been designed by the priesthood to strike the minds of the unlettered laity with awe, instead of leading them to the truth.

Immured in the gloomy caverns and consecrated groves of Salsette and Elephanta, and inspired by the stupendous sculptures of their gods and goddesses overshadowing them, they cut loose their imaginations from the realities of time, and soared in wild delirium far beyond the limits of probability. Touched by their magic wand time became infinity, the hero a god, and the squalid devotee the subduer of heaven and earth. Invention took the place of fact, fable of truth, and superstition of religion. "A thousand great ages, or a thousand times the four Yugs, say the Hindu poets, are a day of Brahma; a thousand such days are an hour of Vishnu; six hundred thousand such hours make a period of Neshaden; and a million such periods, or two quadrillions, five hundred and ninety-two thousand trillions of years are but a second of Brahm." Such rhapsody is a fair specimen of the absurdity of Hindu chronology. Nothing more repugnant to reason was ever invented by the most fabulous of Nature's untutored sons. The three passed ages of the Hindus must be discarded as wholly mythological. The present is the only one which contains any historical truth. Its commencement is generally fixed by European chronologists subsequent to the flood, or about two thousand years before the Christian era, and into this period must be brought all the events of Hindu history.

To the Christian chronologist it is no small consolation to be able to find in the histories of all nations, however fabulous, many gems of truth, borrowed from the inspired record. He takes delight in girding himself to the task of clearing away what is fictitious, and reconciling systems, which, to the superficial observer, seem the most contradictory, with this standard. Every truth, whether historical, scientific, or religious, is consistent with every other truth. Hence, although obscured by the superincumbent rubbish of ages, whenever it is discovered, it adds new lustre to the source of all truth.

Happily for the cause of truth, there is a striking similarity between the Mosaic and Hindu accounts of the creation and deluge.

Narain, which is translated moving on the water, is said to have brooded on the world of waters before the creation, and thus produced the mundane egg, from which Brahma created the heavens and the earth. Manú, the son of Brahma, who is the Hindu Adam, is called Adim in Sanscrit, and means the first. Five munies, or sages, are said to have succeeded the first Manu; but there is scarcely anything recorded of them. Of the seventh, who is supposed to be the Noah of the Bible, much is written. In his reign it is said the whole human race was destroyed by a flood, except himself and seven sages, with their wives. In the Bhágwata it is written, "The demon Hayagriva, having purloined the Veds from the custody of Brahma, while he was reposing at the close of the sixth Manroontra, the whole race of men became corrupt, except the seven Rishis, and Satyavrata, who reigned in Dravira. This prince was performing his ablutions in the river Kritamála, when Vishnu appeared to him in the shape of a small fish, and after several augmentations of bulk in different waters, was placed by Satyavrata in the ocean, whence he thus addressed his amazed votary. 'In seven days all creatures who have offended me shall be destroyed by a deluge, but thou shalt be secure in a capacious vessel, miraculously formed; take therefore all kinds of medicinal herbs, and esculent grain for food, and together with the seven holy men, and your respective wives, and pairs of all animals, enter the ark without fear; then shalt thou know God face to face, and all thy questions shall be answered.' Saying this, he disappeared; and after seven days, the ocean began to overflow the coasts, and the earth to be flooded by constant showers, when Satyavrata, meditating on the Deity, saw a large vessel moving on the waters: he entered it, having in all respects conformed to the instruction of Vishnu; who, in the form of a vast fish, suffered the vessel to be tied with a great sea-serpent, as with a cable, to his measureless horn. When the deluge had ceased, Vishnu slew the demon, and recovered the Veds, instructed Satyavrata in divine knowledge, and appointed him the seventh Manu, by the name of Voivaswata, or sun-born."

There can be no doubt but the above story has reference to the deluge of Noah, and that it was derived from the Bible. The eldest son of the seventh Manu was Ikshwáku. He is said to have been the first sovereign who established a kingdom in India. Between his time and that of Ram, who flourished about twelve hundred years before the Christian era, fifty-seven princes are said to have reigned over the Hindus. To the ages and rule of these princes, periods are assigned far beyond the course of nature. Some of them are said to have reigned twenty-seven thousand years. But fortunately for us, while the time of each reign has been thus exaggerated, their number has not been augmented beyond the appearance of reality. Modern chronologists, therefore, taking advantage of this favourable feature of the royal genealogies, strike off some thousands of years from each reign, and reckoning thirty years for a generation, bring the fifty-seven princes within a period of about two thousand years. This mode of reckoning brings the Hindu chronology to correspond with the authentic chronology of the Jews, the Chaldeans, the Egyptians, and Greeks, and is, perhaps, as near the truth as we can approximate.

Between the time of Rám and the last prince of the Solar race, who flourished near the commencement of our era, the Shastras give fifty-six reigns. Fifty-six years before Christ the celebrated Vikramaditya ascended the throne, and it was, probably, while his successor was sovereign of India, that our Saviour became "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." He was the founder of the present Hindu era, which is in general use. The last Hindu sovereign of whom we have any account, flourished about the year of our Lord 1000. A short time after this, their mighty empire became subject to the fierce followers of the False Prophet, and their glory departed, never to return.

The Hindus, however, are still proud of their assumed antiquity. Compared with their chronology, ours dwindles to insignificance. Although their sages, and heroes, and mighty empire, have long since passed away, and their incarnations no longer descend from heaven to deliver them from their oppressors, they still boast of a literature, sacred books, and stupendous miracles, which bear the semblance of infinity. What, they say, is your little pocket Bible in comparison with our pondrous shastras? It is but of yesterday, ours are eternal. What is the story of your Saviour, compared with that of our Krishn and Ram? Where was your religion a hundred years ago? If you have the true religion, why did you not let us hear of it sooner? Your Bible does not inform you if God is white or black, or describe his shape. It can be read through in a few days. The longest life is too short to read even a tithe of our shastras. I sometimes reply to such objections as follows—Suppose you wish to visit Calcutta, and ask me to furnish you with directions for the way. But instead of complying with your wishes, I write you a long disquisition on my colour, size, and shape. What would you think of it? God did not reveal his word to satisfy our idle curiosity, but to direct us in the way of heaven.

This pride of antiquity, and contempt for the simplicity of truth, is one of the greatest obstacles to the spread of the gospel among the Hindus. Our preaching is literally foolishness to them, and our doctrines a stumbling-block. They have no love for truth in any shape, and know nothing of its power. It is, however, forcing itself on them in various ways, and will, with the blessing of God, chase away the dark mass of superstition and falsehood which rest on India, as easy as the morning cloud is dispelled by the rising sun.

Your affectionate father,

J. M. Jamieson.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. J. J. WALSH: APRIL 8, 1852.

Sickness and deaths at Futtehgurh—Happy death of a Church Member—Hopes disappointed.

We have had a very sickly season of it, and in consequence a great number of deaths, no less than eleven during the last two months—two of which were grown up people in the village, and three girls of the Asylum. The others were young children. The two of the village were Chunná and Elizabeth Manaydiér. Chunná, I am sorry to say, gave us no hope whatever. He was a complete miser—his heart was set on money, so much so that he could not dismiss it from his mind on his dying bed. I have reason to hope his case is a peculiar one, and oh! that it may prove a warning to others. But what a contrast was Elizabeth's death to Chunná's. She was ready to die and be with Christ. She was a sweet Christian, and could point to a consistent and humble walk with God as evidence of her being one with Christ. Her death was very much felt in the village, and has not been without a beneficial influence in leading others to think on the great subject of their personal salvation. I cannot give a particular account of all who died, and it is not necessary perhaps. There has been one very happy result in producing a feeling of seriousness and anxious inquiry among many of our people. At our communion on Sabbath last, we had the pleasure to receive two of our young men into the church, who attribute their first serious thoughts to the mortality amongst us. There was another examined, who gave very pleasing evidence of a great change having been wrought in her, but owing to the very recent time she had been under the exercise of these feelings, we preferred deferring her case till our next communion season comes around. Thus you see, we have our trials and our joys—and thus will it ever be during all our pilgrimage here below.

During this week my feelings have been very much tried by the sad misconduct of one of our young men, who has hitherto stood very high and fair. I refer to Cornelius, who after stealing some money and destroying papers containing the accounts, ran away. He was one of the young men chosen to conduct the tent-work, and up to the present time has given every satisfaction.

INDIA: ALLAHABAD MISSION.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER OF THE REV. J. OWEN: APRIL 3, 1851.

Missionary journeys—Native helpers—A thousand "Nagas"—Book-stalls in the city.

During the December vacation I made three preaching excursions, one forty miles to the West, one forty miles, and the other about twenty miles South; sometimes preaching in several villages daily. My second trip took me into a region of country that had never been visited by any missionary. Sometimes I walked through the country far away from any road, carrying with me the Hindu New Testament, from which I read parables, such as that of the "Lost Sheep," "The Prodigal Son," "The Rich Man and Lazarus," &c., and frequently the "Sermon on the Mount," accompanying all with the most simple explanation of the plan of salvation that I could possibly give, often as much as possible in their own village dialect. I look back to these excursions with great pleasure. But, O! the poor people are so thoroughly under the influence of the Brahmans! When shall this wretched bondage cease?

During the mela season I preached daily for about three weeks. Most of the time I attended the college the first part of the day, and then went and stayed till evening at the Mela. Mirza, Paul, Yonas, and George were all there, preaching in the tent and talking to the people outside. The mela was rather larger this year than it has been for some years back. Our tent was pitched on the dry bed of the Ganges, in the midst of the people, and we had multitudes around us constantly. We tried to confine the preaching as much as possible to the simple annunciation of the truths of the gospel, avoiding discussion and controversy, except when necessary. Sometimes discussion was necessary; we were really called to it, and then we did not shrink in the least from the task imposed on us. About a thousand nágás (very filthy, and almost naked devotees) were encamped not far from us, and these often figured largely in and around our tent. Herds of them, containing several hundreds, daily passed our tent, with most hideous shouting and music. I sometimes saw them assisting each other at their toilet, besmearing each other with a mixture of ashes and manure, and drawing it all through their long hair. I am almost sorry for calling them herds—poor creatures! They are immortal, and, unless washed in the blood of the Lamb, and purified by the Holy Spirit, they can never enter that holy place into which nothing cometh that worketh abomination. And why do we love them so little? May that love which brought Jesus from heaven to earth speedily fill the hearts of all his people. Much of God's truth was preached at the mela: let us pray that the Spirit may seal it on the hearts of many.

I have just returned from a pleasant visit to Phùlpúr. Paul and Thomas Cone Spencer have just returned from a missionary tour over the Ganges. Yonas and Thomas Janvier are still out on a tour south of the Jumna, and George and Melancthon Jacobus are west in the Doab.

I have recently established two book-stalls in the city; one at the Chauk, and the other at Kydganj. The former is attended by Paul and Thomas, and the latter by George and Melancthon daily, except Sabbaths, about an hour, frequently more, each evening after school, when people come to look at the books, and this leads to discussion, and gives opportunities for preaching. Yonas at the same hour preaches in the Blind and Leper Asylum. I go about on horseback to each place, seeing that all goes on properly, sometimes speaking a few words at each place—sometimes speaking principally at one place alone. Thus we are trying to act as much as possible on the aggressive. We have certainly an interesting corps of young labourers rising up around us. I need not ask you to pray much, and to ask others to pray that they may be thoroughly imbued with the Spirit of God. Yours affectionately.

LETTER OF THE REV. H. W. SHAW, MARCH 30, 1852.

Native labourers sent forth—A child left to perish, but rescued from death—Death of a valued missionary.

We have now just reached the close of another term in our college, and have this week given the younger boys an opportunity to enjoy their freedom to the full. Our vacation commenced on the 29th and closes with the week; the older students, with Paul, George and Yonas, have been sent out in different directions two by two, to talk with the people in the district, and distribute gratuitously and sell books and tracts in the native language and character. Before sending them out, they were all assembled at Mr. Owen's, who, after reading a portion of the 6th chapter of Ephesians, conversed with them and endeavoured to encourage them in this new trial of their faith, and sincerity of their Christian profession. It was interesting thus to meet with these young men, and unite with them in prayer, it seemed so much like the meetings I have so often attended at home, when we have bowed together to ask the Divine blessing upon tracts we have been about to distribute. Though it was a new, and to some extent an untried kind of labour, in which they expected to meet with much opposition of that peculiar kind most trying to the feelings; that is, sneers, scoffs, and ridicule; yet they started out with a great degree of alacrity and cheerfulness—each couple with their bundle of books and their Bibles. Two go to the borders of that mountain district, and forming a part of Bundlekund, which, until Mr. Owen's last itineration, had never been visited by any missionary. Two others go down upon the left bank of the Ganges, in the direction of Mirzapur, fetching a compass to the north. The other two are to join Mr. Owen at Phúlpúr, whither he has gone this morning, and where he intends spending a few days. The readiness with which these young men engage in such kinds of self-denying labour, compared with what it seems to have been formerly, speaks much in favour of the development of their Christian character.

As an illustration of the manner in which our Orphan Schools are occasionally supplied with new comers, as well as of the singular hard-heartedness of some Indian mothers, I may mention an incident which recently occurred. A native officer from the magistrate called upon us, accompanied by a woman having a basket on her head in which was an infant of about two weeks. This had been found on the morning of that day, a few miles from the city, lying in a field of grain, where it had been left to be devoured by some wild animal, or to perish with cold and hunger. The little outcast has been received and provided with a foster mother, at the expense of the Girls Orphan School. Female infanticide, it is to be feared, has by no means ceased, even in those provinces subject to British law.

You will be grieved to learn the sudden death of the Rev. J. J. Weitbrecht of the Church Missionary Society,—during eighteen years an earnest and indefatigable labourer in the work to which he had consecrated his life. The disease of which he died, the cholera, was fearfully rapid in its fatal work. On Wednesday evening, February 25th, he preached to his missionary brethren, at their Conference meeting in Calcutta, from Rev. ii. 10, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life;" and in his address said, "I feel that I myself am on the very borders of the heavenly land." On Sabbath evening he again preached from the text Rev. xxii. 20, "Surely I come quickly" &c., and soon after leaving the pulpit was attacked by the fatal disease, which on the following morning had accomplished its mission. In the evening his remains were borne to their final resting-place. Mr. Weitbrecht had been stationed at Burdwar. His sudden departure is a solemn warning to those from foreign lands. Though efficient in the posts assigned them, and, as far as man can judge, owned of God as his approved servants, by the abundant success which has attended his labours, yet when to us they appear best qualified for their important posts, and when their work seems laid out for many years, and we have so associated them with it in our minds as to make their continuance almost indispensable to its accomplishment, then suddenly, God in his mysterious providence, who sees not as man sees, declares their work to be accomplished, removes them from their field of labour, leaving us to contemplate with wonder and astonishment the stroke so unexpected, so incomprehensible. This valuable missionary has gone to his rest from a circle of great usefulness, in which he had moved with singleness of heart and purpose, with earnestness and zeal for many years. But the harvest was ready for the sickle, and he has been gathered in like a shock of corn fully ripe. May his mantle fall upon many who, like him, have forsaken parents, brothers and sisters, and homes, to make known to the perishing the way of life, and may a double portion of his spirit animate us all in the work he so much loved.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA, BY THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS. NO. IV.

Buddhism:—Its author; inventor of purgatory—Its introduction into China—Its prevalence—Principal object of worship and other Buddhas—Its doctrines; sad details.

Buddhism is the subject of this letter. It is a form of false religion which originated in India nearly ten centuries before the advent of Christ, and which has spread into all the eastern and northern parts of Asia. The author of it was Boodh or Buddha; born a prince, and himself king for a time; but he soon resigned the honours and cares of government, that he might devote himself wholly to religious matters.

It is recorded that he invented the doctrine respecting a purgatory, which became popular, or caused the tenets of the sect he wished to establish to be popular and to spread rapidly in his own and other countries. It is believed by his disciples that by contemplation he brought himself to a state of purity and perfection, and was annihilated, or absorbed into nothing. Some say that Vishnu, one of the Hindu triad, in his ninth avatar, or descent to the earth, assumed the form of Boodh.

This then is the object worshipped exclusively in some of the countries of Eastern Asia, and which in China is worshipped, more than any other of the gods, by nearly all the people. He is supposed to appear in three forms, viz: the past, present, and future Buddhas, or the "San Paou Fuh"—as they say in China—the three precious Fuh; Fuh, Fu, Fat, or Buddha being the same thing. This religion was brought into China in the year A. D. 66. The emperor Mingte of the Han dynasty, having heard of a new religion that had appeared at the west, sent a high officer to make inquiries, and to bring with him the books and some of the priests. Some have supposed that rumours respecting Christ and his doctrines had reached China, and the emperor, without having any distinct idea of what it was, or where it was to be found, sent to make inquiries. But, be the case as it may, the officer returned bringing two priests from India with their religious books. The emperor appointed persons to examine the books; the new doctrines were favourably reported upon, and the emperor became the patron for a time of this religion, temples were built by imperial favour, and from this beginning, and from these two priests has grown a sect in China numbering more than all others combined; and the priests of this religion now swarm in every part of that vast empire. Buddhist monasteries, nunneries, and temples, are numerous in every city, and are found wherever the eye turns upon the open country: they are generally the most prominent and expensive buildings in China. Travel wherever you may throughout the empire, you will never, I presume, be long out of sight of a towering pagoda; and you will scarce ever lose sight of one temple till you come upon another, and perhaps a score of them large and small; and at frequent intervals along the road you will be passing altars and shrines, some beautiful and highly finished, others of rough stones and nearly hid amongst bushes and grass that have grown over them. The first and strongest impression upon every person visiting the country is, that the inhabitants are wholly given to idolatry.

The principal object of worship by this sect, as already stated, is Buddha. But you will say, "How can this be? if he was absorbed into nothing, or annihilated, how can he still be a god, to hear and aid those who pray to him?" It is certainly very strange that his worshippers, who are human beings, and can think and reason, do not see their inconsistency. But Satan has blinded their eyes. They, like other heathen nations, have for many centuries been given up to believe a lie. After Buddha, the next most important is the goddess of mercy, who is the protectress of seamen. She is sometimes represented with a male child in her arms. This may easily, as sometimes is the case, be substituted by the Roman Catholics in China for the Virgin Mary and her son. The Buddhists have the goddess of the small-pox, the patroness of barren women, and the god of wealth. All absorbed into Buddha also themselves become Buddhas: they have also present Buddhas; these are persons of the greatest sanctity, so long absorbed in contemplation as to hardly seem to live. Such persons may be worshipped.

To adapt themselves to the predilections of the Chinese, they place in their temples gods belonging to other sects, and fall in with the notions of the people about demonology, and respect the worship of ancestors. Being tolerated by government and by the other sects, they in turn tolerate others.

In regard to the origin of the world, they teach that all things came from nothing, and will return to nothing. Thus, like all the religionists and philosophers in China, they teach nothing of a great first cause. Annihilation, or absorption into Buddha is the chief good. To arrive at this supreme of excellence and enjoyment, it is necessary to be absorbed in contemplation, withdraw the mind from all other objects, and think only of Buddha; to repeat his name, and have it constantly in the mind and on the tongue; for "he once swore," as it is said, "that if any one in all the ten worlds should, after repeating his name, fail to attain eternal life in his kingdom, he would cease to be a god." Their worship consists in propitiating the god with offerings, kneeling and bowing down before him, repeating his name, and reciting prayers in a language which is not intelligible to the Chinese. Most of the worshippers use beads, like the Roman Catholics, to assist in keeping count of the number of prayers said, or the number of repetitions of the name of Buddha. At every repetition one bead is slipped along on the string by the thumb and finger. On entering a temple in which a large number are assembled to worship, we hear a continuous buzzing of voices in the repetition of the words, Na mo O me to Fuh. Devout persons, especially the devout women, spend whole days, or parts of days, and sometimes many successive days, in this repetition and in handling the rosary, both at the temples and in their own houses. It is not uncommon to meet old women in the streets saying over in a low voice, as they walk along, Na mo O me to Fuh. Children are taught to do the same, and not unfrequently little boys and girls while at play may be heard singing these words. This feature in heathen worship brings to mind what our Saviour said, "Use not vain repetitions as the heathen do, for they think they shall be heard for their much speaking." "The advantages said to accrue to the repeater," as stated in Medhurst's China, "are the following: all the gods of heaven will protect him: all the Buddhas will think of him: all the demi-gods will attend him: no devil can harm him: no calamities afflict him: all his former crimes shall melt away, and he shall be delivered even from the crime of murder: his dreams shall be pleasant, and his heart always glad: the world will respect him; and when he dies, he shall see O-me-to Fuh, and all the sacred ones, who will introduce him to the pure land."

In regard to a future existence, and rewards and punishments, the Buddhists teach that there is a heaven, a hell, purgatory, and many grades of transmigration. The good, they say, escape all the grades of metempsychosis and pass into heaven, those already sufficiently purified are immediately absorbed into Buddha. Some who are not good eneough for heaven are permitted another existence, or series of existences, upon the earth, to enjoy riches and honours. Those who deserve some punishment may receive it in purgatory; while the incorrigibly bad are condemned to suffer the torments of hell, or doomed to incessant births and deaths, to drag out so many existencies in the form of animals and loathsome creatures.

Heaven is spoken of as the Keih loh Rwoh, the most happy kingdom. It is described as a kingdom of which the land is yellow gold, with gardens and palaces, and beautiful birds whose song is melodious; a country where there is no pain, or disease, or old age, and where life is interminable; where the inhabitants "enjoy themselves at ease, following Buddha, gaily frisking about without trouble." No women are found there, for the women that are to be received into that place are first changed into men. Heaven, as they say, has thirty-three stories; these they attempt to represent in pictures, in which the inhabitants are to be seen, some in prayer and adoration of their god, some seated on lotus flowers, or in the act of coming up out of them, some in palaces and other pleasant places, others marching in religious processions, while a few are in the act of passing from one chamber to another a degree higher. The highest chamber of all is where Buddha himself resides and all who have become absorbed into him.

In some of the tracts which the priests, and other persons who wish to do a meritorious deed, distribute to propagate their doctrines, are rude representations of what imagination has conjured up of the enjoyments of the good and sufferings of the wicked. I have one of these tracts now on my table. Once when returning from the chapel, with one of our missionaries, distributing tracts, we were met by a man distributing Buddist books, and he offered us some. I keep this copy, as evidence of the efforts heathen can put forth, to make proselytes to a system that only ruins all who follow it.

The passage to the "happy land in the West," is supposed to be easier and more direct from the sacred places of Buddha on earth. Such is the sacred island of Pootoo; consequently we find there very many old priests who have come from different, and from distant parts of the empire, that they may end their days in these haunts of the gods, and be transported speedily to the Buddhist paradise.

Great efforts are made by the priests to hold up before the people, the sufferings for crime inflicted on all who fail to propitiate the gods. The representations of the miseries of the wicked are found in some of the temples in a conspicuous place, just within the main entrance, evidently for the purpose of frightening people to more liberal offerings, and more abundant devotions. Sometimes these things are represented in a separate room. I have in my mind one of this kind in a temple at Ningpo, and I will tell you something about it. It is a dismal place, smoky, with a faint light admitted through a small window in the roof. The first objects that strike one on entering are five figures of clay; one, a portly figure with stern aspect, standing behind a small table. This is Ne-lo-to wang, the judge and king of the infernal regions; he passes sentence of death, and summons one after another of the living to leave the earth, and appear before him. At his right stand two officers, and at his left two; these are fiendish-looking images, with hollow cheeks, and glaring eye-balls, one shaking a trident, another a spear or sword. Around the sides of the room, arranged in three or four tiers, are the miniature images represented as undergoing every imaginable kind of suffering. In one place sits a judge attending to the prisoners as they are brought before him, and you may see many figures of those who have apparently received their sentence marching away to the place of punishment. We will take a hasty glance around the room, for we cannot wait to examine every thing particularly. You see some attempting to walk over a bridge and falling through into the water; some thrown down precipices to fall upon the points of spears or swords; some plunged head foremost into cauldrons of boiling oil; here one under a trip-hammer, and there another pressed between two upright timbers and sawn through the middle from head to foot; some are represented lashed to posts, while grim monsters are hacking their flesh, now lopping off a limb, and now cutting away a piece of flesh; others are in the act of being devoured by wild beasts, or swallowed by serpents; and others again undergoing the process of transmigration. You may see persons in the various stages of transmigration; here is one with the lower part of his face lengthening out into the form of a dog's snout, on the head of another the horns and ears of a cow are starting out, the extremities of another are tapering off into the body and tail of a snake. Such are a few of the punishments represented here. The doctrine of purgatory, and the fear of going to that place, brings much money into the coffers of the priests of Buddha, in like manner as it does to the priests of Rome, for they cause the people to believe that their services are efficacious and necessary in praying souls out of purgatory; therefore they are employed at funerals, and on various other occasions to unlock the doors, and release the imprisoned souls for a time.

To be compassionate to animals is regarded as meritorious. This arises partly from the belief in the transmigration of souls; for the spirit of a deceased relative or friend, or of any human being that may have died thousands of years ago, and has been going the rounds of successive births and deaths, may now be animating the body of a brute. To be kind to any animal, therefore, may be a kindness to some wretched soul residing in it, while to injure the animal might subject the offender to constant annoyance from the injured spirit. These are the reasons why hogs, ducks, and fowls are kept at some of the monasteries till they die of obesity or disease; and it is, no doubt, for the same reasons that such troops of nearly starved and mangy dogs are suffered to live in and about all Chinese cities and villages, without owners, roaming around and feeding on whatever offal they may pick up. I knew an instance in which a Chinaman was hired to kill a diseased and worthless dog, but as he was leading him away he was met by a devout old woman who pursuaded the man to deliver the dog to her. She then crossed the river with the dog, took the rope off his neck and let him go at large. For such a deed she credited herself a large amount, and had no doubt that the charge would be allowed at the final settling of accounts when summoned before Ne-lo-to wang.

We sometimes meet with persons who suffer much pain, or whose condition seems worse than that of their neighbours, and they account for their peculiarly hard lot by supposing that in a previous state of existence they were peculiarly bad, and are now suffering the penalty. Women in China regard their condition as very hard; therefore their zeal in the service of the gods, which is so much beyond that of the other sex, is in great measure owing to the fear that they shall again be born as women.

POLYGAMY AMONG THE CHINESE.

Illustrations of their domestic life.

Dear Young Friends:—I write to tell you something about the domestic life of the Chinese. You have probably heard that polygamy prevails in this country; but you cannot readily conceive of all the effects that it has upon their domestic state. How strange it would sound to you to hear persons speaking about several mothers; and how absurd and wrong it would appear to you to have to honour and obey any one more than your own mother! But here every day we hear persons speaking of their mothers; and the children in many families must obey the principal mother more than their own. How wicked you think it for parents to make any distinction between the children; but here, in many families, some of the children are considered and treated by all as more honourable than their brothers and sisters. I write to explain these things to you.

Nearly every gentleman that can afford the expense, marries more than one wife, and the rich marry a great many; some marry twenty, and some even thirty wives. The principal wife, and the one who is properly called wife, is married for her rank and connections. The husband and wife never see each other till they are being married. The matter is all arranged by a match-maker, and the betrothment is often made when the parties are very young. The engagement is ratified, and the marriage is completed with a mutual exchange of presents between the two families who thus become allied to each other. The value of the presents varies with the rank and wealth of the families. This wife is counted the lady of the house and the head of the family.

The other wives (or more properly the concubines) are all bought, and they are brought home without any ceremony. They are all seen before-hand, and they are selected for their beauty and accomplishments. The prices for which they are bought varies from $200 to $2000, according to the wealth of the purchasers and the estimate they may place upon them.

These wives may all live in the same establishment, or, as is more common, the husband may have several establishments, or one for each wife. Still all the children are subject to the wife, and style her first mother, and those of the secondary wives must honour and obey her more than their own. The children of the wife are more honoured than the children of the others. Yet, on the decease of the father, the property is equally divided among all the children, unless the father specially directs otherwise. You can readily conceive of the jealousies, heart-burnings, and contentions this state of things gives rise to. The history of Sarah and her Egyptian maid-servant, whom she gave to Abraham for a concubine, will occur to your memories, and the more distressing incident of Ishmael cast off because he would not render the required homage to his younger brother Isaac. So also the jealousies of Jacob's wives, and the contentions of Jacob's sons, and the evils and afflictions that happened to the good old patriarch, in consequence of them, will all recur to your minds.

When the principal wife dies, the husband may either advance one of the secondary wives (which is often done) to the place of the deceased, or he may marry another (which is more commonly the case), with the same ceremonies as he married the first. Sometimes they have two wives of equal rank, and they are called "even wives." But this is very seldom, and can happen only under peculiar circumstances: as, for example, a gentleman is travelling from home, and makes a marriage engagement for his son; if, before the intelligence reaches home, the mother should have likewise made an engagement, both these engagements must stand, and the two are called "even wives." The question of precedence between them is settled by the priority of the engagement; or, if there is much difference in their ages, the elder takes precedence.

But a more fatal destruction of all domestic peace more frequently arises in the following way. The husband, from some feeling of caprice, or from dislike of his wife, contrary to custom, places in his own household one of his secondary wives, on an equality with the principal wife, and requires all the domestics to pay the same respect to her as they do to the principal lady. Some of these singularities in their domestic life were so strikingly observed in the family of a Chinese lady whom Mrs. Happer visited a few days ago, that it may be interesting to note them in detail. This lady is, by the way, a very remarkable and interesting woman. She visits Mrs. Happer and other missionary ladies very often. She has a great respect for foreigners, and she is exceedingly anxious to learn all she can about their customs and manners. She goes much beyond what any other lady will do here to gratify her curiosity. She went with my wife to call on a merchant's wife, to see the elegant houses in which the foreign merchants live, and to see how elegantly they are furnished. She also went with her to Mr. French's wedding, in order to see our marriage customs. She is very anxious to go to Hong Kong, to observe foreign customs there.

Her husband is wealthy, and is the twelfth child in a large family of children. She is the principal wife, and her husband has two secondary wives. The first secondary wife lives with the wife, and the second one has a house to herself. As the husband loves her best, he spends most of the time with her. The wife has a son and daughter; the first secondary wife has two sons. They have a private tutor to teach these three boys. When Mrs. Happer visited them, the schoolroom was shown to her. The first seat and the best chair and table were assigned to the son of the wife. In a conspicuous place, a tablet, on which was inscribed the name of the sage, Confucius, was placed. Every day when the children come into school they worship Confucius, as the patron of letters. This idolatry is inculcated with the study of their classics, and it is associated with the most interesting scenes of their youth. What a reproach is this to many schools in Christian lands, where there is no devout acknowledgment of the true God, and whence the Bible, the great fountain of knowledge is excluded.

The daughter is not instructed with her brothers, but is sent out to a school for girls in their own street. These children have all been supplied with the Christian books in use in our day-schools, and they show much interest, especially the little daughter, an interesting girl of twelve years, in committing them to memory. In another room was a little girl learning to sing. This girl is about eleven years of age, and she was purchased for ninety dollars. She is very pretty, and is not put to work like a slave, but has slaves to wait and attend on her. Her feet are bound to make her small footed (which is the great evidence of gentility in China); and a blind woman comes every day to teach her to sing. Every thing is done to make her beautiful and accomplished, so that she may bring a large price when she arrives at the proper age to sell to be a secondary wife. Many families buy and bring up children in this way for this purpose. They buy others and bring them up to be waiting-maids to their daughters.

The woman who comes daily to teach this girl to sing is, as I stated above, blind. Nearly all the professed singers here, so far as I know, are blind women and girls. Every night that I walk the streets I meet a number of these blind women, who are being led by some one either going to, or returning from the place where they had been sent for to sing. These blind singers play Chinese tunes on the guitar, and accompany them with their voices. Their remuneration for the singing during an evening depends upon the estimate of their skill.

The above is a sketch of the domestic life in one aspect of it, in the best families of this, the most civilized and elevated heathen nation on the globe. What a contrast to the domestic circle in our highly favoured land!—Who of you, after reading this, will not with more ardent feelings thank God for giving you your birth and education in a Christian land?—in a land where no plurality of wives is allowed to destroy all domestic peace and harmony—where each child loves and obeys its own mother so long as she is spared to bestow maternal care upon it—where all the children are equal, and where the unrestricted and affectionate intercourse of brothers and sisters mutually tempers and perfects their several characters and dispositions.

This account of the domestic state of the Chinese will give you a new view of the greatness of the work to be done by the gospel. It is destined to change and renovate the entire social state and disseminate its holy and purifying principles through all classes. While you rejoice and thank God for the great blessings you enjoy, will you not be more earnest in your effort to send the gospel to those who have it not. And especially will not all mothers, wives and daughters, as they owe to the Bible the enjoyment of their social comforts and domestic happiness, be excited to increased exertions to send this blessed Bible to their sisters in heathen lands, who know nothing yet of its elevating and happy influences.

May we all be enabled to fill up the measure of our days with usefulness "that living or dying we may be the Lord's." Yours very truly,

ANDREW P. HAPPER.

MISSIONS AMONG ROMANISTS.

We translate the following paragraphs from a Circular of the Evangelical Society of Geneva, lately received at the Mission House.

Conversion of Romanists.

I have the happiness (an evangelist writes to us on the 10th of February), of telling you that two families have completely broken away from the Roman church, to cleave unto the Saviour; some others are restrained by the fear of man, and by their own hearts not being yet altogether free from bondage.

Among those lately brought to the faith is a young woman, who has for a long time felt a desire to partake of the communion; but before being received, she had to undergo a severe trial of her faith. An aged and bigotted woman, by promises and menaces, endeavoured to prevent her attending our worship. Two of the nuns were brought from Lyons, who threatened her with being disinherited and abandoned by her parents, otherwise willing to make an ample provision for her future comfort. But nothing caused our new sister to hesitate. She said to them, that having heaven as her inheritance and God as her protector, she was rich enough; and when they did not cease to threaten her, she said "It is all in vain; I have given my heart to God, and wish to leave it with him; far from hating you, this religion which you detest makes me love you more, and every day I pray that the Saviour would open your hearts to his love, as he has mine." It was after these trials that she came again to request that she might make a public profession of her faith, and thus glorify the name of her Saviour.

Conversation with a Countryman.

An evangelist in the Department of Isére, writes as follows: In following the main road in the neighbourhood of S—, I met a countryman, who, with the coarse garb of a peasant, had yet one of those intellectual figures which strike one at first sight. He supposed I was going to talk with him of the political affairs of the day, but he was mistaken in his man, for I understood nothing. I then turned a little the thread of conversation, and hardly had we gone a mile before I had him on the ground of gospel truth. I saw that he was but little pleased, and that he wished to end the matter by launching a great phrase, which they usually throw in our faces to close such conversations, "I know very well that we are all brother Christians." "I am not of that opinion!" said I. This caused him to look at me with surprise. I then asked him what he understood by a Christian. Compelled to answer, he showed himself in the bottom of the wheel-rut of the false doctrines of the papacy. It was one who had been baptized, who had taken his first communion, and who had been confirmed. Having to deal with a man of some intelligence, it was easy for me to point out the false principle involved in his answer; and when I was setting before him the portrait of a Christian according to the Gospel, he surveyed me from head to foot—believing that he saw in me a priest in the dress of a layman. He could not refrain from saying, "Since you have told me what a Christian is, I would like to know how a man like me can ever become one?"

It was with gladness I cited to him, here a little and there a little, the words of the Bible, to show him precisely in what way a sinful man is brought to Christ. As I described to him what God had done to provide salvation for us, I saw him affected to tears, and biting his lips to keep from sobbing. At length, as we parted, I made him observe the immense difference between a Christian according to the world, and a Christian according to the Gospel. In bidding him adieu, I placed a good tract in his hands, for which he warmly thanked me, and said, "For a long time I have heard religion spoken of in the sermons of the priests, but I have never learned until to-day, what religion is, and I assure you that I can say more—we are brother Christians." When I recalled the attention of the peasant to the things we had spoken of, and his intelligent answers, it seemed to me that it is hardly possible that God will permit all this to be fruitless.

An Evangelist under Restraint, but the Gospel not bound.

At B—— our brother C—— has encountered great dangers, in the commotions which followed the political events of December 2d. Taken by force by a band of insurgents, and dragged after them, he was afterwards accused of being a partaker of the revolt, and twice arrested upon calumnious charges. He was put in prison, and conducted, chained to a malefactor, from one city to another; but he was always manifestly under the protection of the power of God. The intervention of some excellent persons eventually obtained his release. He writes—"I ought to say to you that this idea, (that believers in Geneva were uniting their prayers for him, with his own,) gave me so much comfort, that in prison, on the route, in the midst of the soldiers, I had not the least fear, and forgetful of my sad situation, I preached the Gospel to two Catholic soldiers who were at my side, with as much liberty as if I had been simply a fellow traveller with them. I can add, that the words which I was enabled to speak to them, have not been in vain; for during all the time we were in the garrison at B——, they attended Protestant worship. They have come to see me since my liberation, and I believe, that, as they have themselves said, their eyes have been opened to see the light of the Gospel. May the Lord finish this good work in their hearts, so that when their time of service is ended, they may carry the one into Sarthe, the other into Seine and Oise, the light which shines in darkness, and may become instruments in the hands of the Lord, of great blessings to their parents and their friends."

WHAT FRANCE WANTS.

The Rev. Leon Pilatte, a gentleman well known in this country, lately made the following remarks at an anniversary in London. They contain a world of truth in a small space. We commend them to those who look for the emancipation of Europe by the virtue of powder and ball.—New York Recorder.

What is the spirit of self-government? Nothing but the highest regard for God's will. No man is free before he becomes the servant of God; and the reason why we Frenchmen cannot understand or practise freedom is, because we have not practised submission to God's will. If Protestantism had reigned amongst us, as it seemed almost certain of doing in the beginning of the seventeenth century, our nation would have been in a very different position now. The people have been content to give up the care of their souls to the priest; and how could men be expected to pay any proper regard to their temporal or political interests, who were willing to give up the entire care of their souls to other people? When men feel the responsibility they are under to God for their own souls, they will come to have some proper care for themselves in political and social matters. It has been said that Popery does not reign any more in France; and it is true that the people do not now believe in Popery. More than ten years spent in the missionary career in France has shown me clearly that Popery has lost its hold on the minds of the people, that it has fallen below the level of the public conscience. But there is something worse, if possible, than Popery, and that is, the moral stain which it leaves behind it when it departs from a nation. Sometimes it is the case that a disease which attacks the body is not so bad as the effects which it leaves. I believe this is so frequently in typhus fever. And, let me say, the typhus fever is far from being so bad a thing physically, as Popery is morally. We are not Roman Catholics now as a nation; but Popery has made us what we now are.

My experience as a man has been very much like the experience of the nation itself. When a child, I was sent to the priests, as to the highest divine authority which was to teach me my duty. I went, listened to them, bowed before them, and believed every thing. But I could not help reading, thinking, hearing, talking, looking about me, and seeing what was going on in the world; and when I detected falsehood in Popery, and not thinking that Christianity was different from Popery, but believing that Christianity and Popery were all the same thing, I gave up Popery and Christianity too, and became a thorough infidel. This is the history also of the French nation. When a child, France fell into the hands of the priests, receiving Popery in the place of Christianity, and grew up in it; but the nation has detected falsehood in Popery, and given it up altogether; and, guided by Voltaire and the Encyclopædists, become a nation of infidels. What do we want? The gospel! Of revolution we have had enough—indeed, too much. In these fierce struggles, much of the best blood of France has been shed, and the noblest hearts have been broken. Of glory in industry and the fine arts we have had plenty. It is generally the share of heathen nations to have such glory also. The Greeks had plenty of it. Of military glory we have had enough—too much. I hate it, and cannot bear the thought of it. What do we want, then? We want the gospel.

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The past year, as the Board have reason thankfully to acknowledge, has again been a year of prosperity. Its operations show an increase in the number of its publications, its sales, and its receipts as donations, over any previous year.

Publishing Agent's Report, May, 1852.

The Publishing Agent reports, that during the year ending March 31, 1852, the Board have added to their catalogue 27 new books, (two of which are in the German language,) of which they have printed 67,750 copies; and 33 new tracts, (one of which is in the French language,) of which they have issued 115,000 copies. They have also printed 30,000 copies of the Family Almanac for 1852. The whole number of copies of new publications during the year is 212,750. This is 73,000 copies more than the issues of the preceding year.

During the same period they have published new editions from stereotype plates to the amount of 605,500 copies of books and tracts, being 315,000 more than the year before. Total number of copies of books and tracts published during the year, 818,250, being an increase of 388,000 copies over the former year.

They have also published from March, 1851, to April, 1852, twelve months, 676,000 copies of the Presbyterian Sabbath-School Visitor, a strictly religious semi-monthly paper for children. This periodical is steadily growing in the confidence of parents and teachers, and in the affections of children. Thirty-four thousand copies are now published semi-monthly.

Receipts for the Year.

The receipts for the year show a very encouraging increase. The sales have amounted to sixty-six thousand five hundred and thirteen dollars and seventy-two cents, or more than six thousand five hundred dollars over the amount reported last year. The donations received for colportage and distribution have amounted to $17,996.89, including a legacy of $825.33, being an excess of $7,705.70 over last year. Total excess of receipts of both departments over last year, $14,219.42, including the legacy just specified. The sales have exceeded the amount stated in the Treasurer's account, inasmuch as that statement refers only to the sales for which the cash has been already received.

The mortgage on the real estate has been paid off, so that the property is now entirely free from debt.

Colporteurs and Colporteur Labour.

There have been one hundred and forty-one Colporteurs employed during the year, in twenty-five different States, viz:—In Massachusetts, one—Connecticut, four—New York, fourteen—New Jersey, eleven—Pennsylvania, twenty—Delaware, one—Maryland, two—Virginia, two—North Carolina, twelve—South Carolina, one—Georgia, nine—Florida, one—Alabama, one—Mississippi, three—Texas, six—Arkansas, one—Tennessee, eight—Kentucky, three—Missouri, one—Iowa, two—Wisconsin, three—Illinois, four—Michigan, one—Indiana, eleven—Ohio, twenty-one.

Of these, one has been employed jointly in New Jersey and Georgia—one, in Alabama and Tennessee—and one in Mississippi and Missouri.

The Synods of Virginia and Pittsburgh are still conducting their operations as independent auxiliaries of the Board, with efficiency and success.

Aggregate of Colporteur Labour.

The following are the aggregate amounts of labour performed during the past year by the one hundred and forty-one Colporteurs, viz:—Time spent, thirty-five years; families visited, 64,526; conversed or prayed with, 22,838; families having no religious book but the Bible, 2,212; Presbyterian families without the Confession of Faith, 2,772; volumes sold by Colporteurs, 71,150; volumes granted by Colporteurs, 5,506; pages of Tracts distributed by Colporteurs, 581,956.

Donations.

Donations to a considerable extent have been made during the past year, in addition to those made through the Colporteurs. More liberal contributions from the churches would enable the Board still more effectually to scatter abroad their publications, in places where they would probably accomplish much good.

The grants of the year have been as follows:—Sabbath-schools, 869 volumes; ships of war, naval and military posts, 397 volumes; humane institutions, 68 volumes; Literary and Theological institutions, 2210 volumes; indigent ministers, 1293 volumes; feeble churches, 1355 volumes; individuals for gratuitous distribution, 336 volumes; and also, 175,190 pages of tracts, independent of the donations of tracts made by Colporteurs.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

It is a source of much gratification to us that the General Assembly have again given their approval of the operations of the Board. Some discussion took place upon the subject of supplying a religious literature by an ecclesiastical Board, in preference to those voluntary organizations, which at present to a considerable extent occupy the field, and the Assembly in a more decided manner than formerly expressed their preference for the former.

The Rev. Stuart Robinson, as Chairman of the Committee on the Report of the Board, in reply to some remarks on the other side, said:

"He was sorry that the discussion had come up. It was not of his seeking, but now he must discuss it. He differed from many as to the principles of the philosophy of union. Many were for seeking it by grounding all distinctive differences, and uniting to labour together on the principles in which they were all agreed. He had no faith in this plan; the Assembly had tried it long ago, when the Plan of Union was got up, and it ended in constant bickering and contentions, until they had to separate. The best way to make men unite, was to keep their differences well and clearly defined. The farmers in his country never thought of making peace by throwing down their division fences, and having their fields and pastures in common. No, their most peaceable measure was a fence ten rails high, well staked, and a rider on that. They never thought of ploughing together until the fields of all were ploughed. No, their doctrine was for each man to plough his own field, and attend to his own business, and that was the way to have peace. The notion seemed to be prevalent that the Presbyterian Board was only to publish those works which were a little too blue for general circulation. The voluntary organizations were to publish all the practical religion, and the Assembly's Board only the blue controversial books, or such as were half and half. But he thought that each Church, as such, should do her own work, and avoid the trouble consequent upon these voluntary associations. Their agents are not under proper control, and they bring the work of agency into disrepute before the people. The agency system was only a necessary evil at best; but when irresponsible agents appeal to the pride and lower motives of the people, and not to their high duty as Christians, they do great injury, and should be excluded from the pulpits of the Church. He spoke plainly in these matters—that was his principle. The great difference at last, between what was called bigotry and brotherly-love was, that the supposed bigot spoke openly and above board, whereas brotherly love preferred to dig in the dark. He preferred to speak openly. He preached the gospel as a whole. And for a set of men to pick out this as essential, and that as not so, was as much as to say that it would not matter much if God had not revealed the latter.

The Rev. Mr. Cook believed the Church, in her organized capacity, was the instrument whereby the world was to be saved. The principle of voluntary associations was, that there were some things the Church could not do, and in this their tendency was to cast suspicion on the power of the Church. It had been feared that the strict adherence to these distinctive differences had created disunion and weakness in the Church, but, on the contrary, it proved her power and strength. Let her continue to insist upon all her doctrine, and the shackles which may be put upon her will prove as the green withes upon the arms of Samson; but let her be shorn of her locks of love for doctrines, and her eyes may be put out by her enemies.

The following resolutions were then carried almost unanimously:

Resolved, 1. That a review of the history of this enterprise, and the gradual development of this great idea of furnishing a religious literature for the Church, by agencies under control of the Church, from its feeble beginning to its present wide-spread and triumphant success, calls upon us devoutly to thank God and take courage.

Resolved, 2. That the Assembly hereby tender its thanks to the Board of Publication, for the energy, wisdom, and success with which they have carried forward the work during the past year.

Resolved, 3. That this Assembly, in the name and on behalf of the Church, do hereby return its warmest thanks and its sense of obligation to the Rev. Dr. Leyburn, late Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Publication, for his able, untiring, and eminently successful efforts in extending and giving efficiency to the plans and operations of the Board.

Resolved, 4. That in the judgment of this Assembly, the present position of this work, the circumstances of the Church, and the urgent wants of the people, call upon this Board to press still onward—extending their operations, widening and more fully occupying their field of labour, so far as may be consistent with prudence and safety, relying on the liberality of the Church, and the blessing of the Great Head of the Church for support.

Resolved, 5. That the experience of the past, and the results which have been developed, as to the comparative efficiency, safety, and intrinsic merits of the plan of supplying the religious literature of the Church by Boards under ecclesiastical control, rather than by voluntary organizations, indicate plainly the duty of our Church to sustain more fully and more exclusively, and extend far more widely the work intrusted to the Board of Publication throughout our bounds.

Resolved, 6. That in the opinion of this Assembly, it should be a first consideration to adapt the plans and modes of operation of the Board, in as far as may be, to the peculiar wants of the several geographical divisions of the Church; and in this view, the future plans of the Board should contemplate the organization of co-ordinate local agencies and depositories at the West, South, and South-west, as speedily as may be deemed consistent with the safety and permanency of the organization already established at Philadelphia.

Resolved, 7. That it be recommended to all our pastors and churches to give particular attention to the claims of this Board, and render such aid by the contribution of funds as to enable the Board to enlarge greatly the work of colportage.

Resolved, 8. That the Assembly suggest to the Board, that in its next Annual Report it exhibit somewhat more in detail the financial operations of the year, and also in a form as extended as may seem proper to the Board, a statement of the method of procuring the manufacture of books published by it, and the advantages of the plan of the Board in this regard, over the plan of establishing a printing-office and bindery for the execution of the work.

NECESSITY FOR COUNTERACTING THE INFLUENCE OF A LICENTIOUS LITERATURE.

However much the Church may have neglected to furnish reading for her people, the world has not been idle. The children of this world, in this as well as other respects, have been wiser than the children of light. There have not been wanting men to write, nor men to publish and circulate such books as have been calculated to subvert the truth, to undermine all sound morality, and to ruin the souls of men. No age and no part of the world has been so characterized by an omnivorous licentious literature as our own. Its name has been legion. Its hands have been unwearied, its footsteps everywhere, its breath pestilence and the second death. Probably no one evil has been more wide-spread, more insidious, or more hurtful. Under cover of enticing fiction it has instilled the most pernicious sentiments. Now it teaches no religion, and perpetrates sins of omission, by showing off virtue without godliness, and sending men to heaven without a Saviour. Now it sneers at vital piety, casts lofty flings, and throws out mean insinuations against revelation, leaving on the mind, without logical proofs or apparently any formal statement, infidelity as the residuum. Now it presents a ritualism and sacramental religion, under the trappings of such pomp and ceremony, and such vaunted boastings of a dim antiquity, as to leave the heart unfitted for the plain truths and simple forms of a church after the apostolic model; and now it treats of the violation of the restraints of moral purity, and disregard to the relations of life, which lie at the foundation of all social and hallowed domestic enjoyments, as either mere foibles, or things to be expected as a matter of course, thus sanctioning the most lawless licentiousness; until the unsophisticated reader is left to infer that the restraints by which his passions have been curbed are but the forgings of a misanthropic despotism; that virtue is but a name; and that, in the main, he may live as regards all morals as he lists. Who doubts for a moment that such is the character, such the results, and such too the deliberate design of a large part of the popular literature of the day?

And where is it that such a literature finds readers? Not merely in its congenial home of the debauchee and the profligate, but in the houses of the respected, the hitherto virtuous, the pious. Its readers are the millions of unwary youth of both sexes, who are growing up to preside at the hearth-stones, the counting-houses, the professional offices, and in the high places of the government—those who are in their turn to be the fathers and mothers of the youth of this land. Shall the mighty interests, both as regards the Church and the world, at stake on this continent, be committed to those from whose souls all high principles of honour, all pure morality, all holy and reverential sentiments, have been eaten out as by a canker? Shall the generation whose training is in our hands be fed on the miserable viands which have been tainted in the pesthouses and fetid haunts of nations grown old in luxury and sin? In this regard a great responsibility surely rests upon the Church. The evil to be counteracted is wide-spread and appalling. It is doing its work constantly and effectually, though it may be silently—with what results, the terrible domestic catastrophes with which we are ever and anon shocked, already indicate;—with what results, coming time, unless a remedy be applied, will tell more fully.

It may indeed seem a disheartening work, to undertake to set over against books such as the popular fictions of the day, a literature whose principal features are sound sense, substantial instruction and evangelical piety. Still the evil is too appalling to be left to pursue its destructive course without an effort to arrest it; and as we know God's truth to be the only availing method for the healing of these bitter waters, we must make the attempt, and trusting in Almighty grace to give efficacy to what the Spirit has revealed, labour diligently to spread abroad everywhere a sound, wholesome, religious literature, if peradventure, it may prove an antidote to the licentious reading of the day. This we believe to be no small part of the mission of this Board.

PRESBYTERIAN PSALMODIST.

The "Independent," thus pleasantly notices the above work.

"The General Assembly, Old-school, with a watchful jealousy over all the interests of 'the church,' has caused to be published, under its approval, a collection of tunes adapted to the psalms and hymns of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Whether these tunes have all been sung through by the Assembly in mass we are not informed; but the compilation has been made under the supervision of a judicious committee, guided by the taste and experience of Mr. Hastings. It is a good collection, consisting chiefly of old and standard tunes. We know not what constitutes orthodoxy in music, but no doubt this collection is up to the standards of the General Assembly, while at the same time we have not been able to detect in it a single Presbyterian tune or sectarian note. Indeed, we are of opinion, that it will tend greatly to promote Congregational singing—unless a jealousy of the name should hinder. The book is published in very good style, and will, of course, be introduced into all orthodox choirs, thus promoting harmony of worship throughout the Church."

We receive similar commendations from all quarters of the church. The second edition of 3,000 copies is just out of press. It has the valuable addition of an index of first lines. E.

A COLPORTEUR ENLIGHTENED.

The following extract is from a report of one of our Colporteurs, who has been labouring faithfully for a short time in Pennsylvania. He is in a position to appreciate the light of truth which he is endeavouring to spread, having known what it is to sit in the palpable darkness of Rome. He is in course of preparation for the ministry.

"I delight in distributing truth and knowledge through the country, and in giving to the destitute, without money and without price, especially the prominent publications of our Board, which are all baptized with scripture truth, and sent out in a plain and comprehensive language. I hope that the trumpet-tongued press will soon rouse the slumbering millions from the night of endless misery, until the light of gospel revelation shall spread in every direction, so as to form one grand blaze of illumination to the honour and glory of God, through this dark world. I was once myself in the chains of papal darkness, but when I landed in this country of light and liberty, I was led to see my danger, and to find out a sure way of escape, by reading the Bible, which is able to make wise unto salvation, through faith that is in Christ Jesus. I never saw a Bible till I came to this country. I find that it is a map of the road to the heavenly Canaan, and that we cannot travel there without it. It is my fervent prayer to God that he would hasten on the time when the gospel shall be borne on every sea into every land, until all shall know the Lord from the least even to the greatest, when Romanism, Paganism, and all false doctrine shall be done away, and pure and undefiled religion be experienced in every heart."

Letters to the Aged. By A. Alexander, D. D. 18mo, pp. 82. Price 16 and 22 cents.

These two volumes are extracted from Dr. Alexander's work on "Religious Experience," so well known and highly valued, both in this country and in Great Britain. They are full of instruction, and are beautiful specimens of the earnest and affectionate spirit, and of the clear, simple, and attractive style of the venerated author.

An Earnest Search for Truth, in a series of Letters from a Son to his Father. By the Rev. S. A. Lowry. 18mo, pp. 162. Price 22 and 28 cents.

The author was once in the ministry of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, who have adopted a system of doctrines which professes to hold a middle ground between Calvinism and Arminianism. He here gives his reasons for adopting, in full, the system of doctrines contained in our Confession of Faith.

It is well worthy of perusal by those who have doubts as to the scriptural character of those doctrines which ignorance and prejudice brand "as the horrible dogmas of Calvinism."

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The General Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland met at Edinburgh on the 20th ult., the Earl of Mansfield being the Lord High Commissioner. Dr. M'Leod, of Morven, moderator of the past year, preached the annual sermon, and proposed the Rev. Dr. Forbes as his successor. The royal letter being read by the commissioner, a committee was appointed to prepare the reply. The Assembly was occupied on the following day entirely on routine business. It appears that the incomes of the Scottish ministers in all the country parishes have been seriously diminished by the alteration in the corn duties; and it is only after intervals of twenty years that an augmentation of stipend can be legally obtained, and even then the heritors and courts of law make much opposition. An address to the government on the subject is resolved on. It is expected that both from the Assemblies of the Established and Free Churches, petitions will be adopted against the continuance of the Maynooth grant.

The General Assembly of the Free Church commenced its annual meetings at Edinburgh on Thursday the 20th ult. Dr. Duff, of Calcutta, moderator of the past year, preached the opening sermon. After the house was constituted, Dr. Duff proposed as his successor the Rev. Dr. Makeller, which was unanimously agreed to. The new moderator having addressed the court, an address to the Queen was moved by Dr. Duff, and seconded by the Earl of Panmure, expressive of loyalty and attachment, on the occasion of Her Majesty's birth-day. The annual report of the contributions to the schemes of the church was then read, from which it appeared that the sum collected for missionary and educational purposes was £53,876 4s. 6d. This is independent of the sum collected for the support of the Free Church in Scotland, from the central fund of which nearly 700 ministers received a dividend of £130, which is supplemented by local funds in the more important congregations. At the meeting on Friday, the house heard the report of the Jewish Mission Committee, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Wingate, Smith and Edwards, the missionaries lately expelled from the Austrian territories. The Assembly resolved to memorialize Her Majesty's government on the subject.

Frigate Ordered to Athens.—We observe, with great satisfaction, that our Government has ordered the United States frigate Cumberland to Greece, with directions to demand an explanation from King Otho for the oppressive treatment to which the Rev. Jonas King, D. D. has been lately subjected. Such a step is eminently proper, and we trust that the line of procedure indicated will be steadily pursued, until the rights of American citizens are respected in foreign countries, as the rights of foreigners are respected here.

The Graves of the Arctic Voyagers.—It needed not a dark wintry sky nor a gloomy day, says Osborn, in his Arctic Journal, to throw a sombre shade around my feelings as I landed on Beechey Island, and looked down upon the bay, on whose bosom once had ridden her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror.

The graves attracted our attention; they, like all that English seamen construct, were scrupulously neat. Go where you will over the globe's surface, afar in the east, or afar in the west, down amongst the coral-girded isles of the South Sea, or here where the grim north frowns on the sailor's grave, you will always find it alike; it is the monument raised by rough hands, but affectionate hearts, over the last home of their messmates; it breathes of the quiet churchyard in some of England's many nooks, where each had formed his idea of what was due to departed worth; and the ornaments that nature decks herself with, even in the desolation of the Frozen Zone, were carefully culled to mark the dead seaman's home. The good taste of the officers had prevented the general simplicity of an oaken head and footboard to each of the three graves being marred by any long and childish epitaphs or the doggerel of a lower-deck poet, and the three inscriptions were as follow:

Sacred to the memory of J. Torrington, who departed this life January 1st, 1846, on board of H. M. S. Terror, aged 20 years.

Sacred to the memory of Wm. Braine, R. M. of H. M. S. Erebus; died April 3d, 1846, aged 32 years.
"Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."—Josh. xxiv. 15.

Sacred to the memory of J. Hartwell, A. B. of H. M. S. Erebus; died January 4th, 1846, aged 25 years.
"Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Consider your ways."—Hag. i. 7.

I thought I traced in the epitaphs over the graves of the men from the Erebus the manly and Christian spirit of Franklin. In the true spirit of chivalry, he, their captain and leader, led them amidst dangers and unknown difficulties, with iron-will stamped upon his brow, but the words of meekness, gentleness, and truth, were his device. We have seen his career, and we know his deed!

Why should their praise in verse be sung?
The name that dwells on every tongue
No minstrel needs.

The Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, D. D., has been recently appointed Professor of Biblical Literature in Andover Seminary, and has accepted the appointment. He will be inaugurated in September, and will enter on the duties of his office at the commencement of the next autumnal term. This appointment is to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Professor Edwards.

Archdeacon Manning.—A late English paper says that Archdeacon Manning, one of the most distinguished of the recent converts to the Roman Catholic Church, is likely to renounce that creed and return to the Church of England.

HOME AND FOREIGN RECORD

Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

VOLUME III. No. 8. | PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1852. | PRICE PER YEAR, Fifty Cents.

OUR DUTY TO EMIGRANTS.

In the May number of the Record we published a short extract from a sermon on Domestic Missions by the Rev. Dr. Scott, of New Orleans. As then intimated, we now give another paragraph or two from this very able discourse. And we do so the more readily, as it relates to an interesting department of the work of our Church in this country, and one which demands a much larger share of our sympathies and efforts, than we have reason to fear is bestowed upon it. Our land is now the land of refuge to many down-trodden people—many poor, ignorant, blind, and superstitious. What a field for missionary work! Ought we not more vigorously to cultivate it?

"One of the effects of the recent revolutions of Europe has been to unfetter the press. And as knowledge is imparted to the people through a free press, so will they gain information concerning this country and about their own rights; and in the same degree a majority of them will grow stronger in their aversion to their oppressors, and in the desire of finding a home in America. Our duty to immigrants does not properly come within my present purpose, but I cannot forbear to say that it comprehends the three following things:

First—To receive them kindly. The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof. The Almighty has not given this earth to a few families of any one nation and to their descendants only. He has not patented out this glorious land to any royal lines. He has made it the asylum of the oppressed from every clime—the homes of the brave. The ragged, the outcast, the starving, the ignorant, as well as the educated, the refined, and the wealthy, who seek a home amongst us, should be welcomed to our shores; and the country of their adoption should not be their stepmother, but fold them to her bosom as those born of her own vitals. Talk not to me of their unworthiness, nor of their vices. It is enough that they are wretched; it is enough that they are within reach of our sympathies. A stranger, and you took me in—is worth infinitely more than all the sagacity ever displayed in detecting impostors. I repeat it, then, our first duty is to receive them kindly—make them feel that we are a Christian people, and that we look upon them as men, made in the image of God, and heirs of a glorious immortality.

Secondly—We should provide for their immediate wants. I have not now time to amplify the way in which this should be done. Doubtless, however, poor foreigners, who are thrown into our large towns and cities, should be sent as soon as possible into the interior, where there is room enough and to spare, and where, in one twelvemonth after their arrival, they can all support themselves. They should be protected against the land-sharks who infest our wharves. They should, by means of cheap tracts and newspapers, be instructed in the nature of our climate and soil, and the way to get into the interior, and the way to make an independent living. I am not now speaking of religious or political tracts, but of tracts for the people on common subjects.

A House of Refuge, or an Asylum for the Poor, of all ages, is very much needed in this city. As our police is now administered, there is great cruelty and injustice in classing the poor with the convict. To treat the youthful offender in the same way that the hardened villain is dealt with, is the way to destroy all self-respect, and to increase every species of crime. Schools of reformation and a home for the friendless stranger are greatly needed in our vicinity. The man of wealth who shall endow such institutions in New Orleans will be a benefactor to his race, that many generations will bless. The foreign poor in our streets is not a tithe of what it will be in a few years; and the sooner and the more effectively some judicious mode of assisting them is devised by us, the better for them and for us. American pauperism is a term that happily has hitherto had no place in our history; but in our Atlantic towns, at least, it will soon call so loudly for relief, that legislators, and citizens, and property-holders, as well as philanthropists, will be obliged to attend to it.

Thirdly—We must educate the children of foreigners, and by every proper means seek to imbue them, both old and young, with the spirit of Christ. The two great instruments by which this can be done, are public schools and domestic missions. These are the two great agencies intrusted to American philanthropists and Christians, by which to regenerate so much of the Old World as God in His providence may cast upon the bosom of the New. Of all secular agencies by which to do good to foreigners, there is nothing to compare to our Free Public School system; and if there was not a single native-born child benefited by our Public Schools, they should be fostered and upheld through every obstacle, for the sake of the child of the stranger within our gates, and for the sake of the orphan committed to the State by its Almighty Father. I do not mean that public schools should be for such only—by no means; they are and should be, open to all, rich and poor, native and foreign. But I mean that they are of the very first importance in view of immigrants to this country. It is there they begin to taste the sweets of liberty; it is there they begin to learn something of our blessed institutions, and to know how to enjoy them."

THE PERSON AND WORK OF CHRIST.

The holy law of God requires an obedience which we, imbued with depravity and overwhelmed with guilt, can never render; and eternal justice demands an atonement which we have neither the ability to make nor the authority to present before God. But in the glorious person of the Redeemer, we find the human nature united to the divine; the former rendering an immaculate obedience, and enduring the fearful curse of the law; and the latter giving costly value to his whole work, which, with authority, he presents in our behalf.

This competent Mediator, appointed by the Father, humbled himself to the form of a servant, laboured, and wept, and groaned, and died to deliver precious souls from the curse of sin. And because his perfect work has received the approbation and seal of his Father, our Judge, the vilest sinner, believing in his name, is accepted in the Beloved, and his unworthy name inscribed in the book of life.

God out of Christ is a consuming fire; but ever since his ears were pierced with his Son's triumphant cry—"It is finished!"—the chief of sinners may approach him, in the name of that Son, confident of an answer of peace. When God saved Lot, it was because he remembered Abraham. When the Egyptians cried unto Pharaoh for bread, he sent them to Joseph. So when any poor sinner hungers and thirsts after righteousness, God says to him, pointing to one on his right hand, "This is my beloved Son, hear him!"

THE GOSPEL A BLESSING—PREACHING A BENEFIT.

The gospel is God's scheme for blessing men. All the blessings which men enjoy they owe either directly or indirectly to this scheme, for without it the race would have been cut off in our first parents. Hence every man is indebted to Jesus Christ. Every blessing men enjoy is blood-bought: it comes from Calvary.

The preaching of the gospel is God's plan for interesting men savingly in the gospel. And as men are indebted to the gospel for every mercy, temporal and spiritual, so the preaching of the gospel is in every view a benefit to men. It benefits them temporally. It increases the value of their property, renders property and person secure, and by that competence and security which it promotes, it adds to their enjoyment. Life may be endured without the gospel, but it has in it the curse of the fall; it is the gospel alone, which, by a partial removal of the curse, renders life desirable. The preaching of the gospel benefits men socially. It improves society, moralizes neighbourhoods, and renders men as much like angels as without it they are like devils. It benefits them intellectually. It improves their intellects as well as regulates their affections. No people can assemble Sabbath after Sabbath and hear the gospel preached, without being made wiser, if not better. It benefits men spiritually. It calls up their attention to their immortal interests, acquaints them with the atoning Saviour, with the regenerating and sanctifying Spirit, and is the very power of God unto salvation. It promotes the Christian's growth in grace, and is the means of fitting him for eternal rest. Hence the preaching of the gospel is an eternal benefit to men. It benefits them for two worlds, for time and eternity; for life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel, and it pleases God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The Annual Report of the Board is printed, and will be immediately sent out, in connection with the Home and Foreign Record. We commend it to the careful perusal of the church, and bespeak for it as extensive a circulation as possible. Brethren who desire extra copies for circulation will please write us to that effect.

THE LATE MEETING OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.—FORWARD!

The meeting of the General Assembly in Charleston, S. C., will long be remembered by all who had the privilege of being either members of that body, or attendants upon its deliberations and religious exercises. The utmost harmony and Christian affection prevailed, and the glory of Christ's name and kingdom seemed the great object that was kept prominently in view. There were rejoicings at the manifestations of God's favour towards us as a Church—but they were rejoicings without vain confidence and boasting—and rejoicings seasoned, and saddened too, with assurances that we had come short in duty. One impression was deeply made upon all observers of that Assembly: an impression of its conservative spirit, its prudence, its firm union in doctrine, and upon all the great and essential principles of Presbyterianism. And one feeling seemed to pervade the members and attendants—that of Love. There were discussions, but no disputes; differences of views, but no personalities. It was good to be there. Blessed shall our Church ever be when the meetings of her General Assemblies shall be looked forward to as meetings full of peace, and love, and joy in the Holy Ghost, and from which all may retire with spiritual improvement and refreshment.

The hospitality of the churches of all denominations, and of the citizens of Charleston, left nothing to be desired.

The feeling of the Assembly, in relation to its Boards, could not have been better, and the annual reports gave a flattering view of the general conduct and success of the important schemes committed to their care. For ourselves, and all the brethren engaged in the Boards, we earnestly entreat the brethren, both ministers and elders, to remember these schemes, now that they have gone home, and endeavour to do more for them the present than they have any past year. We must not only hold our own, but advance. Our Church is engaged in building up Christ's kingdom. What better, more noble, more exalted work? Let the word then for the year—for every minister, for every elder, for every member, be—Forward.

CALIFORNIA.

The following letter from the Rev. Robert McCoy has been received very recently, and we commend it to the attention of our readers. Brother McCoy had a prosperous journey out, and enters upon his new field full of faith and zeal. He may not settle at San Jose valley as was at first anticipated.

"San Francisco, April 16, 1852.

Dear Brother—On the 17th of February we arrived at New Orleans, where we were detained 23 days, as we could not obtain through tickets to leave sooner than the 12th of March. After a voyage of ten days of fine weather, in travelling only 1400 miles, we arrived at Aspinwall, Navy Bay, where we took the cars early on Monday morning 22d, for Bojio Soldado, 21 miles; thence 20 miles by a small boat to Gorgona, where we arrived at 9 o'clock, P. M. The next day we rode on to Panama, where we were detained three days waiting for the mails and passengers by the Ohio. On the 27th we left in the Northerner, and in 18 days we landed here all safe and in good health, day before yesterday morning. I find brother Williams and family all well, and in fine spirits. Brother Butts of New York, came in also on the Northerner, and proceeded immediately to Placerville and the adjacent towns, intending to occupy that field, if encouraged. Brother Williams organized a church called Camden, in San Jose valley, as contemplated; but only five persons gave their names as members. They are ready to give me the 2000 dollars per annum and board, for preaching and teaching for them; but it is the unanimous opinion of all the members of this Presbytery and prominent elders here, that the field is too narrow and limited, and that I ought to prefer Sonora, Columbia, and adjacent towns back of Stockton, where they believe I will be fully sustained without the incumbrance of teaching. I therefore feel bound to explore that field, and am to leave in the steamer for Stockton at 4 o'clock, P. M. this day. As soon as I explore it, and come to some definite determination, you will hear from me again. My heart was set upon San Jose valley; but I have ever made it my rule to sacrifice my own preferences to a sense of duty. I hope the Lord, who has graciously brought me thus far, will guide me to a field that will be fruitful, and suitable for me and my family. His will be done."

Brother A. Williams writes under date San Francisco, May 3d.

"We were much rejoiced at the arrival of brethren McCoy and Butts. Their location is yet undetermined. They have a wide field before them, and still many more may come. I am afraid I should be suspected of exaggeration if I should say how many preachers and teachers of our order would in our numerous towns and rural districts find employment. I can truly say it seems strange that so few of the young ministers of our Church turn their attention this way. Yet I hope a brighter day is dawning upon our cause in California. If any in the ministry can be spared from the older communities, to what part of the world can they look for a more hopeful field of labour? Shortly I shall be able to send you a new and quite accurate map of our State. South of San Jose and Santa Cruz on the coast are no Protestant ministers. And in that direction are Monterey, Santa Barbara, Los Angelos, and San Diego, quite important places. Northward and eastward, the places now open and inviting to Presbyterian ministers are many."

Again under date of May 15th he writes:

"I do not know that I can add anything to the suggestions I have before made, or to the wants of this missionary field; if possible I would give them more urgency. The field is enlarging. I trust we shall be stimulated by the many and strong motives which urge us to plant the standard of truth firmly on these shores. Be assured there are many who stand ready to welcome the arrival of good Presbyterian ministers in this country. You seem to know well what qualifications are needed in a ministry for California. The observations in the April 'Record' on this topic pleased me much. I look for much good for California to grow out of the present meeting of the General Assembly. Church extension, not neglecting home interests—Church extension is the work of our generation. May God prosper it more and more!"

And under date of May 31, he again writes:

"Papists are here busy. A prominent Jesuit priest has recently arrived. Yesterday he made his debut in the Catholic church in this city, putting forth most designing, yet arrogant assumptions in favour of the papacy, its antiquity, unity of faith, &c. We too, who hold the Protestant faith, must be astir."

NOTICE RESPECTING THE CATECHISM FOR COLOURED PERSONS.

As we are from time to time written to for information touching the "Catechism of Scripture Doctrine and Practice for Families and Sabbath Schools, designed also for the oral instruction of Coloured Persons, by Charles C. Jones:" where it may be had, and how, we would state that the Catechism is now issued by our Board of Publication, at fifteen cents per copy, and may be had generally of all the colporteurs of the Board in the southern and south-western States; and also by sending orders for it immediately to the Board of Publication, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

This Catechism has received the approbation of the Christian public, and has been extensively used all over the southern and south-western States, in the religious instruction of the coloured people, and with encouraging success. It has passed through nine or ten editions. It has also been translated into the modern Armenian, and into the Armeno-Turkish, and into the Chinese languages, at the missionary stations in Syria and Ningpo, as a book of instruction for nominal Christians and heathen.

PASSAGE OF MISSIONARIES TO CALIFORNIA

By the Isthmus, in Ships of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The following letter from W. H. Aspinwall, Esq., in reply to one addressed to him from the Board of Missions in relation to the passage of our missionaries to California, we commend to the notice of Brethren who anticipate going by the steamers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

It will be seen that the Company most generously offer to convey all "authorized missionaries and their immediate families to California at 25 per cent" (or one quarter) "less than the current rate of passage, when they embark." And the adoption of this fixed regulation was to encourage the great object of missions without unduly prejudicing the interests of the stockholders. Christians could not expect the stockholders to carry out their missionaries free of charge, when they are abundantly able to pay for them, and thereby laying the stockholders under a contribution to missions above all reason; and we consider that the offer to take out missionaries at a quarter less than the regular passage price is a most liberal and generous act, and one for which the "Pacific Mail Steamship Company" deserve the thanks and gratitude of the different denominations of Christians; and we here make a sincere tender of the same for ourselves, with our best wishes for the blessing of a kind Providence to rest upon their noble enterprises.

"Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your letter of June 24, and in reply have to say that the rule has been adopted of allowing to authorized Missionaries and their immediate families passage to California at 25 per cent. less than the current rate of passage when they embark; and in case of the Presbyterian missionaries about to embark, the gentlemen associated with me in the direction of the Company do not feel that they can deviate from this rule in justice to other denominations of clergymen, or to those interested in the company.

The object of adopting some fixed regulation was to encourage the great object of missions, without unduly prejudicing the interests of our stockholders. I can only assure you that it will afford me great pleasure to offer to the Missionaries referred to by you, every facility not inconsistent with the regulation to which I have referred.

Very respectfully and truly yours,
W. H. Aspinwall."

OREGON.

The following letter from Rev. Messrs. Geary and Robe, dated April 29th, is one of special interest. It conveys information of value to ministers who are anticipating a removal to that distant and important field. The overland route is decidedly preferred. The remarks upon ministerial support in the territory deserve consideration and reflection. All who read this letter will be surprised at one plan of ministerial support suggested, which comes next in promise in the territory to teaching, namely, something that looks like pastoral life. To what extent this suggestion of the brethren should be followed out, and for how long a time, must of course be left to the conscience and discretion of every minister who is compelled to adopt it. Did not Paul work with his own hands, and make tents for his support, that he might not be burdensome? Yes. But he did not make tents all the time. His principle was, that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, and he kept before the people their duty to support their ministers, freely and fully. The Lord's Spirit and word and time will set all things right in Oregon.

There is valuable information in the letter, also, of the condition and prospects of Oregon as part of our great confederacy. A great work is to be done there in every department of Christian effort, and we entreat the aid of the churches, in men and in means, and ask an interest in their prayers continually.

The "Presbyterial Report," referred to in the letter, has never been received.

LAFAYETTE, Yam Hill co., O. T., April 29, 1852.

Dear Sir—In the Presbyterial report of the Presbytery of Oregon last fall, a general view of Oregon as a field of missionary labour, and the prospects of building up the Presbyterian Church in particular, was given as extensively and minutely as our knowledge of facts and the fluctuating state of society would permit. Since then there has been a rapid development of population and resources in several parts of the territory, and especially in the southern, which enables us to speak somewhat more definitely with regard to fields of labour, and more encouragingly. We would however remark as before, that little direct support is to be expected in the way of salary for ministerial labours: first, because there are very few Presbyterians either in profession or sentiment in the territory, and these few widely dispersed; and secondly, because the mass of the people are unaccustomed to contribute, at least statedly and in any considerable amount, to the sustentation of ministers. Ministers must therefore be sustained in their work in this country at present, either by funds drawn from the funds of the missionary Board, or from the avails of teaching or some other secular vocation here. No minister of our Church should come here with an expectation of finding a location where he will realize a salary from the people for his ministerial labours, as has frequently been the case in California. If he does, he will certainly be disappointed. As to the amount of salary necessary to the maintenance of a minister and family, the strictest economy being observed, we would say from $700 to $1000. With this support he could barely subsist. Teaching is the most eligible employment, for which from $50 to $100 per month is given.

The places to which we would direct the attention of the Board are, first, Salem, the present seat of government. Here there are a few Presbyterians and congregationalists, who without any predilection in that way, would organize probably as an Old-school church, could they obtain a minister of our church with whom they should be pleased. They also say that they will raise $400 of salary. A minister could from this point reach Albany and Marysville, which are going to be places of importance. There are a few families in the Umpqua valley, who would give a Presbyterian minister a cordial reception. Winchester, at the upper crossing, promises to be a place of importance, and should be occupied. A popular teacher and preacher, able to endure fatigue, and not easily discouraged, would, we think, succeed in this field. Rogue River valley is filling up rapidly, two or three hundred claims being taken, and the newly discovered mines there attracting immense numbers of miners. Forty miles beyond this valley is Chaste city, a place of rapid growth in population and wealth—this is in California. An active young man might preach at these two points, and would probably be supported, as miners generally have shown considerable liberality in this regard.

Puget Sound, including Olympia, the Chebalis and Cowlitz valleys, might constitute another field, as no doubt a large part of next fall's immigration will locate in that region. We think a way of support would be secured, (at least with small aid from the Board,) in this field.

We have heard of the expected emigration of Messrs. Yantis and Hanna, who will probably each occupy one of the fields of labour designated. We apprehend that the excited state of public feeling in regard to Oregon is the source of many extravagant expectations, which are in innumerable instances doomed to be disappointed. We feel it our duty to be very explicit on this point. We say emphatically that none but those ministers who are popular speakers, and able and willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ, should think of coming here!

With regard to the route of emigration. We give the decided preference to the overland, as by far the most economical. A few hundred dollars well laid out in choice cattle (cows), will, if the owners are successful in bringing them here, be a source of certain and large profit. The expense of the journey will almost be covered by the enhanced value of wagons and oxen, should Providence grant health and a prosperous journey. We wish to be understood here in suggesting the above, that a farm and a few good cows will, with suitable attention, be next to teaching, the reliance of ministers for support. We would further say, that as most of our ministers will live on claims; aid to the amount of a few hundred dollars at the outset, to enable them to purchase a few select cattle, would be of more material aid to secure their support, than twice or thrice the sum when here. With a band of thirty cattle a man would soon be placed in the possession of an ample sustenance, and relieve the Board of the expense of contributing to his support. With regard to Salem, we think it important that a young man of decided and popular ministerial qualifications, and of ardent piety especially, would, if on the ground, be immediately employed, and secure a most important field of influence. Oregon City and Portland are lost to us at present. We should secure Salem. It would be wise policy, we apprehend, to send such a man as we have described immediately, and as each moment lost jeopardizes the possession, it would be best to send the missionary in this case by sea.

E. R. GEARY,
ROBERT ROBE.

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Many of our readers, like ourselves, have but an imperfect knowledge of that astonishing delusion which has in a few years worked itself into notice and a power which is remarkable; we mean Mormonism. So far as it is a form of religion, it owes its stability, influence, and progress to its alliance with the state, if we may be allowed the expression. The Mormons erect themselves into a civil community, under laws and regulations peculiar to themselves, and the private interests of individuals are merged in the interests of the entire body. It is a form of socialism. The government is despotic, whether lodged in one, or several rulers, and in its operation is frequently most capricious. Once embarked with them, it is not only extremely difficult, but even dangerous to withdraw from them; and if report be true, always with the loss of every cent, unless secreted beyond discovery. An intelligent individual who had been among them and made himself somewhat familiar with the people and their system, divided them into three classes; first the Deceivers—the men of knowledge, cunning, influence and power; second the Deceived—those who are really impressed with the belief of Mormonism, and submit themselves to it for salvation—ignorant, superstitious and fanatical; and third, the Desperate—men of no character, nor fortune—nothing to lose, and all to gain, and fit instruments for any enterprise.

We say nothing of the justice and the morality of the system. "A corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit."

Driven beyond the Mississippi, they have selected the Territory of Utah as their future home and seat of empire, and have settled in the Great Salt Lake Valley. The subjoined very recent account of the condition of the Mormons, taken from the Mormon paper "The Deseret News," is most instructive. It discloses their perfect union, enterprise, energy, devotion to their system, sympathy with each other, submission to their rulers, and efforts at the propagation of their faith, and the multiplication of saints in different quarters of the world. And it assures us that Christians have a difficult work before them to introduce the true gospel among this people, and effectually to overthrow their delusion. Whenever Utah is settled by emigrants from the States and in large numbers, the peculiar civil constitution of the Mormons must give way before the constitution and laws of our country, and a blow will then be struck at its existence, which will prove the beginning of the end with it. At the present time direct efforts for the salvation of the Mormons do not promise much success. They are sovereigns in the Great Salt Lake Valley, and it is impossible to say what means they would not resort to for the expulsion or silence of any disturbers of their peace.

LATE FROM UTAH—CONDITION OF THE MORMONS.

The Deseret News (Mormon) contains the following intelligence:

GENERAL CONFERENCE.—The General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was held at the New Tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, April 6, President Brigham Young, presiding.

The new Tabernacle was dedicated by appropriate solemnities, at the opening of the Conference, President Richards offering the prayer of dedication. The first "Bent" of this new Tabernacle was raised on the 21st of November, and the whole shingled and inclosed January 16, 126 feet in length, and 64 in breadth, with three foot walls, the whole in an entire arch sprung from the base. The pulpit is situated near the centre of the west wall, to be entered by an ante-court or vestry; the slips ascending on three sides from the pulpit, so that the prospect for all is good; and about 2000 can be pleasantly accommodated; the whole completed and dedicated on the 6th inst.

A considerable portion of the earth has been excavated, ready for the reception of the wall around the Temple Block, and many stones are on the ground. The brethren, generally, have been prompt in paying in one-tenth of their property, according to their vote of last September Conference; and never before had the Lord's Store House been so well supplied with wheat, meat, butter, eggs, vegetables, and other useful articles, and his pasture with cattle, as at the present time.

Brigham Young was sustained by the unanimous vote of the Conference, as the President, Prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in all the earth; and Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as his counsellors; and the authors of the church generally, as hitherto organized, were sustained in like manner.

The report of the financial affairs of the church, by the Trustees in Trust, showed that from the commencement of tithing in the valley, on the 6th of November, 1848, to March 27, 1852, there had been a profit to the Church in the management of the funds of $48,017 38.

The subject of the Saints walking over the prairies, with hand carts and wheelbarrows, was presented to the Conference, when 93 brethren volunteered to go with teams and provisions, to meet them, and to assist them on their journey, as a free donation to the kingdom of God.

It was voted that Thos. Margetts and Alfred Smith take a mission to Italy; William Fotheringham to Calcutta; John C. Armstrong, Edward Bunker, David B. Dille, Samuel Glasgow, T. B. Broderick, John Dalling, John Barker, and George Fenn, on foreign missions, (probably to, or through England.)

Edward Hunter was ordained Presiding Bishop of the whole church, who proposed Brigham Young and Heber C. Kimball as his counsellors, with the entire approbation of Conference.

Seth Taft, David Pettegraw, Abraham Hoagland, David Fullmer, and Daniel Spencer, were unanimously chosen Assistant Presiding Bishops. A few were disfellowshipped, and 67 ordained to the priesthood. The last day of the Conference, Sunday, P. M., was devoted to administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and social observations by the assembly; after which a contribution was called for the purpose of procuring furniture for the communion service in the tabernacle, when $149 were presented in silver coins, beside several pounds of watch cases, spoons, rings, and other silver ornaments.

The Seventh General Epistle of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from Great Salt Lake Valley, to the Saints scattered throughout the Earth, was issued April 18. It gives a general view of the condition of the Church since last September. We take from it a few items:—

It is contemplated that we shall be ready to commence the Temple next Spring; and that fonts and other preparations will be made ready the present season on the Temple Block; but cash will be wanted from all who have, to purchase such articles as demand cash, and such as cannot be produced in the valley. We hear a good account from the Saints in England, and trust they will continue in good works, and others follow their example.

Besides the Deseret Pottery in this city, another is open at Provo, in Utah county, and another is expected to commence this summer at Fillmore, in Millard county. A machine for manufacturing combs is nearly ready for operation. There is a nail factory in operation in Iron county, another in San Pete, and another building in this city.

Building has been materially hindered for want of nails hitherto, which, we trust, will soon be prevented by the use of domestic machinery. Most of the principal settlements are comfortably supplied with flouring mills, and where there is a deficiency, mills are building. The number of saw mills is increasing. The country is supplied with wooden bowls from a factory at Provo.

Tanneries have been commenced at most of the principal settlements; and at some, two or three; and after another season for peeling bark, the prospect will be good for a supply of domestic leather.

The iron ore at Coal Creek, in Iron county, has been tested, and proved to be of an excellent quality, though but little has been done for want of coal, an abundance of which is on the mountain near by, but inaccessible to teams, until a road can be made, for which there have been some public appropriations.

There has been very little cash in circulation among us, the past year, it having been previously vended in foreign goods, which was necessary for our comfort; but of late the want of cash to purchase importations, has induced the people to enter into domestic manufactures as fast as possible. A small woollen factory in this valley, commenced last year, is expected to go in operation about midsummer; and another in Utah Valley will be ready for this year's wool. Many hand-wheels and looms have been in operation, in families, and several thousand yards of cloth have been manufactured, besides carpets, mits, stockings, &c.

MORMONISM IN THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—Elder W. J. Perkins writes from Lahaina, Sandwich Islands, January 19, 1852, that the work was progressing with rapidity; natives and whites inquiring; that Brother George Q. Cannon had baptized 21 the day previous, and that there was a general call from all quarters for Bro. Cannon to come and preach to them, as he understands their language.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION OF THE NEGROES.

Another young minister enters this field. He goes from the Columbia Seminary to an important charge offered him in Mississippi; and with his zeal and engagedness we can but anticipate the happiest success. The following is an extract from his letter of June 26.

"It was my intention to have seen and talked more with you at the Assembly, in reference to my entering upon the work of instructing Mr. M's people. However, as I had not at that time fully made up my mind to go there, I could not have given you any definite answer. I have since, from correspondence had with Mr. M., concluded to go. I hope I will be in the path of duty in so doing. The fact is, when I look around me and see the spiritual destitution that prevails to an alarming extent, and then turn my eyes to the frontier of our extensive country, I feel exceedingly perplexed to know exactly what my duty is. I wish to go to that field where I can be most useful, and do the most good in behalf of our beloved Zion—but where is that?

Any suggestions and counsel that you may feel inclined to give me in reference to my contemplated work will be thankfully received and prayerfully considered. Our term is near its close—three more weeks—and then we go forth. With some of us it is a melancholy thought. It is our last farewell to Columbia, and to beloved Professors and classmates. But so it must be. May God enable us to go forth as good soldiers of the Redeemer, determined not to rust out, but to wear out in his service!

W. H. R."

"A GOOD MAN, FULL OF FAITH AND GOOD WORKS."

The following plain description of a good man full of faith and good works is communicated to us by an esteemed and honoured minister, and is now laid before our readers for their contemplation and example.

"He was for many years a Ruling Elder: an office which he held till death. He was a good man, and full of faith and good works: He was $50 annually to my support; and for some time before his death $20 to each of the Boards of Missions and Education. He was $500 to our Presbyterial Academy four years since: and within two years of his death gave, besides his regular subscription, $180 to your Board, and $100 to the Board of Foreign Missions, besides various other frequent small charities. He was a hard working plain farmer, making no show."

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

DEFECTIVE TRAINING IN PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS OPERATES AGAINST AN INCREASE IN THE MINISTRY.

Inadequate measures of public education constitute a fertile cause of the small number of candidates for the ministry. Schools, academies, and colleges are indispensable auxiliaries in the cultivation of the mind of a Church. An extensive educational apparatus is, in the highest degree, important to aggressive and evangelical activity.

The two particulars in which our Church, with all her interest in public education, has been defective, are (1st), in not educating a larger number of youth in academies and colleges. The supplies for the ministry in our Church may be usually expected to come from the educated classes; or rather, the greater the number of educated young men, the more hope is there, in the ordinary course of Providence, of greater accessions to our theological seminaries. It is therefore clearly our policy to encourage public education on a larger scale. More of the families in our Church should feel their responsibility in sending forth at least one of their number to possess the advantages of intellectual training, with a view to the public service. It is a great injury to the effective strength of the ministry to postpone this educational training so as to render it necessary for many of our pious youth to commence their preparatory studies at a late stage of life. Far wiser is it to educate on a large and liberal scale, and to secure the early advantages which God often consecrates by calling their possessors into the ministry of reconciliation. The proportion of liberally educated youth in our Church is small, when compared with its wants. And one of the most effective measures for increasing the number of our ministers, in a hopeful reliance on Providence, is to extend the blessings of a liberal education to a larger proportion of our promising youth.

(2d.) Our public education has not only been defective in quantity, but also in quality. There has been far too little religion in it. If our public systems made more of Christianity as a divine system, adapted through grace to the regeneration of the soul, the promises of God afford abundant assurance that more of our youth would be converted to his knowledge, and thus more be placed in circumstances favourable to examine their personal duty in reference to the ministry. A course of education, unimbued by the spirit and principles of the gospel, has a natural tendency to harden the heart. When shall the Church arouse herself to the importance of giving her youth a thorough Christian education? Until this point is duly attended to, the number of our candidates cannot be expected greatly to increase.

A WARNING.

The following communication comes from a friend. It is intended as a faithful warning. We know not how far it has any application; certainly to a limited extent. Human nature is corrupt and needs to be reminded of its infirmities. Sometimes, too, the faithful are confirmed by being warned of the possibility of their falling.

THE PREACHING TRADE.

We dislike to hear preaching called a trade, inasmuch as it is a holy calling, not to be put in comparison with anything mean or mercenary; nevertheless there are men in the ministry who "make a gain of godliness," sons of Eli, who "crouch for a piece of silver," and beg the priest's office that they "may eat a piece of bread." The preliminary study is called a curriculum or course, and the tradesman-student makes it one, pacing only in the beaten path, and taking care to do nothing not required by the indenture. He has no love for the work: he views his education as a ticket to pass, a quid pro quo, which he will lay aside as soon as he gets free.

He is not like Paul, who would not build upon another man's foundation. His first inquiry is for a good vacancy, or, in other words, for an old and well-established stand. When he has the fortune to find one, he then makes the best display of his wares, and it is seldom that the stock is so good as the sample. He is ever anxious to please; and his first endeavour is to find out what his customers like, as to have an article not in demand would be so much dead stock. He looks around, not to give, but to get; and he cultivates his field only so far as the grist will come to his own mill. He hears with envy of the high prices given in other quarters, and is always on the look out for a more fashionable neighbourhood. He often suffers by his own example: the measure he gives is meted out to him again. He teaches men to be mercenary, by his continual grasping; and shuts the door of charity by his perpetual craving. His apostolicity may be traced from Judas, and to "his own place" he must go at last.

THE WAN REAPERS.

BY MRS. EMILY C. JUDSON.

I came from a land where a beautiful light
Is slowly creeping o'er hill top and vale,
Where broad is the field, and the harvest is white,
But the reapers are wasted and pale.

All wasted and worn with their wearisome toil,
Still they pause not, that brave little band,
Though soon their low pillows must be the strange soil
Of that distant and grave-dotted strand.

For dangers uncounted are clustering there,
The pestilence stalks uncontrolled,
Strange poisons are borne on the soft languid air,
And lurk in each leaf's fragrant fold.

There the rose never blooms on fair woman's wan cheek,
But there's beautiful light in her eye,
And the smile that she wears is so loving and meek,
None can doubt it comes down from the sky.

There the strong man is bowed in his youth's golden prime,
But he cheerily sings at his toil,
For he thinks of his sheaves, and the garnering time
Of the glorious Lord of the soil.

And ever they turn, that brave, wan, little band,
A long, wistful gaze on the west—
"Do they come, do they come from that dear distant land?
That land of the lovely and blest.

Do they come? Do they come? Oh! we're feeble and wan,
And we're passing like shadows away;
But the harvest is white, and lo! yonder the dawn!
For labourers—for labourers we pray!"

Knowledge and Practice.—A grain-weight of sincerity and practice is worth a talent of knowledge. It is better to practise as the weakest Christian, than to know as the most excellent angel, if we do not practise what we know.—Andrew Gray.

ABSTRACT OF THE ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1852.

Part 1. The first part of the Annual Report, after alluding to the unusual mortality among our ministers and to the decline in the number of young men seeking the ministry, points out some of the causes which affect the decline in the number of candidates. 1. The sovereign good pleasure of God must be acknowledged in all our approaches towards the arcana of this subject. 2. The sins of the Church. 3. The prevalent low state of religion. 4. Imperfect household training. 5. Inadequate measures of public education. 6. The small salaries of ministers. 7. The want of steady and persevering attention to this whole subject on the part of the ministry. 8. The neglect of prayer. The special injunction, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest" is practically in such disrepute that the small number of our candidates cannot be wondered at.

II. The second part of the Annual Report gives an account of the operations of the year.

Candidates.—The number of candidates received during the year has been—

New, 67, restored, 2; total		69
Making in all from the beginning		2029
The whole number on the roll during the year has been		372
Of this number there were
In their Theological course	144
" Collegiate "	145
" Academical "	71
Teaching and otherwise absent	12
		372

During the year forty-eight candidates are known to have finished their course of study.

The aggregate number, as compared with last year, shows a diminution of sixteen.

Institutions of Learning. The number of parochial schools, so far as ascertained by the defective reports of Presbyteries, is 92. The number of Presbyterial Academies is 41, and of Synodical Colleges 11. Several revivals of religion have occurred during the year in these institutions; and general prosperity seems to attend them.

Teachers and Miscellaneous Department.—The Board are assisting in the education of six young men, most of whom are expecting to become teachers. The funds of this department are specially designated to its objects.

Agencies.—The agencies are the same as last year. The Rev. Mr. Speer has laboured in the Pittsburgh field; and the Rev. Dr. Wood in other parts of the West. Dr. Chester has, as usual, exercised a general superintendence.

III. The third part of the Annual Report discusses the question, "Who are the parties to education?" The main object of this discussion is to vindicate the Church as one of the parties in education; but the general position taken, is that parents, the Church, and the state, are respectively concerned in this great matter, each within its sphere.

Parents have the primary responsibility, whether education is conducted at home or in public institutions.

The Church is a party to education, 1. Because the true objects and nature of education necessarily include the inculcation of religion. 2. Teaching is one of the functions of the Church. 3. Children are considered by our standards as members of the Church, and under her care. 4. The ordinance of baptism justifies the Church in establishing for her children religious institutions. 5. The Church has a great interest in the work. 6. The Church is able effectually to superintend and to promote the work. 7. The history of the Church proves it to be a lawful party in the training of the rising generation. 8. The revelations of eternity will confirm the important relations of the Church to education.

The State is acknowledged to be a party to education; but the State has not only no monopoly in the work, but its authority is properly inferior to that of both parents and the Church.

In conclusion, the Report gives a few reasons for the vigorous prosecution of the Assembly's measures of public education. 1. Our covenant obligations. 2. The vindication before the world of the rights of the Church, as a party to education. 3. The influence of the Assembly's measures upon the State system. 4. The prosperity of our Church. 5. The interests of the other parties to education will be promoted by the sympathies, zeal, prayers and efforts of the Church on this great subject.

MINISTERIAL STATISTICS.

In looking over the Triennial Catalogues of several of our Colleges lately, I was led to institute some comparisons between the different institutions as to the number of ministers and missionaries which they have sent out.

As to the missionaries, I have depended mainly upon Prof. Park's address before "the Society for the Promotion of Collegiate and Theological Education at the West," in 1850; except one or two corrections which I have been able to make in his numbers. I have confined myself mainly to the Congregational and Presbyterian Colleges.

THE FAITHFUL PASTOR.

"An anecdote was told me by a well known Irish character, Thaddeus Conolly, who used to spend much of his time in wandering through Ireland, and instructing the lower classes in their native language. 'I went,' said he, 'one Sunday into a church, to which a new incumbent had been lately appointed. The congregation did not exceed half a dozen, but the preacher delivered himself with as much energy and affection as if he were addressing a crowded audience. After service, I expressed to the clergyman my surprise that he should hold forth so fervently to such a small number.' 'Were there but one,' said the rector, 'my anxiety for his improvement would make me equally energetic.' The following year Conolly went into the same church, the congregation was multiplied twenty-fold; a third year he found the church full."—Dr. Gilly.

AFFECTIONATE MANNERS IN MINISTERS.—How much ministers and religious teachers gain by a tender style! I hope, dear brother, you will never withhold the pungent doctrines of the gospel; but I hope you will cultivate that affectionate solemnity which accomplishes more than harshness. A minister preaches by his looks, his attitudes, and his tones, out of the pulpit, and in it, as well as by what he says. O, I do long to see love the prominent, all-pervading characteristic of every Christian.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

TEACHING A FUNCTION OF THE CHURCH.

The Church is a party to education, because TEACHING IS ONE OF THE FUNCTIONS OF THE CHURCH. This position in the abstract will scarcely be denied. God makes use of his Church to "teach all nations." It is her very vocation to instruct in divine things. The great practical question here for consideration is, how far the teaching of other things besides pure religion is embraced within the scope of ecclesiastical authority?

In answering this question so as to bring general learning within the lawful sphere of the Church, it is important to remember, in the first place, 1. That the proper knowledge of the Bible calls into requisition learning of every kind. History, geography, astronomy, mental philosophy, general literature, and in short, every department of knowledge is fairly subject to the demands of every one who desires thoroughly to understand the Scriptures. On the principle, therefore, that the greater includes the less, the Church has a right to teach the general branches of education as auxiliary to the interpretation and knowledge of the divine word.

2. It must also be remembered that, if secular knowledge is taught outside of the Church and in a secular way, the opportunities for inculcating divine truth are rendered very unpromising. The Church cannot hopefully undertake the dissemination of religion throughout the world, when secular training is allowed to anticipate its aims.

3. In the third place, light may be thrown upon this subject by inquiring into the natural method of propagating religion among the ignorant and the heathen. Is it by education, or by simply preaching the word, or by a union of the two? Certainly by a union of the two. All our missionary stations have elementary schools and higher academies as indispensable auxiliaries in the work of teaching religion. These institutions cannot be trusted to foreign hands. The Church herself must superintend them with a religious interest which does not slumber. Her hopes of success are there. The great educational Institute, under Dr. Duff's care at Calcutta, has done more to undermine Hinduism than all other causes combined. The Government institution, in which religion was not definitely taught, produced no impression upon the pagan mind, except to make it infidel. But the Spirit of the Lord has made the Christian institution of the Free Church of Scotland a terror to the Brahmins, whilst the other readily receives their patronage. Experience proves that in the propagation of Christianity the Church cannot forego the advantages of superintending the mental cultivation of those she hopes to convert to the knowledge of the truth.

4. Let it also be considered that, in a Christian land, the Church succeeds in winning her youth to the Saviour in proportion as she combines the religious element with secular learning. It is indeed said that, in Christian countries, where there are so many other opportunities of inculcating religious truth, there is no necessity for the care of the Church in general education. In opposition to this statement, it may be confidently affirmed that fidelity to the Redeemer in daily education receives a blessing even where other privileges are realized to the greatest extent. What institutions enjoy the outpourings of God's Spirit? Is religion often, if ever revived, where the course of instruction is not leavened with religious truth and superintended by religious men? The promises of God are not with the ungodly. His covenant is with them that fear Him. Conversions to Christ are the joy of religious institutions.

5. The facility with which ministers become teachers of general knowledge, and the admitted relationship between the two professions of preaching and teaching, go far to establish the position taken. Probably nearly 300 of our ministers are engaged in teaching, and many of them in immediate connexion with the work of the ministry. The fathers of our Church signalized themselves as instructors of youth. Numbers of them personally established and superintended schools and academies. Did these men depart from their ordination vows? On the contrary, did not the general commission to preach the gospel, and to feed the lambs, authorize them to devote a large part of their energies in training the rising generation and in bringing the Gospel to bear upon their minds and hearts through the apparently circuitous, but really direct, course of public education?

MISSIONARY PAROCHIAL SCHOOL OF THE TENTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA.

A few gentlemen of the 10th Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, realizing the importance of parochial school instruction, determined to organize one, in connection with a Missionary Sabbath-school already in existence in the south-west part of the city. A commodious brick edifice having been erected for the joint purpose, a Parochial School was opened on the first Tuesday of November, 1848, under a most efficient female teacher, with an attendance of seven scholars. A small tuition fee was imposed, of ten cents per week, for each pupil. This measure was of doubtful policy at first, inasmuch as public school education was gratuitous. It was believed, however, that time would prove the superiority of our system over the common school, if for no other reason than the blending of the religious with the secular, in the training of youth.

From the very threshold of our work, it was evident that we were following, not leading, Providence. The field was white to the harvest. Confidence in the school daily gained ground among the people of that district. The Bible was read and studied as the foundation of all true knowledge. The Shorter Catechism was introduced as a necessary text-book. The elementary branches of English education were faithfully taught. The school prospered. Our mountain stood strong, because the Lord was our reward and defence.

In the fall of 1849 we numbered fifty scholars. Improvements were then made in the school fixtures, by the introduction of new desks, chairs, &c., adding to the comfort and health of the scholars. In the spring of 1851, there were seventy-five scholars in attendance, which made it necessary to secure the services of an assistant teacher. With this increase of force, we found that more attention could be given to the older scholars, and their studies advanced. The juvenile department could also be more carefully regarded. In the month of November, 1851, three years from our organization, we numbered one hundred and twenty scholars.

The discipline and order of the school is believed to be as perfect as fallen human nature will allow it to be. The use of the rod is seldom resorted to. To any one visiting the school, the hallowed influence of divine truth is most palpable. Portions of the New Testament, gospels and epistles, have been memorized by the scholars, together with many of David's Psalms. The Shorter Catechism has been entirely committed to memory by the older scholars. The Child's Catechism is studied by the second division.

By way of extending the benefits of Sabbath and Parochial-school instruction to the adult population of that neighbourhood, a religious exercise has been commenced on Sabbath evenings in the school-room, and a course of lectures on Sacred Biography is now in process of delivery. The attendance on this service is some two hundred. Thus, if we mistake not the signs of the times, is the Lord of the vineyard speaking to us, "Say not ye, there are yet four months, and then cometh harvest? Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." T.

In the academical department the operations of the Board have been in a high degree successful. The number of academies has considerably increased; and others are projected, and will go into operation in the course of the year. Not a few of our Presbyterial academies are among the most flourishing institutions in the land. God has given them favour in the sight of the people, and blessed several of them with the outpouring of his Holy Spirit. A number of these institutions, where they have had full opportunity to develope their characteristics, are acknowledged to be of a higher order than any which have ever preceded them in the districts where they are located. Although this may not be affirmed of all, yet their general success fully establishes the hopefulness of educational efforts under the care of the Church.

There are now forty-one Presbyterial Academies; and in another year the number will doubtless reach fifty. That faith is small which limits to insignificant results so many institutions, honouring the living word of God, and aiming to promote his glory. The revival of these institutions is a sort of memorial of our ancient educational energies, and a pledge that Presbyterians will not soon be found unwatchful again of the right training of their youth.

"FEED MY LAMBS."

Make the young (says one of our contemporaries) the objects of your care. "In the morning sow thy seed," and you shall reap an abundant harvest. It is related of Francis Xavier, an accomplished and devoted Jesuit, that when labouring as a missionary in India, after travelling a whole day steeped in rain, when he lay down to rest upon the sand in his wet Spanish cloak as his only covering, he used to say to his attendant, if even a little child should come to ask him a question at midnight, "Be sure to awake me: don't let the child go away." O that we all had equal zeal in an infinitely better cause!

Your Master loved little children. The disciples, in their ignorance, would have kept them away, as unworthy the attention of the incarnate God; but He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." They are the lambs of his flock. "He gathers the lambs in his arms, and carries them in his bosom." They are the hopes of our Church; and, if you have the spirit of your Master, you will make them objects of your peculiar regard.

Little children are eagle-eyed: they see your mind in your manner; they scrutinize your very motives; they soon discover whether or not you love them; and whatever you say to the children of your flock, whatever act of kindness or affection you show them, will be treasured in their memory when they are gray-headed men and women, and when you are in the deep grave.

There is not in the volume of revelation a character more brilliant than that of David. I admire him as a fearless youth, when tending his father's flock, and saving them from the lion and the bear. I admire him as a poet, writing those transporting songs that have carried many a soul in its aspirations to heaven; and as a musician, striking his harp to strains as sweet as angels sing. I admire him as a warrior, putting to flight the enemies of the Lord. I admire him as a king with a crown upon his head, and the sceptre in his hand. But I confess I admire him more than all, when he left the cares and the glories of royalty behind him, and gathered his youthful subjects around him, and said, "Come, ye children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord."

It is a fine sight to see the old oak tree, waving in majesty on the brow of the mountain; but to me it is, if possible, still more interesting to walk through a sweet garden, when the little flowers are blooming in all the tints and hues of their beauty, and every shrub is clothed with the most delicate and lovely verdure. And while one is delighted to see the fathers and mothers advancing to the full maturity of Christian character, it is delightful, in the nursery and garden of the Church, to see them training up the tender saplings till they become "trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He may be glorified." Your sons will thus be like "plants grown up in their youth;" and your daughters like "corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace." That little boy, to whom you now affectionately teach the simple elements of divine truth, may give you his manly arm to rest upon, when you are tottering in old age. That little girl, whose head you stroke in approbation, when she has timidly repeated her catechism and hymns, may yet attend you on a bed of sickness with all a Chloe's Christian love.—London Wesleyan Magazine.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

All that the Board deem it important to furnish is their CORPORATE NAME, viz.

"The Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America."

Any person, disposed to leave a legacy to the Board of Education, is requested to insert the right CORPORATE NAME. The State laws differ so much that no one Form will answer in all the States.

The following form may be used in Pennsylvania.

I give and devise to the Trustees of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the sum of ——— dollars, to and for the uses of the said Board of Education, and under its direction.

[When real estate, or other property, is given, let it be particularly described.]

SCHOLARSHIPS.

The sum of Seventy-five dollars forms a scholarship to assist a student in the collegiate course, and the sum of One Hundred dollars in the theological course.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Education. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to all the Honorary members every year.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, July 13, 1852.

Africa.—Letters have been received from Monrovia, Kentucky, Sinoe, and Settra Kroo, dated respectively May 15, May 22, April 22, and May 1. Our missionary friends were in the enjoyment of usual health, and were prosecuting their ordinary labours. Mr. Wilson gives an encouraging notice of the Alexander High School, and expects soon to forward a report of the last session. Another minister is greatly needed as pastor of the church in Monrovia. From Kentucky, Mr. Erskine writes, "Our church here has had three additions within two weeks. Sabbath before last, Mr. Wilson preached and administered the Sacrament for us. The last monthly concert of prayer was a season of refreshing to the church. Missionary reports were interesting to our people. When they heard how much was doing for the conversion of the world, and especially for the work of evangelizing Africa, their joy was increased, their prayers were more to the point, and they seemed to feel more of a child-like trust in our covenant-keeping God."—It will be thought by many of our readers, that this is the legitimate and happy effect of the missionary cause, even on the feeblest churches.

China.—Letters have come to hand from Ningpo, Shanghai, and Canton, dated respectively April 5, April 16, and April 22. Mr. Happer expresses much satisfaction at being able to re-rent the premises occupied by him in the midst of the native community. No opposition was manifested, which is attributed to the kind feeling awakened by the dispensary labours of the missionaries. At Shanghai, the Taoutai had prohibited the workmen to proceed with a building, on a lot lately purchased by the missionaries. His objections, it is hoped, will be overcome. Some superstitious notions about building in front of a neighbouring tomb are supposed to be the cause of his opposition. In a former instance, the same magistrate had opposed the purchase of a particular lot, fearing the missionaries would erect a building higher than his own, and thereby cause his death! Visionary as are his fears, they are real evils to him. Influencing a man of his rank and intelligence, they show in a striking manner the sad effects of idolatry on its votaries, and should call forth our compassion and our prayers on their behalf.—At Ningpo, Mr. Rankin mentions that eleven chapters of the Gospel of Luke had been translated into the colloquial dialect.

India.—Letters have reached us from Lahor, Amballa, and Agra, dated severally April 23, April 20, and May 6. We regret to learn that Mr. Morrison's health had become seriously impaired, so that his physician had prohibited all mental exertion. Urgent applications are again made for more men at Amballa and at Lahor. The Anglo-Indian school at Agra had already twenty scholars in attendance, and more were expected.

Europe.—A respected correspondent on the continent writes, under date of June 14, "As for Italy, the more the Christians are persecuted in ——, the more their faith is confirmed, and the more the Scriptures are sought after. The news from —— is also very good. ——— is very active in directing this work, in which he takes the greatest interest. A collection of Italian hymns is now in the course of preparation, and forty-four of them are ready."

Creek Mission.—The Rev. J. R. Ramsay and his wife have been constrained, by the failure of Mrs. Ramsay's health, to withdraw from the station of Kowetah. The Rev. A. W. Loomis and his wife, of the Ningpo Mission, have joined this station, under the provisional arrangement mentioned in the Annual Report.

Southwestern Indian Missions.—Our next number will contain a journal of a visit to these Missions, by Walter Lowrie, Esq., one of the Secretaries, who has recently returned from this tour. It will be seen that our brethren among these Indians, and their missionary work, have strong and tender claims on the confidence, sympathies, and prayers of the churches.

Mission to the Chinese in California.—The increasing numbers of Chinese in California, and their spiritual condition, have awakened much interest amongst the religious community in that new State, and also amongst the churches in the older States. Upon a memorial from the Presbytery of California, this subject received the consideration of the Executive Committee. We are grateful to state that measures have been taken for sending a missionary to these Chinese. The Rev. W. Speer and his wife, it is expected, will proceed on this mission about the 1st of September. Our readers will remember Mr. Speer as formerly connected with the mission at Canton, from which he was compelled to return by impaired health. His knowledge of the Canton dialect, and his missionary experience, will find immediate employment in this new field of labour, it being a remarkable circumstance that the Chinese in California are all from the province of Canton.

It is not easy to predict the extent of emigration from China to this country. The Chinese may be considered an emigrating people, not less than the Irish or the Germans. The deeply impoverished condition of vast multitudes in China, their want of employment, their hopeless prospect of a better lot at home, are strong reasons for their seeking a foreign land. Hundreds of thousands of them are found in the countries of the east within reach of China, where they are permanent residents. They now find it easy to reach our shores, and their keen practical thirst for gain, added to the general causes already mentioned, will probably bring great numbers of them here, unless powerful causes should arrest their course. Such causes we do not see yet developed. The recent outbreaks against them are already subsiding. The views commonly prevailing amongst our citizens favour the emigration of people from every country. Nor can it be denied that these Chinese are a better class of emigrants than many who come from Europe. They do not fill up our poor-houses and prisons. On the contrary, their industry, their uprightness, their peaceful minding of their own business, make them a very valuable class of our population. What they want is the gospel. Has not God brought them here to receive it?

We would, without enlarging, commend this new mission and our esteemed friends who are expecting to embark in it, to the special prayers of the churches. It will add considerably to the expenditure of the Board, and it was not provided for in the estimates, according to which the expenses of the current year are graduated; but we trust the means for carrying it forward with vigour will not be found wanting.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY.

A new volume of this publication commenced with the June Number. We insert a list of the contents of the June and July numbers, of both editions—Newspaper and Pamphlet. The latter is one of the lowest priced works in the country; and we take leave to add, one of the best of its class. It contains about three octavo pages more matter than the Newspaper edition, with occasional supplementary pages as in the July number. Its price, is twenty-five cents a year—postage not included. The Newspaper edition is published at a relatively still lower price, viz. Ten copies for one dollar—postage included.

It will be observed that the much larger part of the contents of this publication consists of original papers; and that it is all different from the contents of the Foreign department of the Record, excepting Recent Intelligence and Donations.

The Foreign Missionary is edited for both adult and juvenile readers, and is not designed exclusively for any one class; but the object aimed at is to make it a Missionary Paper for the family.

Subscriptions may commence with any number. Address—The Foreign Missionary, 23 Centre Street, New York.

CHINA: NINGPO MISSION.

THE RELIGIONS OF CHINA, BY THE REV. A. W. LOOMIS. NO. IV.

Buddhism:—Its Priests; their duties, character, influence, &c.—The five precepts of Buddhism.

The priests of this sect in China are very numerous; we cannot go far without meeting priests or nuns. Their dress is a long flowing robe, with large sleeves, of a yellow colour. The head is shaved quite bald, as a sign of purity. They go bare-headed except in winter, when they wear a dark-coloured hood, with a broad cape; and in summer there are some exceptions, when the sun is fierce. Travelling priests, and those about the country begging, sometimes wear a broad hat. They do not learn trades, or perform any useful labour, except that the inferior priests are detailed by the superior to perform the menial services of the temple, such as sweeping, keeping the door, lighting the lamps, etc. In some cases a part of the lands belonging to the monastery are worked by the inferior priests, but in most cases all such lands are leased to farmers, who give to the superior one half the products of the grounds as rent. The priests are extremely lazy, and not a few appear almost like idiots; having no profitable stimulus for mind or body, and the chief end of their being seems to be to mumble over the name of Buddha, and to eat and sleep.

They are despised by the respectable portion of their own countrymen, because they deceive so many silly people, and are themselves useless drones, and because they live in violation of some of the prominent doctrines of Confucius. He insisted on industry and correct behaviour, but above all, on regard for ancestors and the consequent obligation to marry and rear families. But the Buddhist priests do not marry, and many of them are notoriously profligate in their habits. They adopt or buy young boys who are to be their successors in the priesthood. Sometimes persons disgusted with the world join a community of priests, and if they carry with them much property they can make an arrangement by which they may be exempted from menial services: but many join them who are willing to serve for a piece of bread, or rather for their allowance of rice and pulse. These are generally from the lowest of the people. Very few of the priests are educated men: all of them must learn such parts of the liturgy as they will need in the discharge of their office as priests; yet if they memorize the lessons, it is as well as if they could read them. Many sentences in their liturgy, and some entire prayers are simply transferred from the original, which is an ancient language of India; all such are entirely unintelligible both to priests and people. It makes, however, little difference in what language they pray, since he to whom most of their worship is addressed died two thousand and eight hundred years ago, and who when living was but a man, unable to prolong his own mortal existence, or to save his own soul; and much less could he have saved others.

There are five precepts which Buddhist priests are required to observe. 1st. Thou shalt not kill any living thing. 2d. Thou shalt not steal. 3d. Thou shalt not marry. 4th. Thou shalt not speak falsely. 5th. Thou shalt not drink wine. In another place I find ten prohibitions mentioned, which are, the killing of animals, theft, adultery, falsehood, discord, harsh language, idle talk, covetousness, envy and malice, following the doctrines of false gods.

Ceremonies in the Monasteries.

The religious duties of the priests are to perform the daily service in the temple, as matins and vespers. In the monasteries we have noticed the routine of ceremonies to be somewhat as follows: Long before light in the morning the big bell and drum are sounded to awaken the god, and two or three of the priests go to recite prayers before him; again after breakfast two or three others perform the same ceremonies. In the afternoon the whole company of the priests, in full dress, assemble in the principal temple before the colossal images of the three precious Buddhas, and here a long service is performed. Two priests standing by the altar lead the ceremonies, striking alternately, and at short intervals, a huge bell, a big drum or hollow piece of wood, and a large plate of iron. The company of priests stand in rows in front of the altar, on each side of the passage from the door to the altar, all chanting in one voice, now fast, now slow; now on a high key, now low. Now they kneel upon a mat or low stool, and remain with the face bent quite to the earth for many seconds, in perfect silence. Then they slowly rise and renew the solemn chanting; then one of the priests takes a cup of the consecrated water and pours it out upon a stone pillar, the top of which is formed like a shallow dish, at the door of the temple. Then the two leaders of the ceremony, continuing the chant, slowly march down the passage, the priests fall in two and two and march three or four times around within the temple, which is a spacious building. They return again to their former position, chant and kneel as before. These ceremonies continue for about half an hour; the effect of it upon the mind is rather impressive. In the evening again, between nine and ten o'clock, two or three priests go into the temple, as in the morning, to strike the bell, and hurry over the required form; this finishes the routine for the day. You see that their gods need bells sounded in their ears to arouse them; and surely they must be very sound asleep, for they never move from their position or turn their eyes. This is the daily service for the priests.

Observance of times—Devices to obtain money—Old women at prayers.

They have no Sabbaths, but observe with particular solemnity the first and full of the moon, the solstices and equinoxes, and "have in all," as Mr. Medhurst states, "one hundred and sixty-two fast days every year." The people are accustomed to visit the temples on every first and full of the moon; there are also special occasions, or special efforts made by the residents of the different monasteries for the purpose of recruiting their funds. The devices for this are various. The superior puts out his hand-bills and scatters them through the country, and orders them to be posted up on every corner, announcing that on a given day, or series of days, it will be highly meritorious and beneficial to visit the given temple or monastery, and bring offerings. The objects to which the proceeds are advertised to be devoted are, the repairing of the temple, or patching up, repainting and regilding the gods, or to cast a bell and the like. Women are by far the largest portion of worshippers at the temples, and on the special occasions just mentioned, they go early and stay all day, and often all night, and sometimes for three days and nights in succession. The birth-days of the gods are observed as special worshipping days, when multitudes flock to the temples, and the coffers of the priests are again replenished.

At some of the temples, and especially at the nunneries, may be seen almost every day, a number of old women, spending their time from morning till night, repeating prayers to Buddha. On entering the temple they go around to all the images, and even to the fierce looking things which guard the entrance, place a few burning incense sticks before each, then bow down, knocking the head three times upon the earth. They use the rosary, and keep an exact account of the number of their prayers and repetitions of the name of their god, and this account they expect to have buried with them, that they may have it to show in the next world in evidence of their merit.

It is sometimes the case that we miss some of the old women that we have been accustomed to meet day after day going to the temples, and on inquiring what has become of them, we are told that they "have said up all their prayers, and may now stay at home and mind their work." What an idea! They have filled up, as they suppose, the measure of the merit they will need, and have paid in advance for all the help their gods can afford them! But we must not despise them for their ignorance and folly. We must pity them, and inquire what can be done to save the multitudes who are now hastening on to the grave under these delusions.

Devotional 'account current'—Living Buddhas; a singular case.

The zealous Buddhists, as has been mentioned, keep an account of debt and credit; this they should look over at the end of every year, and at death they should be able to show a large balance on the credit side, that it may be carried with them to the other world. I have now by me a Buddhist liturgy, in the back part of which are 4700 small circles. When the devotee has gone over all the prayers in the book, he puts a dot into one of these circles; and this he does each time he goes through the book. The greater the number of circles he can mark the better, and this book he expects to carry with him to the other world, to bear witness for him. Deluded people! The only judgment they know anything about is, as they suppose, before the King of the infernal regions; and the only heaven they can look forward to, is a figment of their own fancy. But they must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; and the evidence of devotedness to Buddha, on which they now depend, will not avail them there.

Something has been said about present Buddhas, or men who are worshipped as living Buddhas. You may wish to know something about them. They are those who have brought themselves to a remarkable degree of fancied perfection by contemplation; or any "who can manage to sustain life without seeming to live." Such persons are in the habit of sitting much of the time with their legs drawn up and crossed under them, as their god is represented, without seeming to notice anything. I remember one of this sort who came to Ningpo, and created a great sensation both amongst all devout Buddhists, and amongst the literati; the latter were affected with disgust and indignation, and sent petitions to the chief civil officer of the department, praying him to expel from the city the vagabond priest who wished to be worshipped as a god. But the officer declined interfering with the religious sects, so long as they do not interfere with the affairs of government. The "present Buddha" of whom I am speaking was kept at one of the monasteries, and for three days he sat on the altar, certain portions of the day, and people flocked in thousands from the city, and all the surrounding country to see, and to worship him. From five to six hundred priests, who came in from the neighbouring monasteries and temples, were daily fed at the table, from provisions liberally furnished by a willing people. I passed through the halls twice during the performances, and at one time found the priests at dinner, and then I wondered where they could get enough to eat; but I passed on to the kitchen, and saw that ample provision had been made. At a caldron that would contain two hogsheads or more, stood a man with a long-handled shovel dipping up the rice into tubs; at another caldron of the same size, was a man with an instrument like a three-tined pitchfork, serving out boiled cabbage and vegetables. In other parts of the kitchen were bags of rice, heaps of cabbage and various kinds of vegetables, and tubs of salt; all these were donations. At the door of the temple was a stand where prayers were sold—a slip of yellow paper on which the prayer was printed; every worshipper bought one; the price was ten cash, or two-thirds of a cent; perhaps the cost was one cash each. Each worshipper brings candles and incense sticks. The candles burn but a few seconds, and are extinguished and become the property of the monastery; they are taken to a shop or stall outside, and again sold to persons coming to worship, and thus they may be sold a dozen or twenty times.

Priests on their journeys—Nunneries—Concluding reflections.

Any priest may travel from one part of the kingdom to another free of cost, as to board and lodging; and some stranger priests are generally met at the monasteries, for there are many that travel about, on pilgrimage to the sacred places. Any priest must be entertained by his brother priests for a day and night, and then, unless the weather is too unfavourable, he must depart on his journey. But if he is a person of uncommon sanctity he is entitled to three days' entertainment. The evidence of uncommon merit, is, in some cases, the absence of one or more fingers from the hand, or of the first, or first and second joints of the finger, which have been burned off. But though the priests pretend to sanctity, and profess to mortify the flesh, many of them are confirmed opium smokers, and others of them spend much of the time in gambling. When we lived in the central part of the city of Ningpo, our house was close by a Buddhist monastery, and we could look down into some of the monks' rooms, and from morning till night of every day, more or less of them were to be seen engaged in gambling.

Connected with the Buddhist sect are many nuns, these live in communities by themselves. The nunneries, like all buildings for religious purposes in China, are built by subscription, or by individual munificence. It is considered a work of great merit to help in constructing or repairing religious buildings, or other public works. The nuns are supported, like the priests, by fees and presents, and by any funds that may belong to the nunneries to which they are attached. Their patron goddess is Qwanyin. Their dress is very much like that of the monks; they have large feet, and wear such shoes as are worn by the men. They take a vow to avoid the society of men, and never to think of marriage; but, notwithstanding this vow, most of them lead profligate lives, and though the people all know it, still they fear them, because they suppose the nuns may have some mysterious connection with spirits, and may have it in their power to benefit or injure whom they please. Many of the women choose a nun as their spiritual adviser, and it is an object with the nuns to secure many friends of this kind, to whom they may look for support in case of necessity.

Enough has been said to exhibit the absurdity of their doctrines, and the unsubstantial nature of their hopes. How dreadfully are they to be disappointed! Who can calmly look on and see these hundreds of millions of people, blind themselves and led by blind guides, going on in the road to death? They give freely of their money, they fast, they pray, they afflict the body, all to procure blessings hereafter. But all their efforts are vain. They know not the true God; they know not the Saviour of sinners. And must they perish—need they perish? "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners," then the Chinese may be saved; but Christ Jesus must first be preached unto them.

A LETTER OF MR. M. S. COULTER: NINGPO, MARCH 10, 1852.

Reasons for occupying a Station at Chinhai.

As mentioned in the "Recent Intelligence" of last month, the missionaries at Ningpo have for some time considered it important to extend their operations, by forming a station at the city of Chinhai. The following letter gives their reasons for this measure. We are happy to add, that the Executive Committee have authorized the mission to proceed in this good work, agreeably to their suggestion in the last paragraph of this letter.

In our last Annual Report a few remarks were made in regard to the desirableness of having a mission station at Chinhai, the city at the mouth of the river on which Ningpo is situated. For several months past some of our number have had the subject in their thoughts, and have felt its importance. At a meeting on the 8th inst., it was formally laid before the mission, and after a free conversation on the subject, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"That we strongly recommend to the Executive Committee, that we be allowed to attempt the establishment of a branch mission at the port of Chinhai, by a detachment of one or two of our mission families, whose places shall thereafter be supplied by reinforcements from home."

Some of the reasons which have led us to make this recommendation, are—

1st. That it is accessible to foreigners. This, in China, is a very important item. It might be, and probably is, doubted by some, whether it is really an open port; but Ningpo being open, Chinhai, from its situation, seems necessarily open. It is considered by all the English consuls in China as part of the port of Ningpo. No foreigners having as yet attempted to reside permanently there, we do not know whether the Chinese authorities would oppose it or not. The reason we have not tried to find out their views on the subject is, that we think there would be no advantage gained by knowing them, if we have to wait six or seven months for authority to act; because the Chinese are so vasciilating that they might give their consent now, and oppose it six months hence, and vice versa. Neither do we think it would be politic. If we should ask leave of the authorities to make a visit to Teen-tung or Chusan, they would object; whereas, if we went without leave, they would say nothing about it. So in this case, if we asked permission they might object, but if we should take it for granted that they have no objections, we might be able to establish a mission there without a word of opposition.

2d. The size of the city would justify the establishment of a branch mission there. The city and immediate suburbs contain about 40,000 inhabitants. It is not scattered over a large surface, but is compactly built, and would consequently have this advantage, that the labours of the missionary would be known, and his influence felt throughout the whole city. There is also a large village within five or ten minutes' walk, containing several thousand inhabitants, and many others at no great distance containing their thousands.

3d. It is already occupied by Roman Catholics. We do not know that any foreign Roman Catholics reside there permanently, but they have chapels rented, and native assistants employed, who are indefatigable in trying to make converts. Roman Catholicism is the same in China as elsewhere; and the proud, domineering spirit of those who profess to be its converts, is exerting an unhappy influence upon the minds of the people, creating in them a prejudice against any foreign religion. On this account it would be desirable that a counter influence should be exerted, that they should be taught that there are some who seek them, not theirs. The sooner this is commenced, the more easily it will be accomplished.

4th. The dialect is the same as at Ningpo. There may be a few words that are pronounced slightly different; but they are so few that one speaking the Ningpo dialect well would find no difficulty whatever in making himself understood at Chinhai. The mission there being formed by a detachment from Ningpo, there would not therefore have to be any delay in acquiring the language; they would be able to commence their labours immediately. This is a great advantage gained.

5th. The healthiness of the location. Chinhai being situated directly on the sea-shore, is doubtless the most healthy city in China that is open to foreigners. If there were suitable buildings there, our missionaries would make it their summer retreat. Going to Chusan or Shanghai is always attended with a good deal of trouble, expense, and loss of time; but Chinhai, from its close proximity to Ningpo (12 miles distant) and its sameness of dialect, would present none of these difficulties.

6th. Establishing a branch mission at Chinhai would be adding one to the number of cities in which the gospel is already preached in China. When the Chinese are so exclusive in their ideas, and so anxious to keep foreigners out of the country, it seems necessary and important that we should take every fair advantage to establish ourselves among them, and proclaim to them the way and plan of salvation.

7th. Another consideration which induces us to recommend the permanent occupation of Chinhai, is, that it is at too great a distance from Ningpo for an out-station. But leaving the distance out of the question, we are convinced from observation and the experience of others, that transient visits, such as are made to out-stations, do not exert that wide and lasting influence which a permanent residence would. The seed must be watered as well as sown, if we expect it to spring up and bear fruit. This we think can not be well done by transient visits.

8th. Another advantage would be the increased facility for sending books to other parts of the Empire. All the junks trading at Ningpo have to stop at Chinhai to be examined by the custom-house officers; so that we could not only have the opportunity of distributing books among them, but also among great numbers of junks which do not come so far as Ningpo.

The above are the main reasons which we would urge for the occupation of Chinhai. The mission think that the only possible obstacle would be, that we might find it difficult to buy land and build houses at once, as, owing to the conduct of Roman Catholics, the people are afraid of foreigners. The authorities might also object to our residing permanently there, but as they have virtually granted this privilege to the Roman Catholics, we think they could not well deny it to us. It might, however, be necessary that the mission should be gradually established; that a house should first be rented, and a brother spend some months there without his family, until both the people and the authorities become acquainted with him and his object. Their prejudices would thus be gradually removed, and his permanent establishment among them would be gratifying instead of repulsive.

Having thus briefly, and as we think fairly, laid the subject before you, we leave it for your consideration.

INDIA: LODIANA MISSION.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. JOHN H. MORRISON.

The Missionary's Sabbath at Patiala.

On this journey to preach the gospel, Mr. Morrison was accompanied by two of the native brethren. They reached Patiala, a city of about 100,000 souls, under a native chief, late on Saturday.

March 16th, Sabbath.—This has been a day of hard work. After an early breakfast, went out in front of the tent and addressed a large crowd, which the native brethren had collected. I commenced by asking them what was the object of religion, of what use is it? One man answered, in substance, that it was to minister to human desires and passions. I replied, Do you say such is the object of the religion given by God to man? He said, Yes. Several in different parts of the crowd spoke up and said No, that that fellow knew nothing about the subject. I then said to him, You see your brethren with one consent pronounce your answer erroneous. Of course I must go by their decision; and as no one suggested any other object, I asked whether they thought it was to sow dissension and discord among men, or to produce peace, harmony, and love. They agreed that the latter must be the design of the religion that God would give to men. Again, I asked whether its design was to restrain men from sin, or to promote sin among men. To this they agreed that its object was to restrain men from sin, and that by these signs the true religion given by God might be distinguished from all human inventions.

I then proceeded to demonstrate to them, from the Korán and Shastras, that neither of these objects ever had been or ever could be attained by Islamism or Hinduism, but the reverse; but that both were provided for in the gospel of the grace of God, by which the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts. At this two or three Musalmáns spoke up, and said the Old and New Testaments were abolished. I asked for their authority for this assertion. They replied it was in the Korán. I asked where it was written in the Korán. One said if he had a Korán he would show me. I then immediately produced a Korán, and asked him to show me the place, but he excused himself by saying he had not performed his wazu (ablution), without which it was unlawful for him to touch the Korán! I then asked several others, but all made the same excuse! Not a soul would touch it! I then charged them with wilful falsehood in saying, when the Korán was not present, and they thought I could not produce one, that if it were present they would show the place, but the moment the Korán was produced they invented such a false and frivolous excuse for refusing to perform their promise; and then proceeded to prove from the Korán itself that the Old and New Testaments were not abolished, but were still binding, and that Mohammed acknowledged them as binding on himself. This demonstration astonished them, and some remained silent, while others resorted to abuse and making a great noise.

After preaching and discussing a long time, until I became hoarse and tired, I retired to the tent for rest and to seek help from on High, leaving the catechists to go on with the work. After a while returned to the work, and continued at it until dinner. Again after dinner went out, and continued at it until dark. Thus some have been compelled to think—they have had their thoughts directed in a new channel—they have received information respecting the iniquity of the systems they have been accustomed to regard as of divine origin, and of the excellency of the gospel, which they had never before supposed to exist—some seed has been sown, but O! how awfully hard and dry and cold the soil!—O that the dews of the Spirit may be granted to soften and moisten this dry and rock-like ground, and that the Sun of Righteousness may send forth his reviving rays to warm and fertilize these icy hearts, that the seed sown to-day may spring up and bring forth fruit abundantly, to the praise and glory of God the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit!

Sad scenes on a Hindu Festival: the degrading effects of Idolatry.

17th.—Another day of almost incessant labour, though the number of hearers was not so great as yesterday. It is the last day of the Holí festival, with its filthy and obscene ceremonies. Even the Rájá was out in the streets to-day, throwing the red powder and other filth on the people, and receiving his share in return. The crowd at such a time reminds one more of a company of demons than of any thing else. Only imagine the inhabitants of a large city, from the king down to the lowest inhabitant, shutting up shop, suspending all business, and turning out in the streets to spend the day in bespattering each other with coloured water, coloured powders, mud, dust, and water from any mud puddle they may meet, and see the whole as busy and hard at work as the firemen in one of your large cities while a great fire is raging, and you may form some idea of the scene that has been passing here and throughout India to-day and for some days past. Multitudes go out ready prepared for this filthy work with little leather hand-buckets, and wherever they can get coloured or filthy water, watch their opportunity to throw it on some passer by.

But this is not all, nor the worst of this disgusting festival. The filthy language and songs used by all classes, men, women, and children, is such as cannot be repeated, and the obscene images of Krishna publicly carried about the city, cannot be named, much less described. To this satanic work they are stimulated by all sorts of intoxicating liquors and drugs. Without witnessing some such scene, you can hardly form a conception of the awful depth of degradation and pollution into which idolatry has plunged this people. Such is the provision idolatry has made to meet the wants of immortal beings—to make them holy and prepare them for eternal bliss in the presence of a holy God! O that the people of God would take these things to heart, and labour more and pray more for the salvation of these miserable, blinded, degraded dupes of one of the most filthy and disgusting systems that ever disgraced the human race.

Illustrations of one great difficulty.

. . . . One great difficulty we labour under, is the ignorance of the people respecting their own religions. Hence when the iniquity of the Korán is exhibited, the Musalmáns exclaim, tauba, tauba, repent, repent, i. e. of the impiety of saying such things about the Korán—or lá háulwa lá qú ata illá billáhi—there is no power or virtue but in God. It is repeated to drive away evil spirits, or to escape the evil influence of some great impiety. While the Musalmán is repeating his lá haul the Hindú laughs. But then comes his turn, and when the iniquity of the Shastras is exposed, he is in astonishment at the exhibition of what he never supposed to exist, and in pious horror at the imputation of such iniquities to his holy shastras, he exclaims, Ram! Ram! The Musalmán then enjoys his laugh, and both open mouth and eyes in astonishment at the learning of the Sáhib.

Often they venture to deny that their books contain what we show to be in them, but when asked if they will renounce those books supposing these things are actually found in their own copies, or in the copies in possession of their religious guides, they shrink back from such a promise. Such is the hold Satan has on them, that often they say, right or wrong, they will stick to their own religion, be the result heaven or hell. It is enough to make one, who has some conceptions of the value of an immortal soul, shudder to hear them, as I have often heard them coldly say they would prefer hell in the religion of their fathers, to heaven in any other. O that the Spirit of God would accompany the word, and pour into their darkened minds the light of heaven, and guide their feet in the paths of eternal life and peace!

Effects of excessive labours—Patiala as a Missionary Station.

19*th.*—Owing to a bad headache and sore throat from too much speaking, was unable to do much to-day. The native Christians, however, were engaged most of the day in discussing with, and instructing the people. About the middle of the afternoon I joined them and assisted them, but was not able to take the burden of the work on myself, or to enter fully into any discussion. Distributed some books and gave some instructions, showing that Christ was the only Saviour, and all others guilty sinners and not to be trusted.

20*th.*—Have been occupied most of the day, as usual, in various discussions with Hindus and Musalmáns, and instructing them in the way of salvation.

21*st.*—To-day has been occupied much as the rest of the week, but with fewer visitors. For this there are two reasons; one is, the novelty has somewhat worn off, and the other is, most of my Urdú books are gone; though I have exercised great caution in the distribution. This is one of the largest cities, if not the largest, I have seen in the north-west Provinces, and ought, as soon as circumstances will permit, to be occupied by the heralds of the cross. It is the capital of a native Rájá; and whether he or the government of the East India Company would interpose any difficulty in the way of the settlement of missionaries here or not, remains to be ascertained when we are prepared to make the proposition. But at present it would be necessary, if occupied at all, to send a physician; for there are no Europeans here at all, and none but native physicians to depend on. As a field for itinerating missionary labour, it is fully equal to the most favourable portions of the Company's territories, and much more so than some.

Conversation with a sinful Saint.

22*d.*—Saniáwar.—On my arrival here, walked into a large garden close by, belonging to the Patiála Rájá, where there is a báoli (a large well with a wide flight of steps from the water to the surface of the ground) extending back a long distance. Here I found a Sanyási Faqir who has made the recesses of the walls his residence for two years. He was watering some flowers in pots, which done he washed his face and hands. I then engaged him in conversation, and set before him the gospel plan of salvation, to all which he assented, as true and excellent, but said he had never heard of these things before. While I was talking with him he went away for a moment, and returned with his face all covered with ashes. In course of conversation I spoke of the darkness in which the people were involved; to which he replied, Yes, these people are all blind; for see, said he, they call me Father, and worship me, while I use all sorts of intoxicating drugs and am guilty of all uncleanness, and am now actually suffering the consequences of my licentious life. Yet, says he, they are so blind as to worship me as a great Saint! I told him I had often told the people that whoever would lay aside the appearance of a human being and adopt that of a hog, and indulge in all sorts of licentiousness, everybody would regard him as a saint. He said this was all true. I then solemnly pressed on him the guilt of his course in living such a life, and still taking advantage of the credulity of the people to impose himself on them as a saint. From his candor I did entertain some faint hope that he might profit by my instructions, but he was then taking intoxicating drugs and stupifying himself so as to unfit himself for anything but iniquity. His rescue would be truly a miracle of grace, and yet the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ is fully equal to the greatness of such a work. Returning met with several people from the city going to bathe, with whom I had a long conversation, during which time the carts arrived and the tent was pitched. During the day numbers continued coming and going, so that we had as much as we were able to attend to until after dark.

Some of the discouragements—A shaven-headed Musalmán's idea of religion.

23*d, Sabbath.*—To-day have had some specimens of the discouragements which almost constantly, in one shape or other, fall with oppressive weight upon the missionary, and fill him with sadness. While at breakfast I overheard the Pandit very earnestly engaged in proclaiming man's sinfulness and the gospel remedy, when all at once one in the crowd spoke up and asked him what his name was. In the same way, when I was speaking, a man interposed some objections and asked some questions, which I answered evidently to his conviction, if not to his satisfaction; and when I thought I had not only silenced, but interested him, he suddenly asked some silly question about the price of grain!

One great difficulty is, that neither Hindus or Musalmáns can conceive of any other religion than that of forms and ceremonies, and abstaining from certain kinds of food; nor any kind of holiness but that produced by the use of water; consequently when we speak to them of a religion of the heart and a holiness which consists in hating all sin and in love to God and man, our language has no meaning to them. They cannot understand how there can possibly be any religion where there is no imposing round of ceremonies, or holiness where there are no bodily ablutions, or prayer without a set form to be repeated at all times, on all occasions, whether understood or not. Hence, after having exhibited the gospel plan of salvation, they think that all is well enough, but ask what is your religion? what is it lawful for you to eat? and what must you abstain from? When we exhibit the New Testament instructions on that subject, they reply—you have no religion, you eat just what you please! and you eat and pray without first bathing or performing any ablutions! . . . As an example, while at dinner a Musalmán came to the tent, whose head was all closely shaved. Shaving the beard they consider an awful sin, in comparison with which falsehood, theft, and adultery or the like, are not to be named; but shaving all the hair off the head is one of their highest acts of merit. Well, after dinner I went out and he took his seat before me in front of the crowd, to hear what the religion of the gospel was, and to discuss points on which we might differ. When all were seated, I commenced by taking ground on which all were agreed; God is omniscient, the searcher of hearts, and requires of his people the homage of the heart, &c. To this all agreed, and I hence drew the conclusion that whatever religion God gave would be a religion of the heart, but that as man could take cognizance of external actions only, it was most likely he would invent a religion which had reference chiefly, if not solely, to external rites and ceremonies. I then proceeded to show from Scripture and reason that all our ills owe their origin to sin, and so on. Thus far all had remained silent and apparently interested listeners; but as I was about to exhibit the work of the Spirit, the shaved head interrupted me. I begged he would allow me first to finish what I was saying, and then propose his questions. But no, he insisted on my first hearing his question. Well, as he considered his question so important I yielded; and when it came, what was the question of this learned and holy man? It was no more nor less than this, "What are you allowed, and what are you forbidden to eat?" I then, in reply, read to him several passages on the subject from the New Testament, on hearing which he got up in holy disgust, and saying we had no religion and were unfit to be reasoned with, he walked away! Such is a specimen of their ideas of what religion consists in.

JOURNAL OF THE REV. CHARLES W. FORMAN.

Hindu worship—Interviews and discussions with Mohammedans.

Lahor, March 22*d.*—This evening, as I walked through the fields near the city, I stopped at a Hindu temple in a beautiful garden. It was becoming quite dark. The priests within were performing their evening worship. A bell, a gong, and a drum, were all called into use to attract the attention of their god.

23*d.*—Went into the "Sona Musjid," (the Golden Mosque) this afternoon, and began to talk to a respectable-looking man whom I met there. After a short time I was interrupted by a voice from behind me, telling me they did not wish to hear what I had to say, but wished me to bring my books and compare them with theirs. This I cheerfully consented to, and to-morrow at one o'clock was fixed upon as the time. I then took my leave, and going a little further, stopped at a well. Soon a crowd of Hindus collected, and we conversed some time on the subject of idolatry, with which some Musalmáns who came up seemed greatly pleased, particularly an old man, whose shop I passed in going home. As I passed he called me up, and said, "I liked what you said this evening very much, did you get it out of a book, or out of your own heart."

24*th.*—Went to the Sona Musjid according to agreement; found the man present who had challenged me to the discussion. He immediately went away, and after a while returned with another Moulwe. One of those who were present insisted upon my taking off my shoes when I entered the house adjoining the Musjid, which I did not do very willingly, because I knew it was unnecessary, as they never expect us to take off our shoes unless we go into one of their holy places, which this was not. And, moreover, it seemed evidently to be done in a bad humour, and as a sort of humiliation. However, I did take them off. I asked for something to sit upon. The same man told me to sit upon the floor, that I must sit upon a level with them, if I conversed with them. I was a little out of patience with what seemed to be a deliberate intention to treat me with contempt, so I replied that I was not accustomed to sit upon the floor, that my clothes were not adapted to that mode of sitting as theirs were; that I was not too proud to sit on a level with them, but it was not convenient. At last they consented to my sitting a little more elevated than they were. We soon got to work, but in the mean time quite a concourse of people had assembled. There were three Moulwes, I believe, two of whom seemed to be men of considerable importance.

One began the discussion, by asking how I knew the book we called the gospel was the true gospel which was originally given. I replied, we knew it, because, 1st, We had in our libraries in London and other places, gospels which were made 1500 years ago; that it was acknowledged on all hands that at that time the true gospel was in existence; and that between these old books and those we now made there was no difference. 2d. Although there was, and always had been such diversity among Christians, still they all had always acknowledged the one gospel which we now have; and 3d. If the gospel were lost, it might be re-written almost entire from the prophecies with reference to it contained in the Jewish Scriptures. This conformity proved the purity of our gospel.

He then wanted to know how I could prove that the writers of the New Testament were inspired; which I did from the miracles of the apostles, and other arguments. He then said, "If you believe the gospel on the ground of miracles wrought, why don't you believe the Shasters on the same ground?" I showed him the difference between the miracles wrought by the apostles, and those professedly wrought by the Hindu priests. He then said, "Why don't you believe Mohammed on the ground of his miracles?" I said he never wrought any, and produced a passage from the Koran to prove that he did not. It was with great difficulty that they could find the passage I referred to, but at last they found it, and then said mine was a wrong translation, that it was written there were some signs which God did not give to Mohammed. Here I was at a stand, because I could not read Arabic, but I said, "what is the word you translate some?" intending to inquire into the matter. He replied, Al. I happened to know that al was merely an article, and did not mean "some." I told him what al meant. But he did not seem to be in the least disconcerted by being detected in a manifest falsehood, but instantly changed his ground and said al meant a certain—or the—and pointed out a particular miracle. I showed him that the word was miracles, not miracle, and the context forbade his explanation. He had nothing more to say, and our conversation was broken off by the arrival of one of their fixed times of prayer, to be resumed on Friday.

Persian school—Moulwes again—Magic lantern exhibition—English school examination—English Missionaries.

26*th, Friday.*—In the morning went to see a Persian school I had lately established in the city, under one of my English scholars, a very intelligent young Moulwe. It promises well; already twenty-seven names enrolled. I hope for much fruit from this school, as I shall have constant opportunity of imbuing the mind of the teacher with our ideas and sentiments.

At one o'clock, after spending three hours in the English school, went to the Golden Mosque according to agreement, but found them at their worship. They rather contemptuously asked me to wait an hour or so, which I declined to do. To receive such treatment from such people is hard to bear with Christian patience and love. One said, "What is your conversation that we should give up the worship of God for it?" I merely replied that I did not ask them to do it. They had appointed a time for a conversation, and that I was present at the appointed time, but if they were not ready, I must go. How galling to such a sensitive disposition as our Saviour's must have been the treatment he received.

In the evening, after preaching in two places in the Bazar, went to the school to exhibit the magic lantern to the pupils. Much to my surprise, found the house crowded with scholars and visitors. Every bench was occupied, and many on the floor, crowded to the very curtain, though the room is a large one, say 45 by 25 feet. I have seldom witnessed such displays of surprise and delight, as the spectators manifested. Their interest continued to the last.

27*th.*—This morning had an examination of the English School, before many European and native gentlemen. Among the former were Mr. Lawrence and Mr. Montgomery, members of the Board of Administration. Among the latter, Raja Dína Náth, who was perhaps the greatest man in the Panjab under Ranjit Singh, and main support of the government. All seemed to be greatly pleased, and spoke most favourably of the school in the remarks in the visitors' book.

I spent the latter part of the day at Mr. Jay's, with Mr. Clarke, one of the Amritsar missionaries; the latter is a most loveable man. His father is a clergyman of the Church of England; he educated this son at an enormous expense, and just when he thought he should see his son well located at home, he told him his purpose to become a foreign missionary. It almost broke the old man's heart, but at last he gave his consent. The time is not yet past when men must hate father, mother, brothers, and sisters for Christ, and upon no easier terms will he receive a single disciple. How thankful ought I to be that God has sent two such men to Amritsar. Surely it will puzzle Satan to cause any root of bitterness to spring up between us.

28*th, Sunday.*—In the morning heard Mr. Clarke preach from the text "Who will consecrate himself this day unto the Lord," a good plain gospel sermon. In the evening preached in English at the schoolhouse to our little English congregation, subject "the glory of God in the fear of Christ." Several of the more advanced pupils were present; and one Musulmán, who seemed soon to be satisfied. The subject would scarcely please him.

Royal buildings—An Emperor's grave—Missionary labours.

29*th, Monday.*—In the afternoon I left Lahor to go out on a preaching tour. Came out to "Shah Dera" (the King's Tent) so called, I believe, because the King always joined his camp here, when going on any expedition northward. Here is the tomb of "Jahan gir," or as his name is written on his tomb, "Núr-al-Dín Muhamúd Jahán Gír Bádhsha." He was the son of Akbar, and father of Sháh Jahan, by whom his tomb and the Shálamár gardens were made. The tomb is a fine building. The foundation is about 300 feet square, covering a space of 90,000 feet. At each corner there are most beautiful minarets built of various coloured marble, a beautiful specimen of Mosaic; the floor of marble also. But nothing produces the impression of sublimity so much as the Mosaic pillars and arches, forming a portico all around the building. I went to the door last night, intending to go into the tomb to see the tomb proper, the place where the body lies. The door was closed, but through an opening between the folding doors, I could see the dim light of the lamp at the grave. I went around to another side, and found a door open, but by this time my mind was so affected by the silence and gloom, as well as the sublimity of the building, that I found it difficult to enter, though I am not very nervous. The grave is where the passages from the four sides meet. It is surrounded by latticework of white marble. The floors of the passages are of white marble, inlaid with stones of different colours. The tomb in the centre is of the same, only the stones are set in the form of flowers. On it also are praises of God written in black letters of stone. The Faqír who lived at the place, said that it had been swept and the lamp lighted by him and his ancestors, from the time of Sháh Jahan.

30*th.*—Went into the village, which contains perhaps 3000 people. In the morning, preached an hour at a shop, where I found a man very well acquainted with the gospel. The son of a native prince (Sardar) was reading with him. I gave them both books, and also several others. Then went to a Mosque, where I found a very stupid Moulwe. A number of the better order of people came in, and I talked with them for two hours. None would take books. But two or three followed me and took them in another place. One said, "These people don't understand; I know the gospel is true." Then, I said, Why don't you obey it? O, said he, they would give me great trouble if I should. I talked with him for some time; he promised to come to see me at Lahor. Went to another Musjid (Mosque) where there was a very amiable and intelligent Moulwe, but I was too tired to talk with him. Gave him a gospel and tract. I am sitting in a room over the gate of the garden of the tomb. It is large and airy, but I could not sleep last night for the noise made by the owls and bats; and because I had an idea, that as a thief entered my room last fall, the first night I was out, so one would come to-night. But he did not come.

31*st.*—Came about 15 miles yesterday afternoon. Much of the road was under water, which made it very difficult for the camels to travel, their feet being formed for sand; it is difficult and dangerous for them to march on muddy roads. Got into my tent at half-past ten. And this morning went into the neighbouring village and preached to a number of Hindus, who listened pretty well and seemed to understand. In the afternoon went to another village, where, perhaps the gospel was never before heard. But met with a good deal of opposition from the Qází, which is sometimes translated "judge;" though I don't know why, for he is rather an ecclesiastical than civil officer. As I approached the village, I felt great pleasure in the thought that I was to offer salvation for the first time, to a simple people; so I was greatly disappointed by meeting with opposition. I begged the Qází to take a book and read and compare it with the Korán, and see if they were both from God; if not, which was. No, he replied, I'll not take on me such a load as that, but follow my own way. I then turned to the people and told them if they followed him he would certainly lead them to perdition. But they seemed to care for none of these things.

April 2*d.*—This morning came into Lahor again, being driven in by the rain. Spent the evening at the chaplain's with the Amritsar missionaries, who left for Amritsar during the following night.

School re-opened—Bazar preaching—Death of a former pupil—Notices of Sermons preached—Religious impressions amongst Scholars.

3*d.*—To-day re-opened the school, a good attendance. At the examination I gave certificates to all the English scholars. They seem to have produced a good effect. Those who got good ones were much encouraged; and those who got bad ones determined to do better this year. It was delightful to see them all meet in such good spirits and begin with so much earnestness.

Went to the Bazár this afternoon, determined to preach a sermon without allowing myself to be interrupted. Again and again my hearers tried to stop me, but I insisted upon their waiting till I had preached what I had to say. With a good deal of trouble, I got through a sermon and prayer of 30 minutes or so. I heard several say, "O, he is only giving advice." But when, in conclusion, I said prayer must be made through Jesus Christ, then began the usual dispute. They can bear any thing but to hear of the character and work of our Saviour. Even when I spoke of the inability of man to pray till God gave him a new heart, they assented; but to pray in the name of Christ, they could not endure.

12*th.*—During the last ten days, I have been engaged as usual, in the School and Bazár. To-day heard of the death of a youth who had been a pupil in our school. I considered him one of the most promising boys we had, and, for a time, I thought him a serious inquirer; but his mind seemed suddenly to undergo a great change, and to be filled with the most intense hatred for Christianity. I felt a great deal of interest in him, and exerted myself to save him, but in vain, I fear. Not in vain, for we never do our duty in vain, "we are a sweet savor in them that perish." In the evening preached a long sermon on the Divinity of Christ, which seemed to be well received, almost no opposition. This greatly astonished me, and I almost hoped a fair day was dawning.

13*th.*—To-day attempted to preach at the same place, "the Dihlí gate," on the benefits of Christ's Death; —a stormy time.

14*th.*—To-day in the same place, on the Holy Spirit;—better than yesterday. Had a Surdar (nobleman) and four Moulwes to hear me. A Moulwe asked me why I did not receive the Koran? I answered as usual, because it was not God's book, which I could prove; and began to do so by reading two contradictory passages from it. He denied the correctness of one of the quotations, and we concluded by engaging to meet at my room at the school, on Saturday, to examine this and other passages of the Korán. Other Moulwes will be present, I hope. I have great difficulty from not being able to read Arabic, and so having to use a translation; the correctness of which it is very easy to deny when they get into trouble.

This morning I asked one of our finest pupils what he thought of the character of their gods, he replied, "Before I knew Christianity I thought they were perfect, but now I think they are utterly imperfect." Another said, "We know that idolatry is wrong, but it is so fixed in our hearts that we can't get it out." I told him that if the Holy Spirit would touch their hearts they would soon get rid of it. He then wanted to know how he could obtain his influences. "I know," said he, "you always say, pray for them. But how must I pray, what words must I use?" Poor fellow! how utterly helpless and lost is man; he feels after God in the dark, but never can find him till God is pleased to give him light. I well remember how I was bewildered once. And that which is now so plain as to need no explanation, or rather as to be incapable of explanation, was most unintelligible. I believe the best instruction to give one in such a state is just this,—You can never understand these things till God reveals them to you. You can never come to God till he draws you. Then, like a helpless, lost sinner, cry for mercy—who knows but that he will hear you?

EUROPE: MISSIONS IN FRANCE.

REPORT ON EVANGELIZATION IN ISERE: MAY, 1852.

General remarks—Labours of the two missionaries, Messrs. G—— and C——.

We are happy to say, in beginning this Report, that since the one which was sent last autumn, 1851, our mission in the department of Isére has progressed in a satisfactory manner. The political changes which have agitated the whole of France, have not sensibly affected the work of evangelization, and although, until last month, the department was under the rigorous military government of a state of siege, our evangelists and colporteurs have not, as in others, been impeded in their work. They are, no doubt, surrounded with enemies, especially those little knots of believers who have been called to the faith by means of Mr. C——, but hitherto the hostility of the priests and their adherents has been chiefly confined to insults and threats. We must not however be too sanguine about the future. Violent and arbitrary measures have been resorted to against the preachers and distributers of the word of God; several have been put in prison and punished with fines and interdictions; some have been exiled into another part of France. In this great country, so often agitated by various passions, like the waves of the sea, no one can tell in how far the circumstances of next year, next month, next week perhaps, may lead to an abridgment of religious liberty. Be it as it may, what has recently taken place is sufficient for us and for all the friends of the gospel, to urge us on to pray and to work while it is day. We have before given various details on Messrs. C—— and G——'s field of mission, on their personal circumstances, and the way in which they proceed in their work; it would therefore be useless to repeat these things, and we shall content ourselves with giving some extracts from their reports.

Mr. G—— continues to reside at V——, where well-attended meetings are regularly held. Every Sunday he preaches a sermon, gives catechetical instruction, and in the evening, presides at a prayer-meeting. He still visits T——, where we have lost some friends through removal, and where some danger from invasion by Popery on the one hand and from Plymouthism on the other, renders watchfulness peculiarly necessary. In other places where the meetings are less numerous, Mr. G—— finds occasion to hold familiar intercourse with individuals apart. His regularly transmitted journals, show the indefatigable zeal of this faithful labourer. The following extract will not be read without interest.

Peaceful death-bed of a young girl—Religious feeling at V——.

"Nov. 1851.—We have to deplore the loss of one of the members of our little flock, a young girl seventeen years of age, and of a very prepossessing exterior. Her mother had been previously afflicted by the death of her husband and five children, which had caused her to concentrate all her affections on this child, who, having been brought up under the influence of the gospel, had never tasted the dangerous pleasures of the world. She attended evangelical meetings and held no intimate intercourse but with pious persons, and yet there seemed to be observable in her character a degree of coldness which left room for some apprehensions lest the work of grace should not be effectually wrought in her heart. But this illness soon brought to light her hunger and thirst for the Word of Life. I saw her almost every day, and she constantly begged to have the gospel read to her, pointing out the passages she desired to hear; and this not merely on the occasion of my visit, but also on other Christian friends coming to see her. On the last evening but one of her life she requested me to read the 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters of St. John's Gospel to her; which I did, accompanying them by some reflections. What charming words, she said, the Saviour has left us there, how full of consolation. I drew near to her bed and said, 'Rosalia, I am glad to find you love the word of God. At an hour like this it is necessary to seize every remaining moment, and seek through the Redeemer's merit the salvation of your soul.' 'Alas, yes, sir. I have too long neglected my salvation, and trodden the broad way.' 'Do you think of death?' 'I think of it frequently, for I feel that I shall not recover.' 'And is your soul at peace—do you think you are saved?' 'I feel often troubled at the thought of my sins, yet I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and that he is come to save that which was lost.' From the beginning of her illness she made known to one young friend, F. L., the sentiments of repentance and hope by which she was animated. Speaking of the visits she received from this young friend, she said, 'I love Fanny's visits; they do me more good than the physician's.' On the Wednesday I was sent for in great haste, and on arriving I found Rosalia's bed surrounded by some of our Christian female friends. Her changed countenance and the rattling of her difficult breathing, were proofs of my being too late to bid her adieu, she saw nor heard any more, and soon her soul took flight to a better world. On beholding expire one whom a few days before we had seen in the full bloom and beauty of youth, we felt constrained to throw ourselves on our knees, and ask for grace to be ready for the day and hour of the Lord's calling us to himself, and we also sought, in the word of God, those warnings and consolations with which it abounds for such a moment."

• • • • From time to time Mr. G—— is rejoiced by some newly attracted souls manifesting their change through a godly life. He wrote in February last, "Although nothing very striking has occurred at V——, yet the Lord has been pleased, during the last two months, to afford us some encouragement. Two individuals, after having appeared to turn from the right way, have regained some spiritual life; others, including some young men and married women, continue their regular attendance at our meetings. A female, frightened by the threatenings of the priests, had drawn back a little, but since the beginning of winter she has taken courage, and now re-appears at the meetings; she even spends part of the Lord's day with us. Conviction of sin is deepening in her heart, and leading her to feel more profoundly the need of grace for salvation. One of her neighbours, a bigoted woman, has become acquainted with the gospel, and having purchased a New Testament, she is reading it constantly. Her confessor, to whom she frequently speaks of the gospel, told her one day, 'I know not what to say to you, you have more knowledge than myself;' and, on his desiring her to give up her New Testament, she said, 'I will never part with that book, it will be my rule of faith and conduct.'"

A Voluntary Colporteur.—Notices of Mr. G——'s varied work.

One of the members of the little flock of V——, Mr. C.—, an active Christian, zealous for the salvation of souls, feeling an ardent desire to do something for the Lord—has begun to labour as colporteur in this portion of our department, and is thus powerfully seconding the cause of evangelization. Within one month he has distributed nearly 200 New Testaments and 300 tracts. The works of colportage and evangelization are mutual helps and means of completion to each other. The colporteurs break up the ground and cast in the seed of the word; the evangelists follow to water and cultivate the rising crop.

We will add but one extract more from Mr. G.'s journal of March last: "A young man tolerably well instructed, having read some of our publications, came and secretly purchased a Bible, not having the courage to let his friends know it. A man forty years of age, living at a distance of two leagues, came by night to converse with C——, and on the Sunday following, he attended the meeting. One Sabbath evening, on leaving meeting, one of my hearers invited me to accompany him to his dwelling, and there fell on his knees confessing his sins and begging me to pray with him. His wife, who knows the grace of God, entered and joined in our prayers. The illness and death of one of our friends has become the occasion of an opening for the gospel in a new locality, where the word of the grace of God had not yet been preached. On the 17th, I learned that our friend was unwell, but I was too much indisposed myself to be able to leave the house. On the 21st we heard there was danger, and, in spite of pains in the loins which scarcely allowed me to move, I promised to go next morning a distance of four leagues from this; but that morning a message came to inform us he had expired. I went in a while to perform the burial service. Sixty persons were assembled round the grave, and listened with profound attention to my simple address on the necessity of being always ready to meet that inevitable messenger, Death, who is to conduct us to the tribunal of a holy and just God, who will bring into judgment our thoughts, words and actions, and pronounce a condemnation from which there is no way of escape except through faith in Christ the Saviour. We had serious conversations with several persons, to whom brother C—— related his conversion, and the change the word of God had wrought in him." We may conclude by saying that the station of V—— is in a tolerably prosperous state, and that the symptoms of coolness which appeared last autumn are no longer visible.

OR THE DANGER OF BAD BOOKS.

[From the "Youth's Gleaner, or Ripe Fruits of Piety, Gathered and Garnered for the Presbyterian Board of Publication." 18mo. Now in press.]

Among the various cases to be found in the wards of an hospital, there are none more trying to the minister of religion, and none which cause him a greater measure of anxiety, or yield him a smaller return of comfort or of hope, than those of persons who have committed or attempted the dreadful act of self-destruction.

The writer can recall the painful impressions of many such cases. He has still before him the deluded youth, the disappointed and ruined man of riper years, and the aged miscreant; all of whom he has attended, and to each of whom he has endeavoured at the eleventh hour to testify of repentance towards God, and of faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. Alas! how seldom have any evidences of true penitence appeared! The heart has generally been found to be hardened in sin and in opposition to the will of God, before the awful crisis arrives, when men can deliberately rush upon an eternity of woe.

In the legal investigation which is generally instituted in such cases, we not unfrequently hear that a verdict is returned of "temporary insanity." This in many instances may be correct, and it is charitable to ascribe to mental aberration an act which indicates the absence of all sense of duty towards God or towards man; but in many cases the mental disease is not the originating cause, but the effect of some unhappy affection, some baneful influence, some hidden leaven, which has been secretly consuming the moral health and happiness of the soul.

The following narrative affords a melancholy illustration of this. It was on a Saturday afternoon, that a young gentleman of very prepossessing appearance, was brought to ——— hospital. He had been found by a policeman in ——— gardens, stretched on or beside one of the benches placed there for the accommodation of the public. He was unable to speak, but the symptoms of his case indicated but too plainly that he had taken a large dose of poison. On his arrival at the hospital he received the most prompt attention. The resident apothecary was on the spot. The physician for the week was immediately summoned, and no effort was left untried to save him. There was something in his appearance calculated to excite a feeling of interest in those who saw him. He was young and handsome, and had evidently moved in the higher circles of society, and from some unhappy cause, upon which as yet no light was thrown, he had brought himself to his present truly awful position.

About an hour after his admission, a lady arrived at the hospital, accompanied by a friend. Her appearance told but too plainly the relationship in which she stood to him. No one could have seen her agitated manner, or watched her countenance with its deep alternations of grief and love, without at once concluding that she was the mother of the unhappy stranger. We soon learnt that he was an only son, and that she was a widow. When the first burst of maternal sorrow was somewhat subsided, she was persuaded to retire to another apartment, and there to wait the result. Meanwhile, it was my sad office to be with her, and to endeavour to address some word of comfort to her mind. Alas! how unavailing were my efforts! What comfort could be imparted to a mother's broken heart in such an hour!

The additional particulars which we now heard of the young man's history only added to the mystery of his present situation. He was in possession of a free and independent income, and had the prospect of inheriting considerable landed property in a few years. He had hitherto lived with his attached and widowed mother, and no circumstance had transpired to lead her to suspect the real state of his mind.

The first intimation of his feelings had been communicated to her in a note which he had addressed to her that same day, in which he revealed the dreadful purpose which he had formed, and described the place where his body would be found. It was on receiving this note that his afflicted and distracted parent, accompanied by a friend, set out to search for him, and found that he had already been discovered in the manner described, and conveyed to the hospital.

The medical officers persevered in their kind endeavours during the whole of the afternoon and evening. A considerable portion of the poison was removed from the stomach, but it had been there for too long a period to admit of much prospect of a recovery. How long and trying were those hours of suspense to his afflicted parent! Never shall I forget the scenes of anguish through which she passed! It has often been my lot to see a mother's sorrow for an only son, but then the loved one had been removed by the hand of God, and this shed at least one ray of light and hope, amidst the darkness of the dispensation; but here was sorrow without hope. Here was all the grief of a tender and affectionate mother, with an addition which seemed to be too great for the human heart to bear.

In the course of the evening she was joined by a female friend, and it was now for the first time that I was able to discover any clue to the circumstances which had led to this sad and guilty act. This friend, who was obviously on terms of the strictest intimacy with the family, mentioned that the mind of the young man had become completely unsettled and unhinged by reading the works of Lord Byron.

Here was the secret revealed. Here was the hidden poison which had been instilled into this youthful and once happy mind, and which had produced such sad and lamentable fruits.

O! that all who trifle with works of an irreligious or immoral tendency could have witnessed this scene! It must surely have awakened them; it must have startled and impressed them; it must have left at least one awful lesson upon their minds, "there is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." Here was one, naturally amiable, and capable of adding to his own happiness and to that of others, possessing a cultivated mind, an ample fortune—the joy and support of a widowed mother; one who, through the blessed influence of true religion, might have become an ornament to society and a useful member of the Christian Church: and here were all those hopes for ever blighted. And blighted by what? By the unhallowed influence of the works of a man of splendid and attractive talents, but who prostituted those talents to the worst of ends.

A few hours now terminated the life of this unhappy youth. His poor mother, sinking under her deep and solemn trial, became delirious some time before he died, and was removed to her home. During the night, a few words were uttered by the sufferer, the only words which he had spoken, and they were of an unpleasant character. Towards morning the death pang came; and ere the sun had arisen to usher in the calm and tranquil rest of the Christian Sabbath, the soul of this misguided and erring youth had departed.

COLPORTAGE.

A colporteur in Ohio writes: "To make the matter as systematic as possible, I have made our own people and the poor the principal objects of my visits; indeed, the missionary part of the work is by far the greatest object, in my opinion. To be sure it is something pleasant to sell a good book in any family, hoping that God will bless it to the salvation of some one's precious soul; but to enter the humble log hut, and find what, alas! is too often wanting in the stately mansion—'pure and undefiled religion,' clad in its most beautiful garments, simplicity and humility, although surrounded by poverty and distress—in such a place as that to give a book or some tracts, and receive in return the invocation of God's blessing on me and the cause of colportage, and behold the tear of gratitude steal down the cheek—this fills the soul too full for utterance."

Another colporteur in Ohio writes: "The demand and interest is still increasing in the West for the books of our Board, and a great amount of good is being done by the wide and extensive circulation of the books. Going once over a field seems only to open and prepare the way for a second and third time, and still every time more books are sold than at the former time. Our prayer is, that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon and go with all who are engaged in this great and glorious work, that of spreading light and truth abroad in the world, and especially in the dark corners of it."

A colporteur in Pennsylvania writes: "I will not attempt to give a summary of the incidents that have occurred. By the grace of God I have been able more than once to speak a word which was in season, and afforded comfort to the heavy laden. Some I have seen the victims of fatal diseases, yet triumphing through faith; and I trust I have myself been profited by the exhibitions of sincere piety which I have met sometimes where I little expected it."

NOTICES OF THE BOOKS OF THE BOARD, BY THE CONTEMPORARY PRESS.

We are encouraged in our work of preparing a valuable and interesting literature for the Church by the favour accorded to our labours, not only by the presses of our own Church, but by those of other evangelical denominations. We give the following specimens:

The Presbyterian Psalmodist; a Collection of Tunes adapted to the Psalms and Hymns of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Approved by the General Assembly. Edited by Thomas Hastings. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 265 Chestnut street. Price 75 cents.

A music-book prepared under such auspices needs no endorsement from us. It is matter of devout thankfulness, that our Church has been able to secure the services of Mr. Hastings, as editor of a book which we take for granted will give character to the devotional music of our Church, for generations to come. The preparation of such a book demands not only exquisite and highly-cultivated musical taste, but a devotional spirit, in harmony with its great object. Both these qualities are revealed in full measure in the volume before us. The character, number, and variety of the tunes, are such as to adapt it to almost every conceivable exigency of the congregation, the prayer-meeting, the Sunday-school, and the family. The thanks of the Church are due to the Committee, to whose judicious and faithful services much of the value of the book is owing. We earnestly hope its effect will be to promote congregational singing; and thus arrest the tendency we notice in some quarters, especially in New England, to deliver over this portion of divine worship to the "performance" of the choir.

We ought to add, that the Set Pieces, Anthems, and Chaunts, appended to the copy before us, constitute a highly valuable portion of the work. We hope to see the day when the common version of the Book of Psalms will form a common element of the devotional exercises of the public worship of our congregations.—Princeton Review.

"Here is a new thing, and one we doubt not will be welcome in many places. One of the largest religious denominations of this country has laboriously prepared a collection of 520 Tunes, with special reference to the wants and habits and prepossessions of the families and congregations in its connection; and such is its selection from the best days of the Scottish and Irish churches, as well as the American, that it is happily adapted to all of the Presbyterian name everywhere. Its aim is to encourage a desirable uniformity and fixedness of style in conducting divine praise, and to bring back as far as possible the sound practice of universal congregational singing. By being generally introduced into the churches, and thoroughly used, and steadfastly adhered to, it will early have all the members of our worshipping assemblies acquainted with the tunes that will be ordinarily sung, and thus effectually check the practice which has been too often and painfully seen, of choirs virtually monopolizing the act of praise by the use of new and strange tunes, in the singing of which few or none of the people could join.

"In its execution the book is evidently designed for permanency and for good. It is the work of nearly four years' preparation, under the eye of an able committee appointed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and is now brought out in substantial and convenient form by the Board of Publication. Its instructions in the 'Rudiments of Vocal Music' appear brief, judicious, and complete; and every effort seems to have been made to impress upon all the sacredness and the becoming solemnity of every thing pertaining to the exercise of praise. It is intended for general circulation; and, that it may be in the reach of all, is sold at 75 cents per copy.

"The only matter of regret which we notice in this book, is one which, we fear, attaches itself to almost all works of this kind. It is that of setting for the different tunes the most sacred words, and words in which oftentimes the divine name occurs. But the very design of a singing-book is one for practice—and, therefore, in learning the tune, and frequently amidst the wildest scenes of mirth or playfulness, and laughter, these solemn, sacred words, will roll upon the tongue. Is there not a fearful tendency in this to the merest trifling with sacred things? Is there not thereby furnished an excuse for what virtually amounts to the veriest profanity? Too much caution cannot be practised toward the young. Familiarity in this way may lead to contempt. Much, very much, would we have preferred to see in this good collection words different from the ordinary character and tendency in such books.

"In this opinion, however, we may be alone; and even in this matter 'The Presbyterian Psalmodist' is better than most singing-books with which we have met. As a whole, it was called for, and gladly will we see it early and widely used in Associate Reformed, as well as other Presbyterian churches."—Christian Instructor (Associate Ref. Church.)

"It seems to us that in the selection of Tunes, this book is a great improvement on those in common use. We find in it all the old tunes with which we have been familiar, some of which we have not found in any collection lately. We think this book should be preferred on that account by those who are learing music, that they may be prepared to take part in the singing of praise in God's worship. As to the lessons, we are not much of a judge; but we have no doubt they are up to the times."—The Covenanter.

BIBLE DICTIONARY, for the use of Bible classes, schools, and families. Prepared for the Presbyterian Board of Publication, 12mo, pp. 476. Price 50 cents.

"We regard this as a very timely production. There are several excellent works of this kind, but none that precisely meet the wants of our Church. Kitto is too large and costly, besides being deeply tinctured in many of its articles with German modes of thought: and other smaller and more accessible manuals are too general and vague on many points to meet the necessities of our Church. This little hand-book has been carefully prepared from the most authentic sources, and speaks clearly out in regard to Bible facts and doctrines, which our Church considers of the highest moment. For all ordinary purposes this book will be sufficient to furnish the information demanded by an intelligent and inquiring reader of the Scriptures. It has added to it several appendixes, giving the meaning of words in common use, pertaining to Christianity, but not found in the Bible; the orthoepy of proper names in Scripture; and lists of the kings of Judah and Israel. We are not sure that the book would not be improved by the incorporation of the first and second appendixes with the main text. The bulk would not be increased, and the matter desired would be brought more entirely under the eye at a glance. We cordially recommend this convenient and portable aid to the clear comprehension of the word of life."—Watchman and Observer.

"This work, like the other publications of the Presbyterian Board, is got up on good paper, fair type, and substantial binding. It is accompanied by a map of Canaan and the adjacent countries named in the Bible, two maps of Palestine, one of the countries travelled by the Apostles, and a map of modern Jerusalem. It contains, in an Appendix, a vocabulary of Scripture proper names pronounced; also, one of theological and other terms—a knowledge of which is very desirable for a student of the Bible. In the body of the work the articles are brief, but contain a large amount of information, very clearly stated. The latest geographical and archæological discoveries are noticed; and, as a whole, it must be highly useful to Sabbath-school teachers and scholars."—Vermont Chronicle.

"Prepared under the auspices of the Board of Publication of the Presbyterian Church, this volume is exact, learned, and orthodox. It is excellent as a cheap book of reference in studying the Bible, and is especially fitted for Sabbath-School purposes."—Puritan Recorder.

"This is the second edition, revised and corrected, of the Bible Dictionary, issued by our Board of Publication. It is an abridgment and condensation of larger works, and peculiar in this, that it employs largely the results of modern research and discovery, as well as refers to modern authors, in elucidating Scriptural topics. Thus, for example, under the head of 'Jordan,' we have a brief account of the American expedition under Lieut. Lynch, of the U. S. Navy, which navigated that river in 1848, from the Sea of Tiberias to the Dead Sea. This is an important improvement over all previous works."—Pres. Advocate.

"From a slight examination of the Bible Dictionary we are induced to believe that it is a work of great merit. It embraces in a small compass a vast amount of information, and the definitions contained in it may be confidently relied upon, as the result of much study and investigation. We congratulate all our Sabbath-School teachers on having so valuable an assistant to the study of the Scriptures placed within their reach. The work is very handsomely gotten up, and is sold at a price which everybody must consider as very reasonable. It is indeed remarkably cheap."—Presbyterian Record.

"None but a well-informed student of the Bible can have an adequate conception of the vast accessions that have been made within the present century, to the science of Biblical illustration.—Travellers have explored, and in some degree surveyed the lands mentioned in Holy Writ—antiquarians have deciphered and interpreted monumental inscriptions—naturalists have identified the animals hitherto known imperfectly under Hebrew names, and philological critics have given precision and accuracy to our ideas of ancient words—so that the time for Bible Dictionaries, exhibiting the results of these multifarious labours, has at last fully come. The age demands such works—Sabbath-school teachers and Christian parents require their aid in the instruction of the young, and the members of Bible classes, in whom a spirit of inquiry has begun to work, find them of great use in their researches after truth. A great book, however, is often a great evil. It is wasteful of both time and money. Calmet falls under this censure, and, besides, it is far behind the age. Kitto's Cyclopedia is an immense mass of learning and instruction; but neither of these books, nor indeed any other that we know, is suitable either from their price or their principles for the universal circulation among the people, at which the Board aims. We think that our views of truth are found in the Bible; and we are anxious to have them exhibited in the works issued by our church. Let any one try this publication by this test; and if he be a true-hearted Old-School Presbyterian, he will find it is just the book to suit him. The terms Elder, Election, Predestination, Perseverance, Perfection, for instance, are defined briefly but very clearly as they are held by our Church. The references to Scripture texts are copious; and as they are not quoted at length, the size and price of the book are proportionably diminished. The volume contains five neat maps; but we should have liked it still better if it had also been furnished with illustrative wood-cuts. We hope that, in a future edition, this deficiency will be supplied. Some of the Hebrew names have been interpreted, thus 'ABRAHAM (Father of a multitude,)' but a great many other names which might have been profitably, and yet briefly treated in the same manner, have not been explained. We mention these matters, because we are anxious to see a work already so valuable, still further amended and improved."—Presbyterian of the West.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

Varieties.

Protestant Church in Turin.—It is gratifying to learn, that the Sardinian Government continues firmly to maintain the principles of religious toleration and constitutional freedom. The proceedings of the Pope and the Jesuits against the building of the Waldensian Church have entirely failed. Its erection is now proceeding rapidly, and funds are required to meet the monthly instalments. The weekly journal conducted by the Waldenses, at Turin, has drawn the attention of its people, and of the inhabitants of Italy, to the season for prayer, which has been set apart for the downfall of Antichrist. It is an encouraging fact, that thus, on the other side of the Alps, the members of the ancient primitive Church in the peaceful valleys, and the exiled Tuscans, Lombards, and Neapolitans, who have found an asylum from their persecutors in Piedmont, will be engaged in the same exercises with their fellow-Christians in Scotland, America, and elsewhere. The time fixed was from the 15th to the 22d of April. The word of God and prayer are Antichrist's most formidable foes. And at the present time, when there is a wide-spread conspiracy of Popery and despotism against civil and religious liberty, when darkness is fast gathering over the nations of Europe, we have arguments sufficient to engage Christians of all denominations to unite earnestly and heartily in this work.

Assyrian Discoveries.—The last number of the London Athenæum contains a communication from Col. Rawlinson, announcing an important historical discovery. He has deciphered some of the cuneiform inscriptions brought from Nineveh by Mr. Layard, and found them to contain some remarkable verifications of Bible history. They are records of one of the Assyrian kings, who proves to be the Sennacherib of Scripture. They notice his war against the king of Sidon; and describing the battle between the Assyrians and Egyptians, in conformity with the accounts of Josephus and Herodotus, notice the proceedings of Sennacherib against Hezekiah, king of Judea. The names of Hezekiah, Judea, and Jerusalem, are given in the inscription as Khazakiyah, Jehuda, and Ursulimma; and the tribute which the Jewish king pays, in order to free himself from his enemy, is stated almost in the very words of Scripture. The annals of Sennacherib in this inscription extend over seven years, and a cylinder has been met with, which gives the events of two years more. Other points of identity between these annals and the Greek and biblical notices of Sennacherib likewise occur; but the chief point of interest is the establishment of the identity of the king who built the great palace of Koyunjik with that sovereign. A secure starting-place is now obtained for historical research, and a rapid progress will be made in fixing the Assyrian chronology.

Trifling with the Word of God.—The New York Observer gives sundry curious extracts from a new translation of the Bible by the Baptists into the Armenian language. The learned translators, for their own sectarian purposes, were so anxious to secure the insertion of a word for baptize, which should express the idea of immersion, that they have used a term which conveys to the native Armenians of all classes, learned and ignorant, no other idea than that of drowning! "He that believeth and is drowned shall be saved."

Revival on Board the Frigate Independence.—This noble ship, which lately arrived at New York, brought back a precious cargo,—over a hundred hopeful converts to religion. This great work of salvation took place on board the Independence while at a foreign station, and is without a precedent in the history of our Navy. A meeting was held, a few evenings since, in the Bethel Church, Brooklyn, got up at the instance of part of the crew of the above-named frigate, the Rev. Wm. Burnett, and Mr. Edward Cavendy, who was instrumental, in the hands of God, in bringing about this great work. The weather-beaten tars, as they rose, and in heartfelt language and gratitude, spoke of the mercy of God in snatching them as brands from the burning, of the persecution they had to endure on shipboard, and how they endured all, and came out conquerors, brought the tears to the eyes of all the audience.

A Safe Experiment.—Dr. Ashbel Green, of Philadelphia, published in the North American, some years since, the following account of his recovery from scepticism when a young man:

"To the Bible itself I determined to make a final appeal. My Christian education had already rendered me in a degree familiar with a large portion of its contents; but on this I resolved to place no dependence. I took up the New Testament as I had never opened it before, and with the single object of looking out for the signatures of divinely inspired truth; and I prayed, as well as a half infidel could pray, that God, in whose existence and attributes I believed, would help me to form a just opinion of the truth or fallacy of that book. Proceeding in this way I had not gone through the four Evangelists, till all my scepticism left me, and to this hour it has never returned. My mind indeed has sometimes been harassed with almost every species of infidel, and even atheistic suggestions; but I have, at the very time of their occurrence, been thoroughly convinced that they were false and groundless. . . . And this, let me say, is, in my opinion, the best way of bringing to a satisfactory issue this question of unavoidable and infinite importance."

Affiliation.—At a Unitarian celebration recently held in Massachusetts, the chairman, Samuel Greele, Esq., among other things remarked as follows:

"The various sects of Christendom are yearning for a deeper sympathy, and are thus becoming more and more affiliated in spirit, if not in creed. A few more blasts from such true prophets of the Lord as Bushnell and Parks and Henry Ward Beecher, will make the walls of Jericho to fall, and cause us to become one in Christ."

No doubt the Unitarians would rejoice at the fall of the citadel of a true Christianity, but it is likely to survive the assaults of such men as are here grouped together as "true Prophets of the Lord."

The Queen of Madagascar not Dead.—The Christian world felt relief, when it was reported a few weeks ago, that the persecuting Queen of Madagascar had been removed from the earth. Later and more authentic intelligence makes it probable that her royal hatefulness is still alive. We pray that God will bring her to repentance and amendment.

Scandinavian Professorship.—Efforts are making by the Norwegians to endow a Scandinavian Professorship in "Capital University," at Columbus, Ohio. Jenny Lind last year gave $1500 as the commencement of a fund for this purpose. The Norwegian Lutheran Synod of Wisconsin, at its last meeting, appointed a committee on the subject.

Revival in Yates Baptist Seminary.—The Recorder says, "By a private note, we are happy to learn that an unusual attention to religion has existed among the pupils of the Yates Seminary in Orleans county, of which W. B. Bunnell, Esq., is Principal. Between forty and fifty have been hopefully converted to God. Nothing gives the people of God more cause for rejoicing than the prevalence of heart-religion in schools and colleges.

Loss of Catholics by Immigration.—The Halifax Sun states that Rev. Robert Mullen, missionary to the United States on behalf of the Catholic University, endorses, unintentionally, a statement "that of the number of Irish Catholics emigrating to the United States, one-third, at least, were lost to the Roman Catholic church." He thinks the number that have been lost to the Catholic Church since 1825, in round numbers, two millions!

In the Ark.—It is mentioned of Romaine, when the public troubles of his day were being somewhat unreasonably forced upon him, that he put them from him with the remark, "I am in the ark." It is the only place of security in this day, as in his. It is only when hid in that secure abode, that we can work with due temper and effect on the evils within and around us. And what are all these things to us, if we are not there? The whole is fast passing away as a feverish dream. Much that we see around us is the work of the devil, with which he amuses men to their eternal undoing. Much in the Church, as well as in the world, is nothing else. They are Satan's toys which he amuses vain fools withal. Let us beware. Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall. Let us distinguish things that differ. Let us pray always. Let us watch thereunto with thanksgiving. Let us distrust ourselves, and trust without a doubt in the faithfulness and truth and wisdom and direction of God.

Protestantism in Silesia.—According to official reports, says an English paper, 648 persons renounced Catholicism and embraced Protestantism in Silesia last year. Of these 648 persons 269 were adults, and the remainder had already been confirmed. Independently of these, 486 Roman Catholic parents had their children baptized in the Protestant church in 1851. These figures are higher in comparison than in the previous year, 1850, for in the official list for that year only 308 converts were entered, of whom 159 were adults. In that year also only 187 children of Roman Catholic parents were baptized in the Protestant Church of Silesia. It appears that many persons who had joined the so-called German Catholic churches are now going over to the Protestant churches, on account of the great obstacles which have been put in the way of the German Catholics.

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST IN THIS WORLD.

God governs the world. His government of the natural world may be termed the Kingdom of Nature; his government of men and nations in the ordinary course of events, is the Kingdom of Providence; and his government of men in respect of their spiritual interests, is the Kingdom of Grace.

In each of these, we have the elements of a kingdom—a ruler, subjects, and laws. The theatre for the display of the divine perfections may be the same, and to some extent the subjects are the same; yet there is variety without confusion, and uniformity of administration without identity. The laws or methods of government all originate in the purpose of Him who ruleth all things after the counsel of his own will. But as they affect different subjects, and the same subjects in different aspects, there is propriety in speaking of God's universal dominion under the threefold administration which may be called three Kingdoms.

1. In all, God governs by laws. The observation, experience, and study of wise men have developed and delineated the laws of the Natural Kingdom; and we find they are fixed, and evince an infinite wisdom and goodness as well as power. So we discover in the Kingdom of Providence that God's ways are wise and best. Even heathen, untaught by written revelation, have learned to note and understand something of this government; and the principles of a moral philosophy, as deduced from these sources, are generally correct.

2. But it is in the Kingdom of Grace that we behold at once the brightest display of divine glory, and the most important and beneficent arrangements for man's well-being. "Here the whole Deity is known." Here we have a full exhibition of the divine perfections, and a full discovery of the great purposes to be accomplished in man's creation.

3. This Kingdom of Grace is visible and invisible. Its laws and administration respect eternity as well as time. Its subjects are here and in the eternal world. The Kingdom of Nature is to be dissolved. This world and all which it contains is to be burnt up. The Kingdom of Providence is to come to an end. God will overturn and overturn, and he who holds in his hands the hearts of kings, and governs among the princes of this earth, will soon have subjected all things to the accomplishment of his purposes, and then the whole moral machinery of the world will be effaced. Kings and princes die, and turn to dust; crowns and thrones crumble and decay; palaces and cities sink to ruins; human institutions fall. "This solid globe, and all which it inhabit will pass away and vanish, and, like the baseless fabric of a vision, leave not a wreck behind;" but of this kingdom of grace there shall be no end. It is everlasting. It is a dominion which shall endure throughout all generations.

4. Though visible and invisible, yet this does not denote a contrariety in its parts. The same King, the same principles of law, and the same subjects, pertain to each. While God governs in this kingdom, he has by a special arrangement determined to govern by delegation. All power in heaven and earth has been given into the hands of the Son, whom, in his mediatorial capacity, as God-man, he has constituted heir of all things. He is Head over all things to his Church. This is his kingdom. Those who belong to it are made willing in the day of his power. They are convinced of their sin and misery; enlightened in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, and the way of salvation through him; renewed in the spirit of their minds; and enabled and persuaded sweetly to submit to his laws, to trust his grace, and receive his divine teachings.

5. And now for the proper government and ordering of this kingdom, while its subjects are in this world, he has laid down certain principles or rules. These apply to them here, and, in many important aspects, hereafter also. Thus the subjects of this kingdom are to be made holy in thought, and word, and life. They are to seek those things which are above. They are to set their affections on heavenly things. As the basis of all this, they are to receive implicitly all the great teachings of the Scriptures, respecting God and his relations to man; man and his condition, or estate of sin and misery; the way of salvation by a Redeemer; God's purposes of grace; and the whole scheme or system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures. Then they are to adopt and act on the principles of divine government, or order, as to the regulation of all their affairs. Here, in the Scriptures, are clearly unfolded such truths, as—that the visible kingdom or church is to be instructed and governed by men, according to divine law, for man's benefit. And hence it is very evident that so far as this kingdom is administered on earth, it unfolds all the principles essential to the best human government. It is a government of laws, both fundamental and special. This is to be administered by men appointed—not to rule except as they serve. They are servants of God, to carry out his purposes, and so servants of the people for their good. The officers are provided for offices; not offices for officers. The rulers for people; not people for rulers. There is a parity of rank among such. Christ is head—all those who minister are brethren; that is, on an equality of position. There may be various offices to be performed, and these will differ in dignity and importance; but they differ not in rank.

6. Now what has been here delineated leads us to a right mode of recognizing what constitutes part of this visible kingdom. And while, in general outline, there may be many communions among men which agree with this delineation, still we find its distinguishing features more clearly unfolded in some than others.

Thus, in our own beloved branch of Zion, we have a distinct and full recognition of all the great fundamental principles of sound doctrine which are presented in the Scriptures. These she ever confesses; she publishes them in her pulpits at home and abroad, and by her printed confessions and catechisms, and by her books. She proclaims, too, in her form of government, the great principles of law which distinguish the Kingdom of Christ, as it respects the government of its subjects. She declares her public teachers to be ministers of God and the people. She claims for them no other than an executive and ministerial function; and she places them all on a level as to rank, however different their position as to duty or office.

7. Simple as are these principles, yet they furnish the basis for an immense system of service. Here may be thousands of officers—and yet ten thousand more. Here are a set of truths, simple and plain, yet applicable in ten thousand times ten thousand cases. And the agencies for carrying on the plans of this government are simple. Here are the fundamental laws and special precepts of the Bible, to be studied, and understood, and propagated. For this we want men able in the Scriptures, by the pulpit and by the pen, to bring forth out of this treasury of divine truth, the healing words of eternal life. And these men are to be sent forth, and the word of God, and works explaining and inculcating its truths, are to be disseminated. This is the great work for which this visible kingdom has been organized by its head. Now in the actual organization of our Church we contemplate just this work. This paper from time to time unfolds its progress in raising up men and in sending them forth, and in preparing and publishing sound expositions and illustrations of divine truth. This is the great work of the Church. She is not a party, or a sect, for this world. She is not to be known by her splendid temples, her gorgeous adornings, her imposing ritual, or her power over man's temporal concerns—but this, this is her honour and her name—THE DEPOSITARY AND PROPAGATOR OF TRUTH TO MAN.

NO MORE LET US DIFFER.

No more let us differ, as oft we have done,
Let our anger go down with the light of the sun,
And a well-spring of joy shall gush forth in the breast,
Pure and calm as his smile in the far distant west.
Not long does the life-blood career through the heart;
Like the glory of summer, we come and depart;
Yet, e'en like that glory, if gentle and kind,
We leave both a beauty and perfume behind.

No more let us differ! If falsehood or wrong
Have biassed our judgment, or sat on our tongue,
Let the act be atoned for—regret be conveyed
For the pain we have caused, for the wound we have made;
For who, of the thousands that look up to heaven,
Can hope by his God to be freely forgiven,
If he live not a life of forbearance and love,
But withholds from mankind what he asks from above?

No more let us differ! We've plenty to do,
As 'mid sunshine and tempest we travel life through,
In keeping our frail barque from drifting astray—
Without falling out 'mong ourselves by the way.
Oh! wisest is he who forgives and forgets,
Whose anger goes down with the sun when he sets—
Whose soul is secure for a bright world of bliss,
From the friendship and love it has cherished in this.

REPORTS SENT OFF WITHOUT PRE-PAYMENT.

Two bags of Reports were carried down to the Post-Office in Philadelphia, and deposited for stamping by the regular Clerks in the office, according to arrangement, and they were through some oversight in the multitude of mail matter, sent off without being marked pre-paid. The Reports were, we believe, generally for brethren in the extreme west and south-west—as we sent to the most distant first; and we make this statement to relieve them of any surprise at the circumstance of their being called on to pay the transient postage of the Reports. We were annoyed at the oversight, which was not chargeable to us, and would have rectified it, had that been possible. But the bags were gone.

A LETTER FROM VIRGINIA TO CHEER THE HEART.

August 1852.

The period has again arrived when it becomes my duty to furnish you with an account of my labours. I rejoice to say that they have been attended with more favourable results this summer than at any former period of my ministry. I am able to look back with more pleasure upon the last few months of my ministerial labours than upon any similar period of time since I have been connected with the Board. My own heart has been more deeply and prayerfully exercised in regard to the importance of the work in which I am engaged, and hence my preaching has been characterized by greater ardour and pungency. I feel and know that I have enjoyed more of the spiritual presence of God, and have aimed more exclusively to promote his glory. Nor have the tokens of God's grace been conferred alone upon me, his unworthy servant, but his people, to whom I minister in holy things, have likewise been refreshed and strengthened. And it is to their orderly walk that I more particularly refer, when I remarked above, that my labours had been blessed with greater success. I have never known a more prayerful spirit to prevail in any church, except in special seasons of revival, than what is now exhibited by our little flock. I feel now that I have a people who will sustain my hands, and who will cordially co-operate with me in my efforts to build up the Redeemer's kingdom in this community. For a number of weeks I have been preaching a series of close practical sermons, addressed particularly to them, and I can truly say, that they were bathed with my tears. In addition to these, I have held a regular weekly lecture. To these exercises, united with conversation in private, on personal piety, I attribute, under the blessing of God, the present delightful state of things in the membership of the church. And as a direct result of such an awakening on the part of God's people, there is already some manifestation of concern and interest by the impenitent. O that the spirit of grace and holiness may be poured out upon them! We are confidently expecting it—we are praying for such a blessing. H.

CHURCH EXTENSION.

We have been long desirous of laying before the churches the exact history and condition of the Church Extension scheme, that most important branch of the Domestic Missionary work of the General Assembly. But we could not do it in an intelligible form without a Table: and after considerable labour the following table has been completed, which will furnish all the information desired, and be a document for reference in time to come. We give the table, and then add a few remarks upon it.

REMARKS.

1. The Church Extension Scheme was entered into by the General Assembly in May, 1844. The Table covers the whole time from that date to the close of the last ecclesiastical year of the Board of Missions, namely, to April 1, 1852: a period of seven years and eleven months; set down in the Annual Report of the Board in round numbers, at eight years. The Table dates from July 1844, in which month the contributions were formally entered into the Treasurer's book.

2. The entire contribution of the churches, say for the eight years, is only $10,922; or $1,365 on an annual average: and allowing the average number of our churches for these eight years to be 2400, then each church will have contributed in the eight years $4,55! or an annual sum of 57 cents, omitting fractions! And if the average annual contribution of $1,365 from the churches, was divided among our 200,000 members, each member would contribute not quite seven-tenths of a cent a year!

3. Of the 22 Synods which we had (the two foreign ones not counted) before the last meeting of the Assembly, every one had applied for and received aid from the Church Extension Fund; and every Synod had drawn out more than it put in, except one, the Synod of Philadelphia, and that Synod left a balance in its favour in the Treasury of $140 only.

The Synods have contributed in the following order: New York in the lead, $5,270, nearly one-half the whole amount; next Philadelphia, at a considerable distance, $2,960; then New Jersey, still further behind, $734; then Virginia, 677; Cincinnati, $403; Albany, $203; Missouri, $120; Mississippi, $120; Pittsburgh, $90; Wheeling, $85; Buffalo, $68; Indiana, $40; Illinois, $35; North Carolina, $33; Alabama, $28; Georgia, $15; Nashville, $13; Ohio, $10; South Carolima, $10; Northern Indiana, $1,50, and Kentucky and Memphis, nothing at all. The overdraft of New York arises from the amount sent to California.

And the Synods have drawn out in the following order, over and above their contributions. Illinois takes the lead, $5,989; New Jersey comes next, $2,840; then Mississippi, $2,830; Memphis, $2,420; Ohio, $2,399; Northern Indiana, $2,393; Indiana, $2,259; Missouri, $1,939; Virginia, $1,252; New York, $1,168; Cincinnati, $1,046; Georgia, $835; Buffalo, $806; Kentucky, $800; Pittsburgh, $734; Alabama, $472; Wheeling, $439; South Carolina, $190; North Carolina, $167; Albany, $96; Nashville, $62. One only leaving a balance in its favour, as already stated, namely, Philadelphia, of $140.

4. Let us come to the Presbyteries. Of 129 Presbyteries, before the last meeting of the General Assembly, (the 5 foreign ones not counted,) 97 have applied for aid: and 86, or two-thirds of the whole number, have received it. Of the 86 receiving aid, 43, or one-half of them, contributed to the Fund.

Of the 129 Presbyteries, 59 only (if we have counted right) have contributed; not one-half: or, in another form, out of 129 Presbyteries, 70 have contributed nothing! By referring to the Table the brethren can see how much their respective Presbyteries have contributed. And let it be borne in mind, that the contribution is not for one year, but for eight years.

5. The total amount appropriated for the time, by the Board through the Church Extension Committee is $41,923, against $10,922 contributed by the churches; leaving a balance against the churches of $31,000! How has this amazing balance against the churches been made up? By individual donors: and the churches would be startled to know the fewness of their number. These benevolent donors have appreciated the importance of this arm of our Domestic Missionary work, and have come forward in an excellent spirit to sustain it: and some of them with the richest and most generous contributions. The churches owe them a debt of gratitude. But the scale should turn, in justice, directly the other way. The overwhelming amount of contributions should be from the churches: not from individuals: for what we undertake to do as a Church we must sustain as a Church. This is the true and only principle upon which we can build in all our church schemes. We cannot depend upon individual donations and legacies. Both are exceedingly fluctuating, and uncertain at best.

6. The whole number of churches aided to completion is 281, or 35 a year, which is certainly doing well for our limited means. We have reason to be grateful and to be encouraged: and to hope also, that a brighter day is dawning upon this branch of our work. It gives us pleasure to state that the Church Extension Fund is now clear of debt: but we are enabled to meet but a small number of applications for aid. A large number have come in and been laid aside for want of funds, and had we now $15,000 it could be advantageously disposed of.

7. The Table, with its plain figures and facts, teaches us a plain lesson, and that is, as a Church we have done very little for Church Extension! The importance of this scheme is universally acknowledged—its necessity felt throughout all our bounds; and we venture to affirm that it could not have been brought in any extent to the notice of our church-members from our pulpits, in the eight years now past, otherwise the contributions would have been larger. The piety and wisdom and liberality of our members would have responded to the call. The Lord's people will love Zion and take pleasure in building up her walls. Try them, brethren, and you will not be disappointed.

8. The brethren and churches in all parts of our States and Territories, whose applications to the Church Extension Committee have not been complied with, will now appreciate the reason more clearly than ever before. The mists are passed away from around us. They can now see into the Treasury of the Church Extension Committee—and see not only how little is there, but all the Synods putting in little and drawing out much; and when divided into Presbyteries, 97 in a solid body, out of 129, coming up and asking for aid; 32 only are in the back ground, not needing it. The Committee are doing their best to supply them, but can accommodate 86 only—two-thirds of the whole number. And when the Committee call upon the Presbyteries to throw something into the Treasury, 70 of them go off without giving anything. What is the Church Extension Committee of the Board to do in such a case? We have no gold mine. If money does not come from the churches, it will not be in the Treasury to disburse. The appeals for aid are urgent; some of them calculated to move the heart. Brethren beloved, money would be poured out like water to you if we had it.

In conclusion, we commend the Table—the whole work of Church Extension—to Synods, Presbyteries, and Churches. You have it, brethren, before you, and we entreat you to take more efficient action in relation to this scheme, and send us contributions for the prosperity of our Zion, and the glory of God our Redeemer.

ANNUAL REPORT—PRESENT STATE OF THE BOARD.

In July over 2800 copies were forwarded through the Post-Office to all parts of the Union. We were encouraged to hope that the Report would pass through the mail as a supplement to the "Home and Foreign Record," and although put up in the usual form, it is so set forth on the title-page as a "Supplement, &c." But upon application to the Post-Master General, he decided against its issue in that form: consequently the postage falls again on the Board. But that is not to be considered for the good which will accrue to the missionary work of the Assembly, if the Report is only carefully read by all to whom it is sent—and if brethren in the ministry will give it circulation, and lay it before their people in their missionary meetings. The history of this Domestic missionary work, so essential to the growth and establishment of our Church, and the principles upon which it has been conducted by the General Assembly, ought to be well understood by all our ministers, elders, and members, and when the Report is read, they will see a remarkable unity in action by the Assembly, from the beginning to the present time. Amidst all the changes of times and seasons that have passed over us as a Church, the Assembly has started no new policy in conducting its Domestic Missions, but has steadily pursued that which is old and from the beginning, and the blessing of God has rested upon it. The piety and wisdom of the fathers have been cherished and followed by the sons. All we need, is the prayers and the confidential and hearty co-operation of the Presbyteries and Churches, in carrying out the missionary work of the Assembly; and especially the co-operation of all churches receiving aid from the Board, in making efforts to come as nearly up as possible, if not completely so, to the point of sustaining the gospel for themselves: and by so doing they will relieve the funds and enable the Board to support other and more needy fields, and to expand into waste and desert places.

With thankfulness, we state that the Board has thus far got through the summer much better than was anticipated. At this time last year the debt was over $10,000; in November of same year it was over $15,000; all this has been paid off, and we now owe nothing, and our missionaries are all paid up both in Philadelphia and in Louisville, as far as heard from. May the Lord continue to smile on the work.

We also state that throughout our missionary fields, Presbyteries and churches are generally moving towards the point of self-sustentation, the applications in many cases being spontaneously reduced by them: some of the churches notify the Board that they will need nothing more after this year, and others have already gone off; taking leave of us in the kindest manner. And some Presbyteries, that have feeble churches, are throwing them as much together as possible, forming circles of churches, and so bringing them to the missionary standard, and relieving the Board of expense in men and in means, agreeably to the wishes of the Assembly. All money thus saved, will be put into new fields and to the support of our struggling enterprises in all parts of the Union. A good spirit seems breathed into the people of the Lord, and we can only express our sincere gratitude to Him—and to them, and take courage. We have had some special assistance, and thank the unknown friends—for they have not allowed us to learn their names, and some, not even their locality. The Saviour sees their work done to "his brethren"—and it shall in no wise lose its reward. Again, brethren, we thank you.

HONORARY MEMBERS.

The sum of Fifty Dollars constitutes a person an Honorary Member of the Board of Missions.

Honorary Members have a right to sit in the meetings of the Board, and engage in their deliberations, but have no right to vote. A copy of the Annual Report is sent to them every year.

FORM OF A DEVISE OR BEQUEST.

To the Trustees of the Board of Missions of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Missions of the said General Assembly, according to the provisions of their charter.

☞ Persons making bequests to the Board of Missions are requested to be careful in adopting the above form.

BOARD OF EDUCATION.

PRESBYTERIAN EDUCATION ROOMS,
No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Business Officers of the Board.

C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., Corresponding Secretary.
Wm. Chester, D. D., Asso. Sec'y. and General Agent.
J. B. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer.

Letters and Communications for the BOARD OF EDUCATION on the subject of Ministerial Education, or of Schools, Academies and Colleges, may be addressed to the Rev. C. Van Rensselaer, D. D., Corresponding Secretary, No. 265 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Remittances of money may be made to Joseph B. Mitchell, Esq., Treasurer, Mechanics Bank, Philadelphia.

ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE PRESBYTERIAN BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Anniversary Meeting of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church was held, during the sessions of the General Assembly, on the evening of May 21st, in the Second Presbyterian church, Charleston, South Carolina.

The Hon. Humphrey H. Levitt, of Ohio, was called to the chair, and the meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Scott, of New Orleans. After singing a song of praise, the usual statistical statements were made by the Corresponding Secretary of the Board. The Rev. Nicholas Murray, Professor in Washington College, Pennsylvania, then addressed the meeting.

Mr. Murray remarked that he had been connected with a college for some years, and that Christian education had been much upon his mind. The fact that the number of our candidates for the ministry was rather decreasing than increasing, was calculated to excite deep attention. What was the cause of this alarming state of things? Doubtless there are various causes which have more or less influence. Some say that the secular pursuits opening before young men are becoming more numerous and tempting than formerly. But, on the other hand, it must be remembered that more young men go to college than formerly. The increase of students, in the whole country, has been steady, and ought, at least, to counterbalance the increased temptations of secular pursuits. Yet the number who are looking forward to the ministry has been diminishing. Others say, there is not prayer enough. This is undoubtedly true; and it is the chief cause of the Church's difficulties at this crisis. There is too little prayer, private and public. I have, Mr. Chairman, great confidence in the efficacy of prayer. Ministers come from God, and we must look to God for them. His willingness to answer prayer is seen in the outpouring of his Spirit upon some of our institutions of learning within the last few months. Prayer is an indispensable means for the securing of a supply of ministers, and of ministers of the right order. Others say that the ministerial profession does not receive as honourable a maintenance as formerly. There is some force in this. But ingenuous young men do not always look at such considerations. Their hopes and their piety, generally, rise above the fear of inadequate support.

Other causes might be mentioned as affecting the supply of our ministerial ranks. But, Mr. Chairman, I will merely allude to one, in addition to those already enumerated, and it is this, there is not religion enough in our colleges. Our institutions of learning should be feeders for the ministry; and the only way to make them so, and to keep them so, is by infusing into their course of instruction the religious element. The Board of Education has two objects, viz. to assist indigent candidates for the ministry, and to build up Christian institutions, under the care of the Church, at which they may receive suitable instruction. Our Church has always gone in strongly for education; our ministers have, generally, been foremost in their zeal to promote its interests. And no wonder; for our young men, the hope of the Church, must be trained for their work. Our institutions of learning should be made decidedly religious, not only in theory, but in practice; and the best guarantee of their religious character is church superintendence. This last is no new idea. It is, at least, as old as the Reformation. Calvin and John Knox understood it and acted upon it. This great idea is incorporated into the education of Scotland. There is, indeed, a difference of opinion how far the institutions of education should be under the care of the Church. Some prefer voluntary schools, and others, those that are supported by the State. But so far as these latter institutions stand related to the ministry, there is, commonly, a defect. There is not enough religion in them. State institutions may do good; but if our ministry is to be trained and enlarged in its gifts and in its numbers, we must trust to institutions under the care of the Church herself.

We already have a considerable number of schools, academies, and colleges under our own denominational influence. So far as I have become acquainted with the schools, they have done well. Our academies have been conducted with efficiency; and their influence on the increase of the ministry will, undoubtedly, be great. The revivals that have occurred in our institutions of learning during the year, argue well. God will bless his truth. He encourages teachers of the young to teach them religion. If we want to meet the exigency of our day, we must throw more religion into our institutions of learning. And I know of no more effectual means for securing this end, than for the Church herself to see that this is done. She herself is best able to guarantee the teaching of religion; and she must superintend education in her own name and in that of her King. Other denominations are acting on this principle; and this is not the time for Presbyterians to falter.

The Rev. Stuart Robinson, of Kentucky, then addressed the audience in a speech, of which the following is a meagre outline:

With this Board, Mr. Chairman, are connected all the interests of the Church. Its objects are fundamental, not only on the score of divine appointment, but on the score of policy. There is one point, however, in the operations of the Board, which demands our prayerful, earnest, and sorrowful attention. With a growing country and a white harvest, the labourers are not only few, but becoming fewer. What are the remedies? With all our congratulations and rejoicings, we are sorrowful that no more come up to take part in this ministry with us. What are the remedies?

We must look beyond the machinery of means; for nothing but grace will reach the evil. When Christ saw the multitudes, he was "moved with compassion," and, although omnipotence was in his grasp, he said to his disciples, "Pray ye to the Lord of the harvest." If He sends not forth the labourers, they need not go. You may have the genius and the talent of the nation, but if God does not consecrate and commission the men, they will be no better than drones. We must pray; our people must pray; not once a year, but a daily prayer at the family altar. Parents must take the choice ones of their family, their darling sons, and aspire for the highest blessings of God upon them. When we have that spirit, we will see the impression it will make. It will carry more religion into the colleges, which the preceding speaker was so anxious to secure. We need not wait until the young men get there. It is well to look for conversions in these institutions, but it is better to send our youth to them with religion in their hearts; God going with them.

What we pray for, we must labour for. Some make a mistake, and pray for the Kingdom, without labouring for the Kingdom. We pray for our daily bread, but does that prevent our working for it? On the contrary, the better the prayer, the more persevering the industry. So it is on spiritual subjects and on this subject. There must be prayer, Mr. Chairman, earnest prayer to the Lord of the harvest, or the few labourers will continue to grow fewer, and God will withhold his blessings from us.

Among the helps to raise up more ministers, we must cultivate, in the minds of our people, the importance of the ministerial office. Here is the loftiest position that God ever gave to man. The preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ is the most honourable of all stations. Its dignity is derived from its own importance by the appointment of God. It is concerned with the loftiest subjects. All other knowledge is but ancillary—elementary to these great themes; it falls infinitely short of gospel knowledge. And yet our people seem to have lost a part, at least, of their reverence for this office. Perhaps one reason is, that we ministers have failed to preach it up; to elevate its dignity in the estimation of the Church. If we do our duty, personally and officially, and give such instructions from the pulpit as will unfold the high dignity of the work of the ministry, depend upon it, our youth will not run off so into other professions.

One great notion of parents, in our times, is, that their children may "do something." Well, let us appeal to that passion in the parental heart. Do you want your child to do something in his day and generation? Well, here is a way to make his mark. The gospel ministry is the greatest of all work. Men may not always see its results. Sometimes, after years of labour, the minister scarcely admits any to the Church; he barely feeds the flock, without adding to their number. His labours produce results rather negative than positive in the view of men. But then he can use, in a qualified sense, the language of the Saviour, "all that thou gavest me I have kept," and that is a great thing. Generally, however, the Spirit blesses the gospel message, so that sinners are born into the kingdom. A work, when well done, is immortal work. But what work so great as this, either for time or eternity? To save a soul from guilt and corruption, to deliver it from unending misery, to introduce it to the glories of heaven and the inheritance of grace, is a work both great and immortal. An English archbishop once said, "I have had offices and honours for seventy years; but if a single soul has been converted under my ministry, I would lay more store thereto than in all honours." Humanity is a web, vast and complicated, spun out in infinite wisdom, and God is the centre, and every soul a mesh. The destiny of millions is hanging, as it were, by a slender tie; and it is the glory of the ministry that it warns the perishing from falling into perdition. Go to the bar of God, and estimate the work of Whitefield! Tell us the worth of Archibald Alexander's services! Did he not make his mark? Yes, a mark of immortality. Once a little boy, there in the streets of Lexington, grace brought him to Christ and to the ministry, and his bright record is on high.

Another passion in this country is to do things quickly. In old times, men used to sigh for immortality when they were dead. Our people want fame now. They can't wait for death. They will engage in anything that brings in quick returns of reputation. The merchant's motto is "Quick sales." Many will plant the locust tree, one of the meanest of shade-trees, because it is quick in growth. Now, this universal passion for fast work can find a vent, if sanctified, in the sphere of Christian enterprise and activity. Sir Christopher Wren was thirty-five years in building St. Paul's Cathedral; but Summerfield was the master-builder, under God, in the erection of hundreds and even thousands of living temples. Pitt was immortal at twenty-five; but how much surpassing Pitt's were the labours, the rewards, and the immortality, of Whitefield!

In this work, no injustice is done to men. Politicians often complain in their struggles to rise. The old age of statesmen is embittered by the ingratitude of their country and forgetfulness of their services. But the ministerial profession has sure rewards. Ministers, indeed, may be forgotten; but their works do follow them. Last night, at the organization of the Presbyterian Historical Society, the records of a presbytery were said to be lost. But then they have records in the Lamb's Book of Life, which survive the oblivion of the world, and endure in glory for ever. Ministers may have no outward monuments, no tablets on which their services are inscribed; but their work is more durable than Parian marble or time-resisting brass. Their story is on living hearts. Go, ask all over the land, and you will see their work in the cottages of the poor and the mansions of the rich. The answer will be; "Here, in this living soul, is their record;" and theirs are immortal names, that were not born to die.

Mr. Chairman, we need more men in the ministry; and, I repeat it, we must pray more; we must labour more; we must magnify more this divine office. To be the pastor of a people in such a land as this, and in such an age, is a great thing. May God give us more men, and more efficient men.

The Rev. John C. Lord, D. D., of Buffalo, N. Y., Moderator of the General Assembly, was called upon for an address; and he responded to the call as follows, as nearly as the reporter could take note of his rapidly-spoken, earnest sentences:

Dr. Lord said that his remarks would be upon that department of the operations of the Board which had been recently organized—general Christian education.

The idea of general education was not entertained in the heathen world. The grand thought was never conceived. Nay, the learned entertained a profound hatred of the people, tersely expressed by the language of Horace:—"Odi profanum vulgus, et arceo." The gospel of Christ brought with it an expanded idea of education. In the primitive Church, schools were frequently established next to the sacred edifices, or formed part of the buildings. The origin of the idea of general education was in Christianity. The Bible gives knowledge, awakens the faculties of the soul, and stimulates the desire to communicate knowledge to others.

As the Church advanced, and began to mingle with the policy of the world, the government assumed the control over learning. The cause of this union was the grasping ambition of Antichrist—the scarlet harlot that puts the cup of abomination to the nations of the earth. Rome unites Church and State wherever it is in her power to do so. She holds the cross in one hand and the sword in the other. Where she exercises supreme power in the state, she wields it for ecclesiastical purposes. Her educational system has always included religion, whether she has the control of civil government or not. This idea of the subserviency of education to religion is a true one; and she derived it from a pure age of the Church. It is an idea, strong in the power of a divine origin, and efficient to secure the greatest results. The fathers of the Reformation were not ignorant of its authority and value. Calvin and Knox, enlightened by divine grace to see the truth, and strengthened by the same grace to practise it, early turned their attention to the instruction of the young. Schools, and other institutions of learning were organized in Geneva, France, Scotland, and other countries of the Reformation. And on what principle, sir? On the principle of excluding religion? Such an idea would have been a degradation to the impulses and movements of the age. No, sir:—the education of the Reformers was religious education;—religious education under the care of the Church. It was reserved for modern speculators to tear out the vital part of the system, and to dissever the connexion between religion and learning.

When the Puritans and the Huguenots came to this country, they brought their schools with them. The glory of the New England school-system was that it inculcated religion, and was superintended by religious men. The emigrants in the Mayflower brought religion with them, and they brought education. They did not separate the two; they allowed them to live together in their homes, their schools, and their churches. Why, Mr. Chairman, I remember the time when the Shorter Catechism was taught in the schools. I myself learned it there; and the practice of teaching it continued in New England until quite recently. At the present day, however, the State, without any connexion with the Church—even a nominal one—has included education within its functions; and the State has passed beyond the boundaries to which it could lay any just claim. Instead of providing for the education of the poor—of those who could not educate themselves—it undertakes to educate all.

Now, the great objection which I have to the State schools, is, that they cannot teach religion. And, in my view, religious training should accompany all other teaching. God has not committed to governments the work of education. The civil magistrate has other duties to perform; he has no divine warrant to turn teacher, or to superintend education. This is not a matter to be passed upon at the polls. Where the Church is united with the State, she may derive aid from the State, and allow the State to conduct her affairs. But in this country there is no union of Church and State. What right has the State to educate my child? The State may administer justice, build canals and railroads, incorporate banks, and perform civil functions; but it has no right to establish a system of public schools, which compels, in fact, the great mass of the community to have their children educated there, or not at all. I wish my children to be educated "in the nurture of the Lord," and not in the nurture of the State. So do Christians in general, if the truth were known; but the State throws obstacles in the way, by its taxation, and its great public establishment.

There is an evil growing out of the public system, on which I cannot dwell at this late hour. The evil is, that it brings together, on a large scale, the pure and the impure. Wicked, profane children, picked up from the lowest haunts of vice, and who received no restraint or training at home, are brought into promiscuous contact with the moral, and gentle, and orderly. Now, what must be the effect of this indiscriminate mingling? Are the vicious reformed, or are the good made wicked? The latter, sir, is, the common result, according to nature and observation. Many an innocent child has learned profanity and indecency first at the public schools. With us [in Buffalo], this thing is beginning to be understood. The system, sir, must fall:—not only because it is irreligious in its nature, but because—what naturally follows—it is immoral in practice. We all, Mr. Chairman, desire to save the wicked. The children of the vicious, and vicious children, ought to be educated and reclaimed. But it is too much to ask Christians to send their sons and daughters to schools which have no religion to overawe and restrain vice, and which cannot exercise discipline in a way to make it the terror of evil-doers. If we are compelled to send to promiscuous schools, let us at least have the Gospel leaven in the schools. It is too bad that pure children should not only be mixed with the evil and the abominable, but that no divine teaching should be allowed to exert its influence upon either class.

The relation of the General Assembly and of our Board of Education to this subject is very important. The Presbyterian Church asserts the necessity of religion in a system of education. This is the old Christian principle. It is unpopular, we know. The world does not like God. Impenitent teachers do not relish religion, or care to teach it; and many Christians, alas! think their children need not learn about Christ at school. Public sentiment may be against us at the present time; and it may take years to engraft our views and opinions into the public mind. But our testimony is priceless. Those who see in the common schools the downfall of religion, hate our Church. The whole system tends to infidelity and corruption. Time will show it. The Assembly has testified in advance against it. Our witness, before men and angels, is that a Christian man should educate his child in a Christian way, both in the family and in the school. This is faithful witness-bearing, and let us not recede from it. What! Is the child to live for ever, and shall he be trained only for time! God forbid that our church should ever endorse such a delusion as that. Let us hold fast to our noble, our Christian position. This course of action is not only good for our own church, but our example will tell upon the public mind. I have heard shrewd worldly men acknowledge that the Assembly was right.

This thing, Mr. Chairman, has a practical bearing. What parent would care for all knowledge, if his son were an infidel or a drunkard? Religion, communicated in a school, day by day, and little by little, forms the character. It has a prodigious practical energy. It is a daily blessing to the youthful heart. Character is every thing to a young man; but in the public schools the mind is enlightened whilst character is left to shift for itself. The foundation of the State system is, that "knowledge is the chief good;" and the public sentiment seems to sustain it, and to consider that "knowledge is virtue." Sir, this is as false a sentiment as was ever uttered in the face of the heavens. Knowledge never has, and never will, save a country. Our boasting will be found to be in vain. To refuse to incorporate religion into a system of education is really to take infidel ground.

Has not this subject, sir, a wide and a national aspect? The thing we need among our public men is the infusion of correct principle. Religion is the saving power in the land. We need it at the bar and on the bench; we need it in physicians, in farmers, in mechanics, in all classes and conditions of men. And if we would have it, we must teach it—teach it everywhere, at home and in the school. Our church is wielding an influence for the country, and for all generations. Our position is one of honour and of power. God will own it, and men shall see it.

The meeting was dismissed after singing and the benediction. The audience was large, and the addresses were listened to with marked interest and favour.

I. MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that He would send forth labourers into His harvest."

THE DIFFICULTY OF MAINTENANCE AFFECTS THE NUMBERS OF THE MINISTRY.

THE LOW SALARIES OF MINISTERS, and the difficulty of decent maintenance on the ordinary professional income, is a cause which operates, no doubt, to some extent, in deterring young men from engaging in this important work. The following extract from a letter recently received at the office of the Board, is a significant token of the impressions made on the minds of many by a parsimonious policy:

"My salary is small; I pay sixty dollars for a very poor house per year. My wife, a feeble woman, is compelled to do her own work. . . . I am not able to buy a house; and if I had one, my income would not enable me to keep it. Many young men see all these things, and especially the sons of ministers. They see the anxiety of their fathers, and they witness the burdens of their mothers; and this state of things is one of the great causes of the unwillingness of the youth of our Church to turn their attention to the ministry."

The celebrated Dr. JOHN M. MASON says:

"It is demonstrably certain that no church ever can be well served, whose ministry is not exclusively devoted to their work. . . . A population increasing with unexampled rapidity creates a demand for an increase of gospel ministers far beyond what is generally conceived. Many who feel an inclination to devote themselves to the service of God in the gospel of his Son, will be disheartened, if they have reason to believe that only the shreds of their time and talents can be occupied in that service. On the other hand, we do believe that if a reasonable prospect is held out that when young men shall have expended their patrimony upon education, and shall have acquired those literary habits which disqualify for secular pursuits, they will enjoy a life appropriated to the duties of their selected station, it will fix many a wavering resolution."

One of our own ministers, in a communication to the Board, maintains the inexpediency of making an inadequate support a too prominent cause for the decrease of candidates. His remarks, which are here inserted, contain much good sense and piety.

"No one denies that there is a loud call for more labourers to enter into the ripening harvest. No one denies that the numbers are few who enter in. But why this scarcity? is a question to which different men give different answers. It has become common to answer it by saying that the support of the ministry is so small that few will enter in;—they fly off to other professions. This, no doubt, is the fact; but should it be brought forward as the ground of this failure? We believe that such an opinion as this, repeated over and over again in our religious papers, increases the evil. The apostle Paul to the Philippians declared, 'Not that I speak in respect of want; for I have learned that in whatever state I am, therewith to be content.' To find the reason of this lack of men, we must go to the bottom; and if we do, we will learn that it is a lack of faith, of a self-consecrating piety in our young men, which is the source of all the trouble. Those who desire to take upon themselves the office of a bishop should do it without reference to the support which they are to receive; they must trust God for that. They must enter upon this work, although they see starvation staring them in the face. This may seem strong language, but it is the truth as derived from God's word.

"And I would here be understood as referring to the first decision of this question by the young man. The whole subject of an adequate support to the ministry is most important and essential, and one that demands the earnest activity of the Church; but I declare again, with the Bible to sustain me, that it has nothing to do with the decision of the question by our young men; it must not weigh a feather in their judgment.

"But it may be said that it does influence them, and practically prevents many from entering upon the work. This but brings me back to the first ground of the difficulty—not that the support is insufficient, (for with this they have nothing to do,) but it is a lack of trust in God's superintending care. Our Saviour, when he sent forth his disciples first, said to them, 'Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for the workman is worthy of his hire.' They were worthy of the support, but they had nothing to do in providing it on their entrance upon the work.

"If we want the ranks of our ministry filled up, let us pray that God would pour down a self-consecrating spirit upon our young men, with a willingness to enter upon the work for the love of Christ and of souls, looking to God for the gold, and the silver, and the brass, and the scrip, and the raiment, and the staff to support them in the midst of all their trials and discouragements, and thus we will be praying in the most effectual manner for more labourers to be sent forth into the harvest."

Whilst it is admitted that young men ought not to distrust Providence in the choice of the sacred profession, it is still to be feared that the small and badly-paid salaries of ministers is practically an argument for some other profession, at least to some extent. And it is more than probable that the cause mentioned operates on the minds of parents, to dissuade their children from engaging in so self-denying work, rather than directly upon the ingenuous nature of our consecrated youth.

II. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION
IN SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

SAMUEL DAVIES INSTITUTE, VIRGINIA.

The following notice of this flourishing Presbyterial Academy, located in Halifax county, Virginia, will be gratifying to our readers. The notice is from the "Watchman and Observer."

To add to the proper pride and satisfaction which the promoters of our home institutions should indulge, I feel impelled to give some account of the examination and closing scene at the Samuel Davies Institute at Halifax C. H., Virginia. The examination of the students occupied three days, during which time the large examination-room was filled, part of the time crowded, with spectators, with trustees, parents and guardians, anxiously bent on hearing the recitations of their young scholars. The ladies also attended.

The examination was most thorough and impartial, and the impression made upon my own and upon other minds was in the highest degree satisfactory. It is pleasing, sir, in this age of novelties, this age of theory and superficial education, to find an institution like the Samuel Davies, in which thoroughness seems to be the great end aimed at.

The three men whom the Trustees have had employed in training the pupils of this school are of the very first order. They would rank high in the professorships of the best Colleges in our country.

One great difficulty that this Institute will labour under, arises from the inability of unendowed institutions to retain their Professors. Well endowed Colleges have an advantage which they are very careful generally to assert. The Trustees of Washington recently elected Professor James J. White, of the Samuel Davies Institute, to the Professorship of Greek in their College. He has accepted their offer and given up his place in the Institute. The Trustees of the Institute, however, have elected in his place George White, who is of the same parentage, of the same training and education, and I am assured, a man of the same staunch and energetic qualities which rendered his brother so efficient.

With the talented trio of Smith, Graves, and White, the Institute is bound to flourish and prove eminently useful.

The students all stood examination on the Shorter Catechism, which was deeply interesting and impressive to my feelings. Religion, the great concern of man, is here most faithfully taught. It is believed that the Bible and the Shorter Catechism have done much, very much, to secure the order and decorum which have characterized the conduct of the students from the foundation of this Institute till now.

On Wednesday evening the juvenile orators of the Samuel Davies Institute were heard by a very large auditory. Five of the students spoke original speeches, which would have reflected credit on the graduates of a College. These were the first rhetorical exercises of the Institute. It is understood that at the close of the next scholastic year, there will be quite a literary entertainment furnished to the patrons and friends of this young Institution. The Board of Trustees have decided upon the plan of having a literary address delivered annually by some distinguished man from abroad. And under this plan they selected the Rev. M. D. Hoge of Richmond, to deliver the first address. Mr. Hoge has signified his consent to do so.

The prayers of many hearts will go up to God for the Samuel Davies Institute. We believe that it is destined to enlargement and great usefulness to the cause of education and religion.

Yours, &c.

"SPECTATOR."

MONROE PRESBYTERIAL ACADEMY.

The Annual Catalogue of this Institution, under the care of Miami Presbytery, has been handed us. During the past year, sixty-seven pupils have been in attendance, viz: males, 45; females, 22.

Rev. John R. Kingery is Principal, and A. C. Tyler, A. B., assistant.

There are Primary, Junior, and Senior departments of study. The instruction in each is designed to be thorough, so that pupils are fitted fully for the ordinary avocations of life, or for entering the regular classes in the higher collegiate institutions.

MONROE is on the turnpike leading from Cincinnati to Dayton, and is 25 miles distant from either place. The location is healthful, and the society good. The advantages of securing an education, surrounded by religious and moral influences, commend it to the notice of parents and guardians.—Presbyterian of the West.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS.

At the late meeting of the American Association on Education, the subject of the use of the BIBLE IN SCHOOLS was brought forward and occasioned a long and animated discussion. Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, offered the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, A complete education embraces the development of the whole man, his physical, mental, and moral nature; and whereas, the development of the latter is of equal or greater importance than either of the others; therefore,

Resolved, That the Bible should be read daily in all of our schools, and the pupils instructed in the general principles of Christianity.

Dr. MCELLIGOTT, of New York, inquired as to the gentleman's object in offering these resolutions. He was, personally, in favour of reading a portion of the Scriptures at the commencement of school-hours, but unaccompanied by comment. If the resolutions looked to this object only, they would meet with his hearty concurrence.

Mr. WHITEHEAD, of Newark, considered the subject sufficiently important to call for the appointment of a special Committee, and moved that such a Committee be appointed, with Dr. MCELLIGOTT as Chairman.

Mr. HENRY, of New York, thought it was the most important matter of School Discipline. He thought the firm stand of the Roman Catholic Church for their faith, in matters of education, made it incumbent upon Protestants to stand equally firm by their open Bible, never to consent that it shall be closed. He insisted that it was all-important to liberty and to every phase of well being. When this book is closed, the sun of liberty has set for ever.

Mr. MCELLIGOTT deprecated the idea of censuring any denomination for any course in regard to the Bible. He was for a simple expression of the propriety of reading the Bible, without the least allusion to doctrines of any kind. He deprecated the idea of the introduction of denominational creeds into teaching.

Rev. Mr. FISH, of Newark, held the idea that a question of this character should be met fairly and openly, and not be shirked. He believed in the importance of the plan.

Dr. MCKEEN suggested the propriety of allowing the matter to lie until another year, when, if a committee could meantime be appointed to prepare and furnish a judicious report, it may be resumed, and some definite determination be arrived at by the Association.

Mr. WHITEHEAD said the importance of the subject demanded immediate action. There was much difficulty in some places in getting children into schools where the Bible was read. He hoped the matter would be referred to a special committee.

Mr. SWAN, of Boston, moved, and it was carried, that the resolutions be laid upon the table.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

MISSION HOUSE,
No. 23 Centre Street, New York.

RECENT INTELLIGENCE.

Mission House, August 13, 1852.

India.—Letters have been received, dated at Lahor, May 25; Lodiana, May 26; Saharanpur, May 7; Sabathu, May 20; Futtehgurh, May 26; Mynpurie, May 27; Agra, May 28; Allahabad, May 29. A new station had been formed in connection with the Allahabad Mission at Futtehpore. The name of this city has frequently been mentioned as an eligible place for missionary labour. It is about seventy-five miles above Allahabad, has a considerable number of inhabitants, and is surrounded by a large population—"more than half a million within a radius of about thirty miles from Futtehpore in each direction." The Rev. R. M. Munnis and four of the native brethren have been appointed by the mission to occupy the new station. A considerable part of the expense incurred by this measure will be defrayed by the liberality of English friends at Futtehpore. After mentioning these things, the Rev. J. Owen adds, "We must not stop at Futtehpore. That is but the entrance into a vast, new, and inviting field. Next we ought to have a missionary at Banda, then at Humeerpore, and then——But let us first get a missionary at each of these two stations, with schools and catechists. If you could send out the required men soon, we could furnish them with some Christians and native labourers from this place, as we are now furnishing Mr. Munnis. Another man ought to be sent here as soon as possible, to take the place now left vacant by Mr. Munnis. . . What noble fields for enterprising young men are open before us! How long shall they remain unoccupied? When will the Church feel as she ought, about these perishing myriads?"—Several persons applied for admission to the church at Allahabad early in May, but it was deemed best to keep them longer on trial. Two of the church members have been removed by death, witnessing a good confession unto the end.—At Agra the arrangements for the East Indian school were going on well. An eligible building had been purchased for it, at an expense of about $2000, most of which was contributed by European friends at the station. Twenty-one scholars were already in attendance. Mr. Warren says, "there are very promising boys among them." At Futtehgurh, the missionary work in all its departments is spoken of in quite encouraging terms. Mr. Seeley says that nearly five hundred children are now in their schools, all learning the catechism and to read the sacred Scriptures. In the upper mission, the brethren are able to give a good account of their labours. Mr. Campbell at Saharunpur says, "Our schools and missionary work generally are quite encouraging. No objections are now made to reading and studying the Scriptures in all departments. A large Bible-class of the English scholars attend every Sabbath morning, and afterwards all proceed to church to hear a sermon in Hindustani. What an improvement is this on former times, when the sight of a Bible or a direct reference to it was the signal for a most determined opposition. Well may we exclaim, What hath God wrought?" We regret to learn, however, that Mr. Morrison, Mr. Porter, Mrs. Janvier, and Mrs. Jamieson are suffering from ill health. Mr. Woodside continues slowly to improve. In two at least of these cases, the climate is not particularly unfavourable. Urgent requests are made for more missionaries—especially for at least one more at Ambala, and another at Lahor. And this number ought surely to be sent without delay. May the Lord be pleased soon to raise up the men!

Siam.—The Rev. S. Mattoon writes at Bangkok, March 22, that they are making progress with the building operations, though in that country, building is a slow and troublesome business. They expected to have a house completed in about a month after the above date. The Rev. S. Bush had been confined with a fever, for three weeks, but was on the recovery.

China.—Letters have been received from Ningpo, April 15; Shanghai, May 10; Canton, May 22. The missionaries at Shanghai were going on again with their house, having obtained the magistrates' consent, though one of the officers wished to stipulate that it should neither be built high nor painted red! Mr. Wight adds: "All that the neighbours care about it, is expressed in the same way they always do, when a house is being built near them, by erecting brooms and baskets in a corner of their houses to ward off all evil influences." At Canton, one of the signs of progress was the rather painful fact, that two boys of Mr. Happer's school—Robert T. Berry and John G. Bergen, "carried away with the gold fever, left the school without leave, and have gone to California." Even there the Lord can show them his grace, and use them for his glory. The missionary work in all the missions was going on as usual.

Africa: Corisco Mission.—A letter from the Rev. J. L. Mackey, of April 20, gives still encouraging accounts of the Mission, though the boys' school had to be suspended for want of a teacher. The attendance had increased to upwards of seventy. Ten girls had been selected out of far more that had been offered, and were under the charge of the Mission as boarding scholars. Upwards of forty children attended the Sunday-school. More labourers, is the pressing need of this Mission.

Departure of a Missionary.—The Rev. Robert E. Williams, of the Presbytery of Alleghany, left this city on the 12th of August, to sail in a few days in the ship Rose Standish, for Calcutta. Mr. Williams, formerly of Newville, Pennsylvania, is a nephew of the Rev. Dr. Elliott, of the Western Theological Seminary. His station is Agra, Upper India.

Arrival of Missionaries.—The Rev. John Newton and his family arrived at this port on the 12th of August. Mr. Newton returns on a visit on account of impaired health.

INDIAN MISSIONS.

REPORT OF WALTER LOWRIE, ESQ., ONE OF THE SECRETARIES OF THE BOARD, TO THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, OF HIS VISIT TO THE INDIAN MISSIONS.

On the 12th of April I left New York, in company with Mr. George Ainslie, a teacher for Spencer Academy, and Mr. James Balmer, an assistant for the Creek mission. At Louisville, Ky., we were joined by Miss Clara W. Eddy, a teacher for the school at Tallahassee. We reached Fort Smith on the 28th of April, and on the 29th our little company separated. Miss Eddy and Mr. Balmer to the Creek mission, 75 miles—and Mr. Ainslie and myself to the Choctaw mission, 135 miles distant from Fort Smith. We reached Spencer Academy on the 4th of May. This land journey was tedious and wearisome, as we could get no conveyance better than a common wagon without seats or springs, and drawn by two Mexican ponies, so poor and weak that we had to walk up all the hills and mountains on the road. Mr. Ainslie having walked the last twenty miles in advance, reached the mission several hours before me, when Mr. Reid set out to meet me. I was glad to leave the wretched wagon, even for the distance of half a dozen miles.

Choctaw Mission: Spencer Academy.

It was an amusing sight, and one of much interest to me, to see the boys when we reached the mission. They had talked no little among themselves about my coming, and a good many of them were quite sceptical in regard to it. Some sixty of them were at the north gate—some on the fence, and others standing close to the road; as many more were collected in groups under the nearest shade trees. At first sight there seemed to be more than two hundred of them. They returned my salutation very pleasantly, and each showed a set of white teeth. In the afternoon, Mr. Reid introduced them to me one by one, and I shook hands with them.

It is but due to the occasion to say, that the missionaries and their wives, and the other ladies and assistants of the mission, were much rejoiced and strengthened by my visit to them. It could not well be otherwise. Their extensive correspondence with the Mission House, had made the officers there, in a good measure, familiar with their labours, their trials, and their encouragements. To meet one of these officers on the mission premises, where these things could be talked over, and where he could see for himself, what their arduous duties were, with all the details of their field of labour, was pleasant and profitable, and encouraging both to him and to them.

Although the agreement with the Choctaw Council was for one hundred boys only, there are one hundred and twenty now in the Seminary. The applications to have boys admitted, from all parts of the Nation, are so numerous and pressing that it is very hard to refuse them, while there is any room to receive them. This is one evidence, among many others, that the Institution possesses the full confidence of the Choctaw people. To all my inquiries as we passed from Fort Smith, the answer was favourable; some of the most intelligent adding—"They have got good and able teachers there." One hundred and ten boys are selected by the trustees, and ten by Mr. Reid; but no boy is received after the session opens, even if a vacancy should occur by death or removal. It was deemed important that the classes should not be embarrassed by admitting new boys when they were once formed, and their studies commenced. So many promising boys were looking forward to the opening of the next session, and their parents were so anxious they should be received, that we agreed to recommend to the committee to receive next session, one hundred and thirty boys.

The boys are divided into four schools, and a teacher assigned to each. He has the care of his own boys, both in and out of school. Each school has its own school room, and its own sitting room. This arrangement is found to work well. It prevents all crowding and disorder, brings the boys immediately under the influence of their respective teachers, and tends to insure to him their respect and love.

There were but three teachers when I arrived; Mr. Turner, who had charge of one of the schools, finding the duties too arduous, had given it up in February, and had joined the Chickasaw mission. Mr. Reid, therefore, in addition to his other duties, had the care of one of the schools himself. On Thursday afternoon, I visited and examined his boys. He has taken great pains with them. In his double duties, neglect what he may, he will not neglect his boys. The examination and appearance of the school was very satisfactory.

Wednesday, May 5.—Visited Miss Thompson's school in the forenoon. This young lady is an efficient and accomplished teacher. She has thirty boys, and her influence over them is complete. It seemed, like the dew, to fall unseen; but like the dew, when it had fallen, it was seen. The slightest intimation of her wish was responded to with cheerful and pleasant obedience. The boys stood a good examination, especially in geography, where they were much at home.

In the afternoon, visited Mr. Edwards' school. Here, too, the boys appeared well, and their examination was satisfactory. Mr. Edwards is an excellent teacher, and the boys are very much attached to him. His influence over them, in the formation of their characters, is of the best kind.

Thursday, May 6.—Visited Mr. Balentine's school in the forenoon. His boys are the furthest advanced. Two classes were examined in the higher rules of arithmetic, and they wrought out some difficult questions, on the black board, with promptness and accuracy. Reading, spelling, and geography, were recited much to their credit. Mr. Balentine has been engaged longer than any of the others in instructing Indian youth and boys. He is very much at home with these youths around him, and greatly to their advantage.

At 11 o'clock, each day, the boys all meet in the chapel, and Mr. Reed spends an hour with them, chiefly in religious instruction; which, for the benefit of all the boys, is translated into Choctaw by Mr. Dwight. It was assigned to me to fill up this hour to-day, which I did by referring to the creation and fall of man—the sinful state of the whole human family by nature—the divine mission of the Saviour—and the work of the Holy Spirit. Mr. Dwight translated, and I never spoke to a more deeply attentive audience. A number of the larger boys have for some time been under deep exercise of mind, and we trust the time is at hand when they will come out and own the Saviour.

After supper the boys have a short recess for play. At 7 P. M., each school meets in its sitting-room, and with its teacher spends an hour in reading the Scriptures, prayer and singing. These exercises are in Choctaw and English. The boys are very fond of these meetings. The exercises are sometimes varied by familiar instructions from the teacher. The boys are very fond of singing, and always bring their hymn books, both in English and Choctaw, with them. This evening I met with Mr. Reid and his boys. They seemed unwilling to separate, and in fact did not separate till 8½ P. M., half an hour beyond their usual time.

Friday, May 7.—Visited Mr. Edwards' school again in the forenoon, and was some time employed in examining and talking to the boys. It was the day they recite the Shorter Catechism, each boy repeating the questions he has learned through the week. The rule is, to say them perfectly, or to sit down. Only two boys could recite all the questions; but all the boys will soon have them all perfectly.

At 11 A. M., spoke again to the boys in the chapel. I went over our different missions, pointing them out on the map, and describing particularly the different schools, at the same time introducing such remarks as would be profitable to them. They became deeply interested. When the hour was up, I had only got through the Indian and African missions, and it was agreed I should take the hour on Saturday to finish.

After dinner, Mr. Reid and myself went to Doaksville. We stopped at Pine Ridge, the station of the Rev. Mr. Kingsbury. Several Choctaw chiefs were there waiting for us, and after tea we went to the town, where, without my knowledge, a meeting had been appointed, at which I was to give them an address. The supreme court were holding their session there then, and a number of influential chiefs were present. I explained to them the extent and government of the Presbyterian Church—the constitution of the Board of Foreign Missions, by the General Assembly, and under its direction—that this Church was always among the foremost in education, both at home, and among her foreign missions—that the missionary work embraced education, as well as preaching and translating the Bible—I explained our views as to the Choctaw mission, and took up the objection, that Spencer Academy was too large, and should be broken up and divided. That although this objection had been urged, even by some friendly to the missionary work, as well as by the enemies of missions, it had not one solid reason to support it—that one hundred and fifty boys could be formed into classes, so as to require less labour, in proportion to that number, than one hundred. That we had now one hundred and twenty boys, and next session we would probably have one hundred and thirty—that the time was just at hand, when the whole Choctaw nation would request us to take one hundred and fifty. The danger to Spencer Academy was not in the number of the scholars, but in the difficulty of the Board obtaining suitable teachers, willing to engage in the self-denying work.

Another objection was, that we employed ministers as teachers, where they could do far more good, as was said, in preaching. This objection too, was made by individuals for whom we had a high regard. But these brethren were far more than mere teachers. Their duties were to form the character of those boys—to teach them to think for themselves—to prepare them for usefulness, that a native agency might be raised up for the wants of both the Church and the States. Had such an Institution been established thirty years ago, and properly conducted, with the blessing of God, how different would have been the condition of the Choctaw Nation! There might have been native ministers enough to supply all their vacancies, besides educated men for the wants of the State. The providence of God brought us here—for we did not seek this mission—and when we were trying to fill up what we deemed to be a want in the missionary work for the Choctaws, we merited a cordial welcome from the Choctaw people, and their friends. So too, the education of the girls, and young women of the Nation, was of equal importance with that of the boys and young men. You cannot elevate man, if you leave woman ignorant and degraded. My heart had warmed at the sight of thirty Choctaw girls, under the best instruction, in Mr. Kingsbury's school, which I had left but an hour ago.

It was late when we got back to Mr. Kingsbury's. I slept little that night, as my strength was not yet sufficient for such labours.

Saturday, May 8.—Mr. Kingsbury had to leave home, immediately after breakfast, having to ride forty miles to the place of preaching on the Sabbath. I could not but respect and honour him, for the zeal and cheerfulness he manifested in his abundant labours. Mr. Reid and myself made a short visit to the school. It is under the care of two young ladies, one of whom teaches them in the school, and the other takes the charge of them when out of school. Every thing gave evidence to the faithfulness and ability with which the girls were instructed and cared for. We got back to the mission in time for the meeting in the chapel, when I finished the missionary address to the boys.

In the afternoon Mr. Reid and I went over all the mission premises, sleeping-rooms, store-room, meat-house, kitchen, cellar, horse-mill, and granary. Every part was in good order, nothing out of place, no waste in the provisions, which with a family so large is no small matter. In speaking of the schools and expressing the confidence in the faithfulness and ability of the teachers which I really felt, it was proper to refer to them by name. But all the other members and assistants of the mission, in their respective employments, though not here named, are equally entitled to the confidence of the Board for the faithful performance of their duties. Of Mr. and Mrs. Reid it is unnecessary to speak. Their duties in the care and superintendence of such a large family, are very arduous, and require unceasing attention. The prosperous state of the Institution gives full evidence how faithfully and ably these duties have been met.

After the boys had retired, the mission families all met together, when we had a very pleasant and affecting meeting, with reading the Scriptures, prayer and praise. I made a few remarks about the difficulty and importance of their work—the solemn duty of mission families to live in peace with each other—the great cause we had for gratitude to God, that they were all living in harmony and peace. Several travellers, Col. Pitchlynn and other chiefs, were at the mission, but we deemed it best that the mission families should have one meeting by themselves, during my stay. We explained the circumstances however to these gentlemen, the same evening.

Sabbath, May 9th.—On week-days when the boys rise in the morning, they are full of spirits and mirth, and are heard laughing and talking at their different halls. This morning every thing was so quiet that, so far as hearing was concerned, it could not be known that there was a boy on the premises. This respect and regard for the Sabbath by 120 boys impressed me favourably. Col. Pitchlynn also remarked it, and spoke of it with much satisfaction.

At 7 A. M., the boys met in their respective Sabbath-schools. At 9 A. M. they were all assembled in the chapel, when I talked to them for an hour, Mr. Dwight translating. I had some doubts about my speaking so often to them, but my objections were overruled. Col. Pitchlynn made a good address to them in English, with notice that he would give them the same in Choctaw in the afternoon.

At 11 A. M., the regular service by Mr. Reid was held, translated by Mr. Dwight. He is explaining the Bible in course, and his subject to-day was, "the murder of Abel by his brother Cain." It was a clear exposition of the dreadful effects of sin on the depraved human heart.

At 1 P. M. Mr. Dwight preached in Choctaw, the boys, Mr. Reid and myself present.

At 3 P. M. the mission families, travellers and visitors, met with the boys in the chapel, when I made an address to the missionaries. I dwelt chiefly on the Divine appointment, trials, and final triumph of the missionary cause; and all these with reference to ourselves, and our co-labourers in different and distant parts of the world. As this was to be our last public meeting, it was a season of solemn and tender interest. Col. Pitchlynn then spoke to the boys in Choctaw, as did also Ishmayhubbee, one of Mr. Wright's elders. He spoke in Choctaw, was very solemn and impressive, and presented as fine a specimen of eloquence as I ever heard. If he had received an English education, so as to have given him access to the rich stores of sacred literature in our language, what an efficient missionary he would have made to his own people. This is a strong evidence of the importance of education in the foreign missionary work.

Another similar instance is seen in the case of a pious and promising young Choctaw, named Henry Clay. He was a pupil of Mr. Wright's school, and is a member of his church. The brethren have employed him to teach a school four miles from Spencer. They give him eight dollars a month, and he boards at the mission. But he cannot even speak English, and the teaching of his school is in Choctaw merely. I expressed my doubts about continuing this arrangement, and suggested that he devote himself to a course of study with them. He would then be qualified to take charge of any part of the missionary work, and add one more to the number of efficient labourers. The longer I live, the more am I convinced of the wisdom of the Presbyterian Church, in requiring her ministers to be educated men, and of the duty of the Foreign Board to carry the same principle into all their efforts to raise up a native ministry among every heathen people to whom they are privileged to send the gospel.

Mr. Balentine went out this morning to preach to a small congregation, where Henry has his school, and returned to the mission before 3 P. M.

The evening of the Sabbath had now come; the whole day had been profitably employed. Two extra meetings had been held, because I was there. After supper, the boys, with their teachers, met for a short time in their sitting-rooms, and sung several hymns in English and Choctaw. I sat at an open window and listened to them. They all retired to rest early, when deep silence prevailed over these peaceful dwellings.

The previous evening, four gentlemen and a lady, who were travelling from Texas to see their friends in Missouri, requested to lodge at the Mission. Mr. Reid informed them, that if they would remain over the Sabbath they could stay, and were welcome; but if they intended leaving in the morning, he must decline receiving them, as he did not wish the example of white men to be counteracting the religious instruction the boys were receiving. They cheerfully agreed to remain. They had horse feed with them, and themselves sat at the tables with the boys and the teachers, as is the rule at the mission, be the visitor whom he may. They attended all the meetings, and expressed themselves greatly pleased and surprised at the deportment of the boys. When leaving, they wished to pay for their lodging, but Mr. Reid informed them he never made a charge for any of our citizens passing a night at the mission. They then made a donation of five dollars to the mission, and expressed themselves much gratified at what they had seen and heard.

Monday, May 10.—This was the day assigned for leaving the mission. When I awoke, the clock was striking 3 A. M. Knowing that the bell would ring at 4, and hearing Mr. Reid already up, I rose and spent an hour by candle-light writing some letters home. I thought I was done speaking to the boys, but not so had Mr. Reid decided. Usually they have prayers morning and evening, after breakfast and supper, before leaving the table. This morning Mr. Reid stated that prayers would be in the chapel, and that I would make them a parting address. Some of the largest boys manifested deep feeling, and all were more than usually attentive. When the exercises were over I stood at the door and shook hands with each one as they passed out. I then went to each mission family and bade them farewell. Little was, or could be said, but silent tears on both sides were shed.

This report is already too long, yet the importance of the subject requires a few remarks.

1. In every part of the Choctaw Nation, where there is a settlement of people, the urgent cry is for a missionary and a school. Some of these settlements are small, others consist of a large number of families. This people greatly need instruction, both as to things of this life and the life to come. These poor families, scattered on their lonely farms, though possessing a country rich in soil, healthy, and well watered, cannot elevate themselves. As the fathers and mothers are, so, if left to themselves, will their children be. Some three or four missionaries at least, to occupy the principal points, are at this time most urgently needed. But their entire wants can only be supplied by their own educated sons and daughters. Hence the vital importance of the system of education and religious instruction now carried on by the several religious societies; and especially the importance of Spencer Academy, which receives the youth from every part of the Nation.

2. The preceding statements show the care and labour bestowed on these boys, by their missionaries, both male and female, and especially the prominence given to their religious training. Their studies in the school are conducted in English, but in their religious instruction, their own language is freely used. Most of the boys when they first come, know nothing of English, but they know their mother tongue, and the truths of the Gospel are thus at once brought in contact with their minds through it. In thus using it they attend to instruction without weariness. In no school or seminary that I have ever seen is the same amount of care and labour bestowed on the pupils; and I never saw the same number of boys together so civil to each other, so pleasantly obedient to their teachers, and so punctual in their attendance, whether for meals, or for school, or for work. Nor is this the result of despotic authority. The influence which controls them is of another and stronger kind. Unseen though it may be to a spectator, it is founded on love and respect for their teachers, justly merited on their part by continued acts of kindness and instruction, and at the same time a full knowledge on their part that the rules of the Institution must be upheld. The use of the rod, or medicine, as the boys call it, is very seldom necessary.

3. After a careful examination of these boys, during a part of four days, I became fully satisfied that their minds and intellects are fully equal to those of white boys. At first, as they have a new and difficult language to learn, it must be taken into the account, when comparing their progress with others. It is a pretty difficult task for a boy, just from the woods, and unused to think at all, to learn to speak and read, and especially to spell correctly our difficult language. Yet, in the circumstances and relative position of this people, this acquirement lies at the foundation of a practical and useful education. When this is mastered, the Choctaw youth, under equal advantages, will not fall behind the youth in the United States, and in some things, as in public speaking, they will be found in advance.

4. Until the last two years, the frequent changes in the scholars was most injurious, and greatly retarded the usefulness of the Institution. This evil has nearly subsided. Last year the changes were almost nominal, and the prospect for the future in this respect is good. The anxiety of the parents to have their boys admitted, and the regulation that none are to be admitted after the session commences, will, it is believed, remove the evil altogether.

5. How sad it would be if such an Institution should fail or be suspended, for want of suitable or qualified teachers, when there are so many pious and competent men in the Church. The fears expressed in the last Annual Report, are for the present removed, as the two excellent brethren referred to, have cheerfully agreed to continue till suitable men can be found to take their places. Two teachers, however, will be wanted at the commencement of the next session, for reasons which will be stated in the Report of the Chickasaw mission. If our brethren in the ministry will bear in mind the request made to them by the Board in the Annual Report, it cannot be that they will not be obtained.

6. Towards an agency so powerful for good, it is not to be expected that Satan will be idle, and hence the solemn duty of the Church to remember these boys, and these self-denying missionaries at a throne of grace. No good will follow these labours, without the Divine agency of the Holy Spirit. If the Church puts her trust in the piety and zeal of her missionaries, or in the wisdom of her plans and principles, she will certainly be disappointed. But if she asks in faith for the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, she will as certainly not ask in vain.

Chickasaw Mission.

Monday, May 10.—At 7½ A. M. Mr. Reid and I left Spencer Academy for the Chickasaw mission. The direct road is between sixty and seventy miles, but in time of high water the distance is one hundred. Heavy rains had fallen in the night, and it rained at times through the day. We went some miles round to visit the station of the Rev. Mr. Stark, and dined there. He is in a field of much usefulness, is much esteemed, and with his excellent wife is doing a good work. There is a promising day-school, which we visited, taught by a young lady. Mr. Stark came six miles with us to guide us round the high waters. At night we came to Mr. Stewart's, whose lady, in his absence, treated us with every Christian kindness. She told me she had read the memoir of my lamented son—that her only son had been named after him, but that a few months before he had gone, as she trusted, to join him in heaven. We rode this day 45 miles. I was as tired and sore as could well be, and at bed-time had a severe chill. Mr. Reid covered me with heavy blankets, and a profuse perspiration through the night saved me from all fever.

Tuesday, May 11.—Set out at 7 A. M. and stopped for dinner at the Rev. Mr. Copeland's. He also is in a field of great usefulness, having a number of preaching places, and able to preach in Choctaw. Here also is a day-school taught by a young lady. Messrs. Stark and Copeland are missionaries of the American Board. Mr. Copeland came a number of miles with us to show us the road. At night we reached the Boggy Depot, and were kindly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Guy. Came to-day forty-five miles.

Wednesday, May 12.—Left the depot at sunrise, and came through a series of beautiful prairies, ten miles to Wapanucka, by 7 A. M. A cordial welcome awaited us from Mr. and Mrs. Allan, Mr. and Mrs. Watson, and the other members of the mission.

The afternoon that Mr. Reid and myself went to Doaksville, we called on P. Colbert, Esq., an intelligent and influential Chickasaw chief. He appeared to be gratified with our visit, and received us very cordially. He resides on a rich and beautiful farm, with large fields under good cultivation. His house is large and well constructed and finished, and the lawn and garden laid out with much taste and beauty. He spoke proudly of their building at Wapanucka. It would look well, he said, beside our buildings in New York. That their intention is to pay all the expense of the building, and they are ready to do the same for a boys' school, as soon as the Board will agree to take charge of it. They wish us to take 100 girls and 100 boys, at $75 each per annum. Their Council, he said, would meet in the fall, and they would be glad to hear from the Board then. I told him the Board would be ready to make them a communication then—that they were willing to do every thing in their power for the education of the Chickasaw youth, and for their religious instruction. That in the mean time I would see the new building and the country, and would be able to give the Board all the information they needed, especially as to the site of the boys' Institution.

At the last meeting of the Council they were anxious that Messrs. Reid and Allan, who were present, should enter into a contract on the part of the Board for a boys' school, on the terms above stated. This of course these brethren declined doing, as they had no instruction in regard to it. This matter, however was fully and favourably considered by the Committee before I left New York, and I was instructed to act in regard to it as circumstances would require.

This is a matter of much importance and of deep concern to this interesting and liberal people. Should these arrangements be completed, it will be a very loud call to the Church to take the direction of such agencies for good. Two such Institutions, placed at the proper distance apart, would do much to sustain each other. It is believed that owing to the increased amount of missionary influence that would be connected with them, and the increased means of usefulness they would afford, there would be less difficulty in obtaining suitable missionaries and teachers for both, than there would be for supplying one only. The sight of so many promising children of both sexes, which I witnessed while among them, rising up in the wilderness, to the level of their parents merely, deeply affected my heart. Here was an agency, that, with the blessing of God, would raise them to an equality in civilization with their white neighbours, and above all, to an equality of privileges in the Church of God.

In looking forward to the opening of the girls' school, and the contemplated direction of the boys' school, several questions of much interest were presented. Should this new building be commenced, Mr. Allan's whole time would be required for it. But Mr. Watson had been sent out as superintendent of the girls' school, with the understanding that Mr. Allan would act as steward and farmer, and by his experience relieve him from many perplexing parts of the business. Both Mr. and Mrs. Watson were willing to do any thing in their power for the Institution; but they were without experience in these things, and to withdraw Mr. Allan from them, would be to leave them to untried and difficult duties. Besides, Mr. Watson, since his arrival in February, had been constantly engaged preaching to the Indians, at four different stations. They had become strongly attached to him, and often came seven or eight miles to hear him preach. It seemed very hard to withdraw the bread of life from those so desirous to receive it.

After repeated consultations, first with the brethren at Spencer, and then with the brethren at Wapanucka, these matters were arranged to the satisfaction of all. That Mr. Watson should continue to give his whole time to preaching, and to be near the centre of his field, should reside at the depot. That Mr. Balentine and his wife, from Spencer, should take the direction of the girls' school, they both having had much experience and knowledge of the duties. And that Mr. Allan should take the direction of putting up the new buildings, should the proposed arrangement be completed.

The only drawback to this disposal of these questions was, the depriving Spencer of one of its able missionaries. Miss Thompson also, was originally appointed for the Chickasaws, and will greatly prefer joining the school at its first opening. This will take two teachers from Spencer, whose places must be supplied by the 1st of October next.

As soon as it was made known that Mr. Watson and his family had commenced a station at the depot, the most earnest request was made from the families residing in that neighbourhood, for a day-school. They offered to put up a school-house at once. A liberal allowance has been made by the National Council for the support of every day-school having a regular attendance of twenty scholars. I could only answer them, that if a female teacher could be obtained, the Committee would be willing to establish the school at once, and, if possible, have it in operation by the 1st of October next.

Three young brethren, Messrs. Turner, Davis and McCarter, I met here for the first time, although frequent letters had passed between them and the Mission House. They all manifest a true missionary spirit, and are most usefully employed. Till the buildings are finished, their services will be very important, and they will be equally so when both these Seminaries are in operation. It is encouraging to meet with intelligent and pious laymen, in opening manhood, devoting themselves to the missionary work, especially where their services are so indispensable in the system of Christian agency now employed by the Church, for extending the blessings of civilization and Christianity to our Indian neighbours.

Spent the 12th instant in examining the building improvements and premises. The house was built according to a plan sent out from the Mission House. It is 105 feet long, 32 feet wide, in the clear; three stories, or 30 feet high, with a kitchen in the rear. It is of limestone, nearly as white as chalk, the stone neatly dressed in front, and the course all of a height, but not cut with the chisel. Its size, its whiteness and eligible position, gives it an imposing appearance. Less expense in its structure would have fitted it equally well for a mission-school; but the chiefs preferred it as it is. It was built for eighty scholars, but the Council wishing the Board to take one hundred, made an appropriation for two wings, each 18 by 20 feet, two stories high. They will join the building, and will not require stairs. This will give ample room for one hundred girls.

The causes of the unavoidable and perplexing delays in the erection of the buildings have been mentioned in the Annual Reports of the Board. To understand the full force of these difficulties, one must be on the ground. Mr. Allan has gone forward with untiring perseverance, sustained by the conviction, that though but a pioneer, he is engaged in the Lord's work, preparing the way for the salvation of many precious souls among a people for whose benefit both he and his excellent wife have most cheerfully devoted their lives.

Thursday, May 13.—Rode all day, examining a site for the boys' school. Found one every way suitable, about a mile from the female school, with every advantage; woodland, prairie, and rich bottom land, all adjoining each other. Examined the mill-seat also on Wapanucka creek, where a permanent dam can be built at small expense. Passed through some places rich with fossil remains; the views and scenery on every side were rich and exceedingly beautiful.

Friday, May 14.—Started early to examine the country on the Blue River, eight or ten miles distant, where it is supposed some of the Chickasaws may wish to have the boys' school placed; saw some pretty good sites. But were all strongly opposed to having the schools placed so far apart.

Saturday, May 15.—Mr. Reid set out to visit the Methodist school. Spent the day with Mr. Allan, deciding on proposed improvements, and looking over the accounts and expenditures of the mission. Examined the mill-seat again. As a horse or water-mill will be absolutely necessary, we all thought that the benefits of the latter over the former will be so great, it had better be built.

Sabbath, May 16.—A day of rest which I very much needed. The young brethren went out two miles to hold a Sabbath-school. At 2½ P. M., all the families and workmen met in Mr. Allan's house for public worship. His usual custom is, with singing, reading the scripture and prayer, to read a sermon. Instead of the sermon I spoke to them on the duty and privilege, the trials and encouragements, of extending the knowledge of the Saviour's name.

Monday, May 17.—Last evening the horses had been turned out to graze a while under the watch of a negro boy. Just at dark he reported that he could not find them. To-day we got an Indian to hunt for them. All day busy with Mr. Allan, about the building and the premises. He will have it ready by October, for the school, which is the usual time of commencing the session.

Tuesday, May 18.—All ready to go forward to the Seminoles, but no word of my horse. Mr. Reid left us early for Spencer. We had been nearly two weeks together, which was better than either of us had expected. At 11 A. M., the Indian returned with my horse, but it was then too late to make the first stage of the journey.

Wednesday, May 19.—All ready to set out, but at day-light a heavy rain commenced, which continued most of the day. This raised the streams so much that the journey was impracticable. It rained also on the 20th, but not heavily.

Friday, May 21.—Although the sky was overcast, being anxious to be on my way, concluded to set out. Mr. Allan went with me, intending to return when he saw me across the Canadian branch of the Arkansas, 35 miles distant. We left at 7½ A. M., the horses in fine spirits, and the ride over the prairies for some hours was delightful. At 10 A. M., we reached the Boggy river, but the stream was so deep and rapid, and the banks on both sides so steep, it was impossible to cross, even by swimming the horses. We then concluded to ride some distance up the river, in hopes of getting a better fording. But the river was so crooked that when we were four or five miles up, it was a great distance from the prairie on which we rode. It was now 11 A. M., and a heavy thunder-gust, with rain and wind came upon us. We had just time to put on our Indian blankets, when the rain fell in torrents. I never saw till now such large drops of rain, and so close together. As we rode on we came to a large branch of the Boggy, which took our horses to the belly. We had some misgivings about being able to re-cross this stream, in case we had to return, but hoping soon to reach the main river, we went on. We found, as we advanced, that we had got but the wing of the storm. The little streams were full of water, and every path in the prairie overflowed. The ground was so wet, the horses sunk often to the pastern joint. The Indians whose cabins we passed could not speak English, so we could not learn how far we were from the river. At noon we came to a small stream, not more than twenty feet wide, but so full of water, and so rapid, we could not cross over it. We then turned back, and after letting our horses graze for half an hour, we pressed on homewards, as fast as the wet ground, and our now tired horses would permit. Before we reached the first branch, we came to the cabin of Mr. Wilson, a friendly Indian, known to Mr. Allan, and who spoke English. He told us he had just come up from the branch, that we could not cross it, for it was full from bank to bank. He would go with us however, and he thought, by going round, we could cross it where it forked into three branches. He led us a wide and weary circuit; stayed with us till we crossed two of the forks, and then pointed out the course that would bring us to a path, adding—you cannot lose the road. We did lose it, however, or rather we never found it, and we soon came to the bottom land of the third fork, where we were entangled with grape-vines, green briars, and sharp spines of the Red River burdock. We made various attempts to cross, but in every instance found the water so deep the horses would have to swim. Another gust was coming up, and cross we must, or remain in that wet and gloomy bottom all night. Mr. Allan's horse being larger than mine, got over partly by walking and partly by swimming. He carried my saddle-bags, which being well made were but slightly wet. My horse, however, had to swim for it, which he did nobly. We crossed in safety, but were wet nearly to the middle, and our boots were full of water. Making out of the bottom to the prairie, and having each a pocket compass, we pursued a course that Mr. Allan knew would strike a path that would lead us home. We had still eight or nine miles to go, and it was now near 4 P. M. We had to cross a high hill, so steep in the descent that we had to walk down. At the foot, Mr. Allan picked up a singular petrifaction, and I was putting it in his saddle-bags, which were on my horse, when I found them half full of water. In one end, Mrs. Allan, with considerate forethought, had placed a little bag of ground coffee, and a paper of sugar. The sugar was all melted, and so much of the coffee that it was about the right strength. Though in no laughing humour, the idea of carrying the saddle-bags half full of liquid coffee, five times sweetened, was so ludicrous that we laughed heartily. After a cold and weary ride we reached the mission at 7 P. M. They were all glad to see us back, as they had seen the storm passing in the north. A change of clothes, a cup of tea, and a cheerful fire, made us feel at home.

The day's ride, however, was a hard one, both for man and horse. We were eleven hours on the saddle, exclusive of the half hour we let our horses graze. We must have travelled above forty miles, and the deep roads, the frequent crossings of deep and unbridged streams, made it fully equal to sixty miles. But we were truly thankful that the providence of God watched over us. Had we not met with Wilson, we must have remained in the forks of the Boggy all night, with no shelter but two wet blankets, and our common clothes. Nothing remains but for me to stand still till these waters subside. I cannot return even, for the waters on that road are up also. In the meantime, were it not for the delay, the home with these dear friends is a very pleasant one.

To-day we passed a settlement of six or eight families of Cherokees, forming something like a village. There might be others in the vicinity which we did not see. They appeared to be living in comfort, their cabins well built, and clean and neat in the inside. The women were better dressed than is usual for residents on these remote farms. One of them knew Mr. Allan, as she had been at the mission. Her cabin was well furnished, and she was herself neatly though plainly dressed. She could not speak English, but she appeared to understand what was said. In one of the cabins was a man busily engaged playing on the violin. So absorbed was he with his music, that we could not get him to come to the door, or even to give us more than one look, when we first called to him. A number of healthy active children were playing about the premises.

Saturday, May 22.—Sore enough this morning, and no wonder, for Mr. Allan complains of being sore all over. It rained heavily in the night, and every time I awoke, I thought of the forks of the Boggy, where, but for the providence of God, we would have been passing the night.

May 23 to 25.—Had an attack of fever which gave way to medicine. The waters so much fallen, made arrangements to try the road again to-morrow.

Wednesday, May 26.—Rained very hard all night. Wapanucka creek is over all its banks. The streams are now higher than ever. No way of getting either back or forward. Feel sometimes almost discouraged. No chance of getting twelve miles either way, till the waters fall.

Monday, May 31.—Set out again for the Seminole mission, with Mr. Allan and an Indian guide. We reached the Boggy at a point higher up than in the former trial. The river was not deep here, and we thought this could not be the much dreaded stream, till we looked up and saw the high-water mark on the trees some twenty feet above our heads. At sundown we reached the Canadian, forty-four miles from Wapanucka. Our horses suffered much from the prairie fly. My horse being an iron grey, suffered the most, as that is one of their favourite colours. From 9 A. M. till 4 P. M. he was kept in a constant fever of excitement.

The prairie fly is a beautiful insect; it is about half an inch long, and three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness. Its colour is bright green, and the wings are two-thirds the length of the body. It strikes its victim with the directness of an arrow, and instantly inflicts a deep wound, from which the blood will ooze out in drops, even after the fly is removed. Had I been two weeks later in the season I could have travelled only at night, as thousands upon thousands of them were seen on the weeds and grass in the prairies, not fully fledged.

We lodged at the cabin of a Shawnee Indian with a large family of children. We found on inquiring that there were forty families of Shawnees settled together. Our host could speak pretty good English and was willing to talk. His knowledge of God and divine things was very obscure. When asked if his neighbours would attend to hear preaching and prayer, if a missionary came to them, he did not seem to know what the question meant. Would the parents send their children to school? He could not say, it had never been spoken of. Would they be afraid if a white teacher came to them? No, they were not afraid of white men, why should they? How many children were there belonging to the forty families? He did not know; some had four, some six, some eight or ten; some were young men and women, some little children.

He treated us very kindly; he has been here ten years, and has a large improvement, many horses, and cattle, and even goats. His cabins, however, were so small that he made our beds out of doors, with buffalo skins and Indian blankets. But the mosquitoes were so numerous that I slept none the whole night.

1. Little need be added to show the vital importance of the measures here proposed, for the benefit of the Chickasaw people. But unless the qualified men and women can be obtained, these Institutions cannot be commenced. A deep responsibility rests upon our brethren in the ministry in regard to this matter. With their assistance the proper agents can be obtained, and no time is to be lost, for some of them are wanted now, and all will soon be needed on their field of labour.

2. It is cause of encouragement that the whole time of one faithful missionary is given to the preaching of the Gospel among this people. Another is greatly needed in the same kind of itinerant labours. Besides the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, there are the forty families of the Shawnees, who have never heard of salvation. Who will go to preach unto them the unsearchable riches of Christ.

3. The blessings of a strong mission among the Chickasaws will not be confined to them, but will in due time extend beyond their limits, and reach the tribes to the south, and far to the west. God in his providence has given this people the means of improvement, and the disposition to use them, by inviting to their assistance those who are abundantly able to instruct them. These Institutions, accompanied by the preaching of the Gospel, with the blessing of God, will be the means of raising up an educated and sanctified native agency, far beyond their own wants. From this advanced position, the missionaries sent out can be supplied with every facility for further advances, and accompanied by the native brethren, will in time be able, step by step, to reach the Camanches of Texas, the Pueblas, Apaches and Navagoes of New Mexico, the ancient Cibolos, and even the poor root-diggers of Utah. It was the constant and untiring effort of the Apostle to the Gentiles, to preach the Gospel in the regions beyond. This was the rule of his life, so far as he was enlarged and sustained by the churches. So it ought to be with the ministers and the churches now.

Seminole Mission.

June 1.—Early on Tuesday we crossed the Canadian without difficulty, though the water came above the skirts of the saddle. From bank to bank the river here is half a mile wide, and about half that distance was now covered with water. Here Mr. Allan and the Indian guide returned, and I pursued my way alone, at first through the wide forests which adjoin the river, and afterwards through prairies, interspersed with woodland. I could get no guide however, and soon lost my way among the numerous Indian paths. I had not been able to ascertain whether the Seminole mission was to the north-west or the north-east of the point where I crossed the river. The account I had received of the distance also varied from fourteen to twenty-four miles. After wandering among the paths for more than two hours, I struck a wagon road, and at a venture took the west end. This soon brought me to an Indian settlement, but they could not speak English. When I asked the road to Edwards' store, they always pointed to the road leading to the west. After travelling sixteen miles, I met an intelligent Shawnee Indian who could speak English. He informed me that I was on the California road, going in the wrong direction. I then found I had to go back over these long and weary miles. The heat of the sun was most oppressive, and the flies kept my poor horse in a ferment in every prairie. At sundown I reached Edwards' store, faint and wearied, for I had eaten nothing all day. I had travelled forty-eight miles; and was distant but ten miles from where I had parted with Mr. Allan; yet I felt truly thankful that, in the providence of God, I had met this friendly Indian. Without his direction, I must have gone further out of the way, and have been obliged to lodge in the prairie, without food or company.

Wednesday, June 2.—I reached the Seminole mission at Oak Ridge, at 9 A. M. It is less than fifty miles from Wapanucka, but by the circuit we made to cross the Boggy river, and by losing my way, I had travelled more than one hundred miles.

I found the mission family well, but very uneasy on account of my long delay. After speaking to all the scholars, I spent the rest of the day in viewing the premises and in conferring with the missionaries. The site of Oak Ridge is well chosen for health, and the wood-land and prairies, for miles around, are rich and productive. The buildings, owing to the difficulty in getting boards, are not yet finished, and in their present state subject the families to much inconvenience. When finished, they will accomodate thirty scholars. At present, the school contains sixteen Seminoles, supported by the mission, and four Creeks, supported by their parents.

Mr. Lilley has the care of the school. Three of the scholars are too young for a boarding-school, but being orphans, could not well be refused. The other youth and children are accordingly promising. I examined the different classes, and their progress in learning showed that Mr. Lilley had bestowed much care upon them. When out of school, both boys and girls engage cheerfully in their appropriate employments. Though few in number, with the blessing of God, they will be prepared to do much to elevate this poor and dispirited people.

Mr. John D. Bemo has the care and direction of the out-of-doors work, and of the boys, when out of school. He sustains his Christian character, and is happy and contented in his present position. He has some mechanical skill, which is of service to the boys. He is very kind to the scholars, and while they treat him with great respect, they are much attached to him.

There is but little difference between the Seminole and Creek languages. Living as these two tribes do, on the same territory, they must at some time become one people. The Seminoles are much scattered, and show as yet but little disposition to attend on religious services; though a few living near, attend the public worship on the Sabbath. The boarding-school appears to be the best agency at first, to bring the blessings of the gospel and civilization to them, and if it were enlarged to thirty Seminole children, it would in due time be to them a rich and precious blessing.

I was so pressed for time, I could stay but little more than one day at the Seminole mission, and on Thursday at 11 A. M., I set out for Tallahassee. Gilbert Combs, one of the largest boys of the school, went with me, to act as interpreter, in case of need. The road lay principally through prairies, and until 4 P. M., the flies stung my horse almost to phrensy. Then two very heavy gusts, or rather torrents of rain, the second succeeding the first at a short interval, with strong wind, and tremendous thunder and blinding lightning, came down upon us in the prairie. It continued to rain all the evening, and every little rivulet was soon running so full of water we could hardly cross it. Till 9 P. M., we had come to no human habitation, and then we came to a creek so deep and rapid we could not cross. Our condition was now most unpleasant, as it was still raining. The evening was dark, although the moon had been up for half an hour. After such heavy rains, it was impossible for us to kindle a fire, destitute, as we were of an axe, to procure dry wood. Just then we discovered an Indian cabin. A single Indian was in bed, and he permitted us to stay all night. He too had got wet, and as a kind Providence ordered it for us, he had left a good fire burning. This was what we most needed, for all my clothes were wet, and those in my saddle-bags were wet also. Mrs. Lilley had kindly furnished us with ground coffee, and plenty of other provisions. For the first time, I tried my hand at making coffee, and being wet, and cold, we found it excellent. After drying my clothes for some time, I lay down on the floor and slept soundly. I felt truly thankful that the Lord had provided for us this humble shelter.

Friday, June 4.—The morning was clear and lovely, the sun came out in all its brightness, and the air was cool and refreshing. We found that the rain of yesterday had quieted our beautiful but tormenting enemies, the flies, and we made good progress on our way. At noon we crossed the north fork of the Arkansas river. The fording is uneven and rocky, and the water deep and rapid, but we crossed in safety. Near sun-set we were stopped by Elk creek, which was full from bank to bank. We lodged in an Indian cabin, clean and neat, owned by an Indian woman, who gave us a good supper and breakfast. In the morning her son took us to a fording higher up, where we crossed without swimming the horses. For ten miles, till we reached the wide forest of the Arkansas river, our winged adversaries marked our poor horses with many stains of blood.

Creek Mission.

At noon on Saturday, June 5, we reached Tallahassee, being one hundred miles in two days. We were most cordially welcomed by all the missionaries. They too had become quite anxious about me, having heard nothing of me since leaving Fort Smith, on the 29th of April. If I had not reached them that day, they would have sent on Monday, to inquire after me.

The boarding-school at Tallahassee contains forty boys and forty girls. I examined it on different days, during my stay. The children appear remarkably well. While in school, they are as attentive to their books, as quiet, orderly, and obedient, as any scholars need be. Mr. and Mrs. Robertson, and Miss Eddy, have the charge of the school, and the scholars are highly favoured with having such competent, experienced, and efficient teachers. Miss Stedham also is employed as assistant native teacher. Both scholars and teachers are looking forward with confidence to the July examination. From a thorough examination, they have nothing to fear.

Miss Thompson has the general care of household matters, assisted by Mrs. Reid. When out of school the girls come under their care, and I have never seen two ladies better qualified for such an important trust. The boys when out of school, are under the care of Mr. Junkin. Much of Mr. Robertson's time also is given to them out of school, and as he has considerable skill in working in wood, his example and instructions in this, as well as in matters of more importance, are of much benefit to them.

The connection of Dr. Junkin with the mission was terminated by mutual consent. His purpose is to reside a mile or more from the mission, and give himself wholly to his profession. In case of sickness, the mission will have his services. He has, in a good degree, secured the confidence of this people, and all his influence among them will tend to promote their best interests.

I spent the Sabbath at Tallahassee. Mr. Loughridge had an appointment to preach at a place ten miles distant, from which he returned at 3 P. M. In the morning the scholars met in the Sabbath-school, which presented much the appearance of a Sabbath-school in one of our churches at home. At 11 A. M. Mr. Loomis preached by an interpreter; a few of the neighbours, principally members of the church, were present. In the afternoon, I made an address to the scholars, which was translated by the interpreter, that all might understand it. After this I made an address to the mission families, at some length, in relation to the missionary work, its trials, and its certain and glorious results. These exercises were accompanied by singing and prayer, in English and Muskogee.

June 8.—On Tuesday at 4 A. M., Mr. Loughridge, Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, and myself, set out for Kowetah, fifteen miles distant. By starting so early, we stole a march on the prairie flies. I stayed but one day at this station, which gave me barely time to examine the school and the premises, and arrange some prospective matters with the brethren.

Mr. and Mrs. Ramsey had left Kowetah for home, a few days before my arrival, on account of the failure of Mrs. Ramsey's health. Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, who had arrived a week before me, will now take their place. Miss Workman, who is an experienced teacher, and greatly loved and respected by the scholars, has the charge of the school, and Miss Green the care of the girls out of school. They are greatly attached to Miss Green also, and she has spared no pains in their improvement. Miss Green will leave at the end of the present session to join the female seminary among the Chickasaws. After Mrs. Ramsey was laid aside by sickness, Miss Bowen had the general care of household matters, for which, and also for teaching, she is well qualified. They will now have the efficient assistance of Mrs. Loomis, whose experience in the direction of the female boarding-school at Ningpo, will render her counsel and direction of much service to the mission. Out of school, the boys at present are under the care of Mr. Templeton. The school contains forty scholars; they are about the same ages, and are pursuing nearly the same course of studies, as at Tallahassee. I examined the different classes, and made to them a short address. These youth and children are exceedingly promising. Their religious instruction is constantly and prominently attended to. The mission church is made up chiefly of those who have been, or now are scholars of the school, and with the continued blessing of God on the labours of these his servants, this branch of the mission, if continued as at present, will be of lasting benefit to this people.

When Mr. Loomis' health will permit, he will conduct the services in the mission church on the Sabbath, thus leaving Mr. Templeton to preach on the Sabbath at different places, where preaching is greatly needed. The evening was spent with these beloved missionaries, till a late hour, in religious conversation in reference to the missionary work.

June 9.—At 8 A. M. I bade farewell to these kind friends, and with Mr. Loughridge returned to Tallahassee. For three hours, the flies, in increasing numbers, tormented our horses, and wearied ourselves. I spent the day in the school, and with Mr. Loughridge, examining the premises and all the details of existing arrangements. It is not necessary to speak of his devotion to the best interests of this people, or of his untiring efforts to do them good. He still possesses their confidence, and richly has he merited it at their hands.

Promising and encouraging as are these Muskogee schools and infant churches, they are not without opposition from some of the Creeks themselves, and some of the white men residing in the nation. The question whether day-schools or boarding-schools are best, has been a good deal agitated. Day-schools, it is contended are less expensive than boarding-schools. The chiefs, to some extent, have yielded to this impression, and a few days before my arrival, they decided to withdraw the annual allowance of $2000 for the support of the boarding-school at Kowetah, and apply it to the support of four day-schools, which have been for some time in operation. One of these day-schools is said to be doing well, but the other three are reported to have but an average of twelve or fourteen scholars, showing that they are nearly as expensive as boarding-schools, which it is admitted are far more efficient. The difficulty with day-schools, among the Creeks at present is, that the parents will do nothing to induce their children to attend. At both Tallahassee and Kowetah, are more than twenty children within convenient reach of each place. They have been invited to attend as day-scholars, free of charge; but although a considerable number attended at first, they gradually fell off, till now three, and two, and sometimes but one, attends. The boarding-schools will, in time, correct this evil, by showing the parents the value of education; but at present, and until the parents will induce their children to attend, the day-schools, supported at $500 each per annum, are far from being encouraging.

The Muskogee chiefs are not prepared to promote education with the liberality that the Cherokees, Choctaws and Cherokees, promote it—yet they desire their people to be educated. In withdrawing the allowance from Kowetah, I think it not unlikely they counted a good deal on the Board sustaining the school without expense to them.

June 10.—On Thursday at 10 A. M. I parted with the last company of our missionary friends, after we had committed each other to the protecting care and mercy of our heavenly Father. In every instance these partings have been sad and painful to us all. They ought to remind us that this is not our rest, and that we are but strangers and pilgrims here. Mr. Loughridge accompanied me to Fort Gibson, nine miles distant. On the way, we called on General Mackintosh, B. Marshall, Esq., and Mr. Lewis, three of the chiefs whom I met when here five years ago. I said nothing to them about their withdrawing the allowance from Kowetah. Their present agent has strongly encouraged them to make trial of day-schools, and we can have no objections to their making the experiment. When the trial is made, they will be better able to judge between them and boarding-schools. They received me cordially, and expressed themselves glad to see me.

At Fort Gibson I parted with Mr. Loughridge, and turned my face homewards. The land journey by wagon and on horseback was above six hundred miles. Much of it was of the severest kind, not unaccompanied with perils and dangers. But a kind Providence watched over me, and through it all my health improved. The Arkansas river was very low. We lay one burning day and half the night, on a sand bar. I stayed a day in Cincinnati making purchases for the different missions, and, by the blessing of God, reached home on the 26th of June, and found my family and friends all well.

MISCELLANEOUS.

GOOD EFFECTS OF THE BIBLE IN INDIA.

The last Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society contains much evidence of the good effected by the word of God in heathen lands:

The Rev. W. B. Addis, of Coimbatoor, writes:—"The heathen of all classes read our Scriptures, and have, in several instances, solicited a supply of gospels for the use of the scholars in their own schools, and thus in a measure assimilating them to those of this mission.

"Mohammedans have continued to receive our Scriptures, and instances have been known of their comparing them with their Koran—a circumstance which a few years ago would have been thought little, if anything, short of blasphemy among them; but which now excites little or no opposition.

"The Romanists, although strictly prohibited from receiving our books by their spiritual guides, nevertheless secretly obtain them and read them. About two months ago, several members of that community applied to us for portions of Scripture, in order to settle disputes between themselves and their priests upon some particular points. They came many miles for the purpose, and were supplied with the portions they required. They distinctly stated that great numbers of their communion were not satisfied with the mere word of their teachers, but brought the doctrines, &c., to the touch-stone of the volume of inspiration."

"A request was lately made to the Committee at Bombay for a supply of Bibles to be distributed among the ladies in the seraglio of some of the Ameers of Scinde; who, having heard much of Christianity, had expressed a wish to read our sacred books, that they might ascertain whether what they had been told was really to be found in them. In whatever way the Scriptures are spread, good must result. They are the incorruptible word, and it cannot return void. There has been an attempt here to establish a system of native colporteurs, in some way resembling that which the Society employs with such effect in different parts of Europe; but as yet, I am sorry to say, without success. Still there is a movement in the native mind. Our missionary efforts, with the auxiliaries afforded by our Bible and Tract Societies, have made an inroad upon the vast superstructure of Hinduism; and even its votaries no longer regard it as an impregnable fortress. Many of the natives, in papers published among themselves, and in their own language, have from time to time put forth proposals for a thorough reformation of Hinduism, and a return to what they fondly deem principles of truth. While utterly repudiating Christianity as a system of religion, they are yet not unwilling to adopt many principles which could have no other origin. We know where this will lead, and we thank God and take courage."

The Rev. E. Porter, of Cuddapah, South India, writes under date of January 30th, 1850:—"I have much pleasure in informing you that a Tamil sepoy of the 13th regiment, at this station, has been led, by a careful study of the Scriptures in his own tongue, to renounce the errors of Romanism, and connect himself with the Protestant Church. He appears, so far as I can judge, sincere in his profession, and expresses great joy in having found out the true way of pardon and peace to his soul."

USES OF BOOKS.

An ever-teeming press is with untiring energy pouring forth its volumes of all sizes, and in numbers almost defying calculation. Not only in the Old World but in the New are the types in ceaseless motion, to keep pace with the eager competition of authors. Did all the issues of the press bear the stamp of goodness, and were the busy and fertile minds of authors intent only on the moral and intellectual culture of the world, it would be well. This unfortunately is not the fact. Amidst the sound and useful currency, much base coin may be detected. All authors are not philanthropists. Some of them are enemies to their kind, occupied in diffusing a subtle and fatal poison; others are mercenaries, anxious merely to pervert a good instrumentality to purposes of gain; and others still are incompetent to instruct, and employ their small powers to divert their readers from a better appropriation of their time. While, under the blessing of divine Providence, the press is a powerful agency to scatter among the multitude a wealth more enduring than gold, and to improve and elevate the human family, Satan has perverted it to the basest purposes, to shake the faith of men in the holiest truths, and to corrupt their hearts and lives. The stream that might carry only the waters of life to the habitations of men, he insidiously poisons, that whosoever drinks thereof may die. Men need then to be warned to discriminate in their choice of books. No one can read all that is published, and no one should. Bad books are always safest when neglected. There is danger in even glancing at their pages. Even to a casual reader they may convey some pernicious thought which it may be in vain to attempt to forget, or some foul image which no subsequent effort can efface from the memory. Not only positively bad books should be rejected, but those of doubtful character. Under this last class may be ranged a large proportion of what has been denominated the lighter literature, which, besides its uselessness in conveying valuable information, diverts the mind from a better application of its powers, and both enervates the mind and perverts its moral sensibilities. No man in his senses insists upon tasting every thing by way of experiment, to gratify his appetite, nor should any man admit into his mind everything which others may have thought, and put into print. The mind may be as certainly and fatally poisoned as the stomach; and in the one case the antidotes are not as certain in their effects as in the other. He will be a better informed and a happier man who will limit his reading to choice books of well-established character. There is no deficiency of such books, the production of the best constituted minds and the most benevolent hearts. The object of the reader should be improvement. He may safely acquaint himself with those who can contribute to the stores of his secular knowledge, while he should give due prominence to that which is religious. Secular knowledge can only prove available for the present brief life, while that which is religious will not only prove valuable in assisting him to shape the course of his life, but in preparing him for its close, and the endless state of existence which lies beyond. Good books may be presumed to embody the best thoughts of the best men; the results of their carefully considered experience; their most judicious and benevolent counsels. These are certainly worthy of our attention; things above price offered to us gratuitously; gems presented to us which we may make our own. A good thought, a sage reflection, a timely counsel, should be much more prized than gold that perishes; and when it is recollected that we may daily refer to such books, each replete with wisdom and rich in instruction, we are in infinitely better circumstances than if we were surrounded by the gold mines of California. A taste to appreciate a solid and instructive religious book is not a natural, but an acquired one, and it is worthy of being cultivated. The more such reading is indulged, the stronger will be our desire for it, and the less we will relish the jejune and trashy productions of the day. We can with sincerity give the advice to all—Read daily, and read the most useful and instructive books within your reach.

THE LAST HOURS OF A GREAT STATESMAN.

The Rev. Mr. Butler, in his funeral sermon for Henry Clay, among other interesting facts, indicative of the state of his mind during the last days of his life, says:—"He grew in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Among the books that he read most were 'Jay's Morning and Evening Exercises,' 'The Life of Dr. Chalmers,' and 'The Christian Philosopher triumphant in Death.' His hope continued to the end, though true and real, to be tremulous with humility rather than rapturous with assurance. When he felt most the weariness of his protracted sufferings, it sufficed to suggest to him, that his heavenly Father doubtless knew that after a life so long stirring and tempted, such a discipline of chastening and suffering was needful to make him meet for the inheritance of the saints, and at once the words of meek and patient acquiescence escaped his lips. Exhausted nature at length gave way."

"The Christian Philosopher triumphing over Death" is one of the most popular and valuable publications of the Board of Publication.

THE SECRET OF TRUE HAPPINESS

TO BE OBTAINED FOR TEN SOUS.

AN AUTHENTIC FRAGMENT OF AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

* * * "From my childhood, one idea seemed to possess me—that I would endeavour to obtain, by some means or other, perfect happiness. How this was to be accomplished I could not yet determine; but it was the subject ever uppermost in my thoughts. Not far off from my father's house lived a chemist and druggist, a man of simple and engaging manners, and possessed of a remarkably happy temperament. He was very fond of children, and used to take a great deal of notice of me. I saw him so constantly cheerful, and so happy in his outward life, that by degrees, with a sort of childish reasoning, I connected the idea of happiness with chemistry, and I came to the conclusion that it was only necessary to become a chemist to be a happy man. So much did this idea possess me, that I gave my father no rest till he sent me as an apprentice on trial to my friend the chemist. I soon, however, found out my mistake. I discovered that mixing jalap, rhubarb, &c., and the other hard and dirty work of a druggist's apprentice, did not confer the anticipated happiness I was in search of; and I was heartily glad when the expiration of my time of trial released me from this vocation.

"My next experience in the search after happiness was in the law. My father had a friend in this profession, and he happened to be a very cheerful and apparently very happy man. I then concluded that every one connected with the law must possess peace and happiness of mind. I resolved to become a lawyer, and took my seat at the desk of my father's friend. Ah! I soon found out the fallacy of this last association of ideas. Law, with all its dry detail and hard work, conferred anything but happiness. However, I continued my allotted time in the attorney's office, and eventually commenced the practice of the law upon my own account. But I seemed still as far off from happiness as ever. I cannot say that I was positively unhappy, for the faithful discharge of duties, however irksome, is generally attended at least with some satisfaction.

"Well, in the progress of time, I met a charming young lady, with a sweet face and a sweet temper. I married her, and now, at last I fancied I had realized the object of my search; and truly, so far as the happiness of this world is concerned, I believe I did possess it. For the society of a kind and affectionate wife is one of the purest sources of earthly happiness, which the goodness of our Almighty Father has conferred upon man. But withal there seemed a something wanting, a craving void in my heart that was yet unfilled. I was not truly happy, and yet I knew not why. One day I was taking a solitary and meditative walk in the neighbourhood of our town, when I happened to encounter a man trudging along the road with a heavy pack at his back. He was singing with a pleasant voice, what I recognized as a hymn. A calm and pleasant expression dwelt on his countenance, and I thought to myself, 'Well, if ever I saw a happy man, there goes one.' I accosted him and said, 'My friend, you seem to enjoy a pleasant frame of mind under the load you are carrying. May I ask you, are you a happy man?' 'Why sir,' replied he, 'thanks be to God, I am.' 'Can you tell,' said I, 'your secret? I would give much to know it.' 'Gladly, sir, but I can sell it to you for ten sous.' Directly pulling out a half franc, I joyfully placed it in his hand, and anxiously waited while he removed his pack, unstrapped it, and from a pile of books put into my hands a small volume. I opened it, and looked at the title-page, and saw 'The Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.' 'I believe, sir,' said the Colporteur—for my friend with the pack was one of these useful men—'I believe, sir, if you read that little book with prayer to the Holy Spirit for his enlightening influence, you will soon possess that happiness you say you desire to find.' I did read it, and thanks be to God first, and next to the excellent Society that sent it forth—for it bore impressed on its binding the name of the 'British and Foreign Bible Society'—I did find what I had never dreamt of before—that happiness consists alone in knowing God and his revealed will applied to the heart, through the influence of the Holy Spirit, by Jesus Christ our blessed Lord and Redeemer."

INFLUENCE OF A TRACT.

We learn that a precious work of grace has been going on for some time, under the labours of American missionaries, among the ignorant and superstitious Armenians in Turkey. This work has reached the town of Marsovan, a secluded place surrounded by mountains, which had never enjoyed the labours of a missionary, but God had prepared the way by a simple instrumentality which many are too apt to despise. About seventeen or eighteen years ago, a native of Marsovan, buried in all the ignorance and superstition of his native church, set out on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, to see the great pretended miracle of the Holy Fire. Passing through Beirut, he was led by that gracious Divine Providence, which works in such mysterious ways, to the purchase of a few tracts, which he found exposed for sale, in the Armeno-Turkish language. He began to read them, for it was a new and curious thing to see a printed page of his native language. But the matter in them he found to be still newer and more wonderful than the form; they were pleasant and profitable to his heart. He perused them through all his homeward journey, and he afterwards continued to read them, and they became very precious to him, and he loved them much. The Spirit of God must have accompanied them, and made them a great means of saving grace; and thus the Lord, as it now appears, had mercy on this poor wandering sinner, causing the light of his eternal truth to shine within his soul. It was for this purpose that, in the midst of an otherwise most profitless and superstitious journey, God threw those tracts in his way, and sent him back with them to his native place, to carry the true light of the gospel to those in spiritual darkness.

He was entirely ignorant of the authors of those tracts, and remained so for years, until the word Protestant began to be sounded for alarm, and anathemas broke forth from the churches against the Protestants and their books. He still retains them in his possession, and when he showed them to the first missionary he has ever known, they were found to have been printed a great while ago, so that now they are quite out of print; but so far as could be known, they were published under supervision of the Rev. Mr. Goodell, more than twenty years ago in Malta. So long had the seed lain hid; so long had the bread-corn cast upon the waters remained without any known return. But God was still watching over it and blessing it. The writer of the tracts, the printer and the seller, have perhaps alike forgotten the work of their hands; but lo, it springs up before them, its influence at length is traced, and will, by the blessing of God, go on increasing, and be conspicuous through eternity.

Some ten years after this memorable journey of the pilgrim in search of the Holy Fire, when indeed he found it on the way, and carried it back, as the gift of God, in his heart, the evangelical priest Vertannes, journeying through Armenia, came to a monastery at Marsovan, where he was a guest for one night, and the pilgrim brother was present that evening. The two children of God understood each other; but at that period in the presence of the Vartabed, they dared not speak together openly. It was even with difficulty, and with much fear and trembling, that they found an opportunity of uniting together in prayer under the trees of the garden, but without reading, or otherwise even speaking together. The next morning the two separated, and that was the first evangelical prayer the pilgrim brother at Marsovan, whose heart the Lord had opened by the tracts, had ever in his life listened to, and from that time, some eight years more, he never saw a preacher nor a Christian brother till the spring of last year, when Mr. Powers made his first visit to Marsovan. From that visit the revival of God's work commenced in that town.

Such historical tissues of Divine Providence and grace are wonderfully instructive and encouraging. What a host of them will there be, what immortal volumes of them unrolled,

> When God makes up the blest account
> Of natives in his holy mount!

What may not God see fit to accomplish by the smallest instrumentalities we set in motion! The leaves of a single tract, floating, as it were on the wings of the wind, may light where they shall prove the regeneration of a nation.

BOOKS AT AN IRON FURNACE.

A colporteur in Georgia gives the following interesting account.

"At the furnace there are from fifty to one hundred hands supplied with the publications of the Board, besides twenty families that live round the furnace. The second time I visited it, I found some sitting at the furnace, reading the books that I had sold to them. After the word had been circulated that I was there, the hands came in and bought from sixteen to eighteen dollars' worth of books. The principal men of the furnace gave me all the encouragement that I could ask for. I am confident that they are sensible of the good that these books are doing, and will do, through the blessing of God."

DESIRABLE PREACHERS.

The same colporteur writes:

"I have been locating more than a thousand ministers, which I hope are doing good. One peculiar trait of character my ministers have, they never get tired nor discouraged."

GOOD COMPANY.

A colporteur writes thus in reference to the benefit derived by himself from the books he is engaged in circulating.

"I cannot express my gratitude to that kind Providence that has thrown me into such good company the year past. I have been in the company of the wisest, the best, the most holy, the most learned, the most talented, and of the deepest piety, patience, perseverance, humility, and self-denial, of all the men that have been on the stage for two or three centuries past, and is not this a great favour? I at this moment know more than I could have ever known, had it not been for their instructive society. I can say to them as Ruth did to Naomi, 'Entreat me not to leave thee, for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge, thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.' These are my feelings, and I know it is the feeling of others whom I have introduced to the same company."

EAGERNESS FOR GOOD BOOKS.

A colporteur in North Carolina gives the following instance of the eagerness with which our books are sought. Colporteurs are authorized to make donations of books in peculiar circumstances. All the tracts are given away.

"I will relate one instance, to show you how I am sometimes placed. While stopping at the hotel in N——— village, while I went over the place, I was visited late in the evening, at my room, by two poor young men or boys, who inquired if I was the man who was going round selling Christian books. I told them I was, and invited them to look at some of the books I had. They said they wished to buy, but were sorry they had no money to pay. I began to converse with them, and soon learned they were far from home at work, learning the carpenter trade. They were poor and without friends, yet they had a friend, even Christ, and it did my soul good to talk with them. As I saw their love for books, and their need, I could not but supply them at my own expense. Though in my present circumstances, I could hardly afford it; yet when I saw their joy and gratitude of heart, I was abundantly repaid. The next morning, one of them was so anxious to purchase two more books, that I heard he went to several men in the place to borrow some money. He finally succeeded in getting fifty-six cents. The price of the books was sixty-five. Of course I let him have them at fifty-six cents."

THREE NEW BOOKS.

1. Pictorial Scenes and Incidents, Illustrative of Christian Missions. 144 pp. sq. 16mo, with 13 beautiful wood engravings. Price, in different bindings 31, 40 and 50 cents.

This cannot fail to be a very attractive book to the young; while it is calculated to excite in them gratitude for their privileges, and sympathy for the deluded and depraved heathen.

2. The Eastern Traveller, or descriptions of places and customs mentioned in the Bible. By John Macgregor, M. A. 18mo, pp. 72, with several engravings. Price 16 and 22 cents.

We know no book of the size that contains so many passages of Scripture illustrated in a familiar manner by references to what travellers observe at the present day in the East.

3. The Well watered Plains, or instructive lessons from the History of Lot. By the Rev. H. N. Brinsmade, D.D. 18mo, pp. 94, with three beautiful engravings. Price 19 and 25 cents.

Here the striking incidents in the History of Lot are interwoven with judicious and forcible instructions, calculated to touch the heart, and mould the conduct both of young and old. Much taste is displayed in the numerous and appropriate poetical quotations interspersed through the book.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

A donation of Thirty Dollars at any one time constitutes the donor, or any person whom he may designate, an Honorary Member of the Board of Publication. Honorary Members receive an elegantly engraved certificate of membership, and are entitled to draw one dollar's worth of children's books or tracts annually, provided they are called for during the year in which they become due.

FORM OF BEQUESTS TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

To the Trustees of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, and to their successors and assigns, I give and bequeath the sum of ———, or I devise a certain messuage, and tract of land, &c., to be held by the said Trustees, and their successors for ever, to and for the uses, and under the direction of the said Board of Publication, according to the provisions of their charter.

The Rev. George W. Timlow, of the Episcopal diocese of New York, and late Rector of Calvary church, Williamsburgh, was received as a member of the Third Presbytery of New York, on the 19th ult.

The Rev. F. H. L. Laird, who was received into the Presbytery of Louisville at its last session, from the Episcopal Church, has received and accepted an invitation to become the stated supply of the Church in Corydon, Indiana.

COLLEGES, &C.

South Hanover College.—The Rev. William Hamilton, late pastor of the Fifth Church, Cincinnati, has been appointed Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in South Hanover College. The Rev. William Bishop, late of Illinois College, has been appointed Professor of the Greek Language and Literature in the same Institution. Both of the appointments have been accepted, and the Professors elect will enter upon their duties at the commencement of the next session.

Des Moines College.—The Rev. Francis B. Dinsmore, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, has been appointed to a Professorship in the Des Moines College, located at West Point, in the same State, which he has accepted, and will enter upon its duties forthwith.

Wisconsin University.—At a recent meeting of the Board of Regents of the University of Wisconsin, Mr. O. M. Conover was transferred from his former position to the Professorship of Ancient Languages and Literature, and of History, in that institution.

Columbia Theological Seminary, South Carolina.—The Southern Presbyterian says:—"Dr. McGill, professor-elect to the vacant chair of Ecclesiastical History and Polity, repaired to that place, and for some weeks conducted a class by his pleasing and instructive lectures, through the more important divisions of that department. Domestic affliction suddenly summoned him home. Since his return to Allegheny City, he has notified the Chairman of the Board of Directors of his acceptance of the appointment. Favoured with life and health, he will remove with his family to Columbia in October next, and enter permanently upon the duties to which he is appointed."

Varieties.

Calvin's Commentary.—The Commentaries of Calvin on the New Testament, in French, almost impossible to find now in France, are to be reprinted in Paris verbatim from the beautiful Badius's edition. A noble hearted friend of truth in America has done what was necessary to render possible that magnificent publication (4 great 8vo. volumes of 800 pages in two columns). Rev. M. Pilatte, who has been intrusted with the supervision of the work, is pushing it forward, and will get it through. It will be brought out under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Publication. Price to subscribers 25 francs.

French Protestant History.—A new literary society has been formed at Paris, entitled, "The Society of the History of French Protestantism;" the object being to collect and publish the documents, whether printed or manuscript, of the history of Protestantism in France from the sixteenth century. A bulletin will be issued of the society's transactions, with a recueil of papers and documents. Guizot is president; Coquerel, Monod, and other pastors are members.

Sunday in Brooklyn.—The ordinance directing the liquor stores to be closed in Brooklyn was carried out last Sunday, and the police arrested a number of persons who did not obey the law. The greatest excitement prevailed during the day and evening, and those who were opposed to the late enactment did all they could to discourage the police from executing the order. Twelve persons were arrested for selling liquor contrary to the new law, nine of whom were released on giving bail in the sum of $200. The city authorities deserve to be sustained in their attempt to enforce so wholesome a law as this. And we trust that they will also have courage and strength to put a stop to military funerals, fast driving, and similar annoyances with which that goodly city is afflicted on the Sabbath day.

Sunday in Milwaukie.—Some fifteen hundred citizens of Milwaukie have signed a letter to the Mayor, asking him to put a stop to the Sunday evening balls now regularly held at several halls in that city. Seventeen clergymen (nine of them Germans) are among the signers.

Renunciations of Popery.—Three persons lately converted from Popery, recently united with a Protestant church in Rochester, a father and two children, two of the same family having previously joined the same church. No less than thirty have renounced Popery, in that city.

Eleven converts from the Church of Rome renounced the errors of Popery on Tuesday, in the church of the Rev. Dr. Armstrong (St. Pauls, Bermondsey). They were for the most part intelligent working men, and one of them had been clerk to a priest.

Nine persons publicly renounced the errors of Popery on Sunday evening, the 20th ult., in the Church of St. James's, Latchford, near Warrington, and were received into communion with the Church of England, by Rev. James Wright.

Syria.—Rev. D. M. Wilson writes from Tripoli, Syria, June 2, to the Central Christian Herald.

Drs. Robinson and Smith traveled some forty-six days in company, exploring the land, studying its geography, its monumental remains, etc. They were allowed to go where they pleased in the land, and improved the opportunity. Dr. Robinson is now travelling with Mr. Thompson, and proposes travelling a few days with others of the missionaries. Those who have perused his work on Palestine will not doubt that he is improving his rare opportunity for collecting materials for a better edition of that work.

Prosperity of Liberia.—Commodore Lavallette, in a letter to the Philadelphia Inquirer, says: "I have visited Bassa Cove, and all other settlements of the emigrants on the coast of Liberia. I found them prosperous and happy; and, I believe, if it was generally known to the coloured population of the United States that Liberia offered to them a home possessing incalculable advantages, and the means of transporting them were provided, few of them would remain in our country.

Return of Missionaries—Mrs. Benjamin Schneider of the Armenian mission, with four of her children, and Rev. Dwight W. Marsh of the Assyrian mission, arrived in this city, Saturday, P. M., the 9th inst., in the bark Martha Clarke, seventy-six days from Smyrna. Mrs. Schneider has been in the field eighteen years. It is an interesting circumstance that the two mates of the Martha Clarke, and one of the sons of Mrs. Schneider were hopefully converted on the passage to this country. The friends of Rev. Mr. Marsh will sympathize deeply with him in the death of his father and brother, which took place recently in Michigan.

A Highland Sacramental Occasion.—What is called by the people "the long sacrament" has lately been celebrated at Bonar-bridge, in pastoral Sutherland. Large numbers here gathered to continuous services, lasting from Monday to Thursday. Preaching, prayer, and exhortation in the Gaelic were attended upon by thousands, many of whom attended "the tables."

The Late Sir Robert Peel.—A writer in a quarterly periodical mentions as a fact that had come to him, on high authority, "That for many of the latter years of his life, Sir Robert Peel was in the invariable habit, at whatever hour he returned from Downing-street, or the House of Commons, of reading for half an hour, in some serious or religious book before retiring to rest. It was only by this habit, he said, that he could keep his mind calm and clear after the distraction and irritation of the day."

The Maine Law.—The Portland Argus says, "There was not a single committal to the watch-house during the night of the Independence celebration—an event unheard of since we were a city, and long before!" A fact like this is worth a volume of assertions.
